

The Unstruck Bell

A Monk's Guide to the Still Point and the Open Hand

Brother Tarn, Keeper of the Unstruck Bell
Three-Temples Monastery, Year of the Falling Bridge

Preface

I was sixteen when I first struck a man. A tax collector from Kahfagia, fat with silver and arrogance. He never saw my palm close on his throat. I watched him crumple while his guards shouted at shadows. The Abbot made me scrub the courtyard stones for a month. Not because I had sinned, but because I had acted before I had thought.

They never caught me. Not because I was strong—I was not, not yet. Because I was still. A boy who learned that the greatest strength is not in the clenched fist but in the open hand. That is the first lesson of the monk: power is not in the strike. It is in the pause before the strike.

Twenty years later, I have broken twelve men with my bare hands and healed twice that many. The Abbot trusts me to teach the Way of the Open Palm. The Temple Council owes me three favours. And the Silkstrand thugs avoid the alley behind the Three-Temples Monastery because they know the sound of my sandals on wet stone.

I am Brother Tarn. They call me the Unstruck Bell because I have never taken a blow I did not choose.

This book is not for warriors. It is for those who understand that the world runs on breath, on balance, and on the careful stillness between action and consequence. I learned from the stone floors of the monastery. I learned from Grandmaster Ashara, who sleeps beneath the old oak, and from Sister Mira, who can stop a drawn sword with a single word. I learned that a breath can unmake a fortress, that a single finger can redirect a river, and that the strongest stance is the one that looks like rest.

You want to be a monk? Good. But first, forget everything you think you know about strength. The enemy is not the opponent. The enemy is the tension in your own shoulder.

The blow that never lands is the one you did not need to throw.

Brother Tarn

Three-Temples Monastery, Year of the Falling Bridge

The ink is lamp-black and my blood. The mirror is still.

Contents

I	The Philosophy of the Still Point	1
1	On Stillness	3
1.1	The Three Principles of the Unstruck Bell . . .	3
1.1.1	The Coin That Does Not Move	3
1.1.2	The Witness Who Breathes	4
1.1.3	The Debt That Is Never Incurred	4
2	On Breath	5
2.1	The Four Breaths	5
2.2	The Meditation Mini-Game	6
2.2.1	The Four Breaths of Meditation	6
2.2.2	Meditation Benefits	7
II	Monk Talents: The Unstruck Path	9
3	Foundations of the Still Point	11
3.1	2 XP Talents — Foundations	11
3.2	3-4 XP Talents — The Working Knife	12
3.3	5 XP Talents — Signature Moves	14
3.4	6 XP Talent — The Quiet Catastrophe	15

III	Monastic Traditions	17
4	The Ways of the Unstruck Path	19
4.1	Using Monastic Traditions	19
4.2	The Way of the Unstruck Bell (Ikasha — Shadow)	20
4.3	The Way of the Iron Vow (Mykkiel / Oath of Flame — Law)	23
4.4	The Way of the Endless Cup (Thrysos — Drunken Master)	26
4.5	Creating Your Own Tradition	28
IV	The Psionic Monk	31
5	The Silent Mind	33
5.1	Integrating Psionics and Monk Talents	33
5.2	Psionic Arts for Monks	34
5.3	Hybrid Build Examples	35
5.3.1	The Shadow Telepath (Way of Unstruck Bell + Telepathy)	35
5.3.2	The Iron Mind Shield (Way of Iron Vow + Mind Shield)	35
5.3.3	The Drunken Precog (Way of Endless Cup + Precognition)	36
5.4	The Silent Mind's Burden	37
V	The Three-Temples Monastery	39
6	The Court That Does Not Move	41
6.1	The Hierarchy of Breath	41
6.2	The Monastery's Assets (What the GM Can Offer)	42
7	Notable Monks of the Three-Temples	45

VI	Adventure Hooks and Rumours	47
8	Jobs from the Monastery (d12)	49
9	Rumours Heard in the Monastery Courtyard (d12)	53
10	The Debt of the Sleeping Master (Sample Adventure)	55
10.1	The Setup	55
10.2	The Threshold	56
10.3	The Dream Heist	56
10.3.1	Mechanics	56
10.4	Resolution	57
10.5	The Grey Wanderer's Note on the Adventure .	57
11	Last Words from Brother Tarn	59

CONTENTS

Part I

The Philosophy of the Still Point

Chapter 1

On Stillness

The first time you face a drawn blade, you will be afraid. Good. Fear keeps your breath short and your eyes wide. The moment you feel safe, you have already been struck.

A monk is not a soldier. We do not meet force with force. We redirect. Through a guard's reach, through a gap in the formation, through the space between the blow and its target. The world is full of openings—the fist that overextends, the breath that comes too fast, the weight that shifts one inch too far.

1.1 The Three Principles of the Unstruck Bell

1.1.1 The Coin That Does Not Move

Never resist what cannot be stopped. A blade from a trained swordsman? He will strike where he expects resistance. When he finds none, he will stumble. A shove from a larger foe? He expects you to brace. When you yield, his own force becomes his downfall.

Redirect what you cannot stop. There is no shame in moving with the storm.

1.1.2 The Witness Who Breathes

Every fight is witnessed. The trick is not to be invisible—it is to be unremarkable. A monk standing still in a courtyard. A beggar sleeping in a doorway. A servant carrying water. The guards see you. They simply do not register you as a threat.

Stillness is the greatest disguise.

1.1.3 The Debt That Is Never Incurred

When you do not strike, you create no debt. Not yours, not theirs. They owe you nothing but the breath they wasted trying to hit you. A true monk does not seek victory. Victory is a chain. The open hand offers nothing, and so nothing can be taken from it.

Chapter 2

On Breath

Before the fist comes the breath. Before the breath comes the stillness. A drowning man does not need a stronger kick; he needs to remember that the surface is only a few inches above his head.

2.1 The Four Breaths

The Entering Breath The inhale that takes in the world—its noise, its threat, its opportunity. Without this breath, you cannot see what is coming.

The Holding Breath The pause between. This is where decisions are made. A long holding breath is patience; a short one is a trap.

The Releasing Breath The exhale that becomes action. A punch is a breath released. A word is a breath released. A step is a breath released.

The Empty Breath The space after the exhale, before the next inhale. This is where monks live. The enemy expects you to inhale, to prepare, to telegraph. When you learn to act from the empty breath, you become invisible to their predictions.

2.2 The Meditation Mini-Game

To find the still point, you need three things:

1. Stillness — A quiet place where you will not be disturbed. (A crowded tavern can work, but the DV increases.)
2. Time — At least ten minutes of uninterrupted meditation.
3. Intent — A clear purpose for your meditation (healing, focus, clarity).

2.2.1 The Four Breaths of Meditation

Step 1: Settle the Body (Wits + Medicine, DV 2)

Find a comfortable position and release physical tension. On a hit, gain +1 die to the Meditation roll. On a miss, you are distracted by an ache or itch—start with -1 die.

Step 2: Settle the Breath (Spirit + Meditation skill, DV 3)

Count your breaths. Each exhalation is a number. When you reach ten, begin again. On a hit, you enter a light meditative state. On a partial, your mind wanders—you may continue but the GM gains 1 Story Beat.

Step 3: The Still Point (Spirit + Resolve, DV 4 for healing, DV 3 for clarity, DV 5 for transcendence)

Roll to reach the deepest state. On a hit, you achieve your intent. On a partial, you achieve it but emerge drained (mark 1 Fatigue). On a miss, you fall asleep or become lost in thought; the GM gains 2 Story Beats.

Step 4: Return (No roll, narrative)

You open your eyes. The world is the same. You are not.

2.2.2 Meditation Benefits

- Healing Meditation: Clear 1 Fatigue and, if you have a minor Condition (Fear, Shaken, Guilty), test Spirit+Resolve (DV 3) to remove it.
- Clarity Meditation: Gain +1 die to your next Wits-based roll.
- Transcendent Meditation: Once per session, reroll any single failed roll. The GM gains 1 Story Beat.

Part II

Monk Talents: The Unstruck Path

Chapter 3

Foundations of the Still Point

The following talents are suited for those who walk the edge of stillness and action. They are not for brawlers or berserkers. They are for the patient, the balanced, and the breathless.

3.1 2 XP Talents — Foundations

Talent	Effect
he Open Hand	Tags: Strike, BOD, Flow You have redirected a hundred blows without throwing one. Once per scene, when you attempt to parry, deflect, or disarm an opponent, treat your first Body or Melee roll as Position +1. The blow that never lands is the one you did not need to block.

Still Stance	Point	Tags: Move, SPT, Flow You understand the geometry of stillness. When you do not move during your turn, gain +1 die to your next defence roll. This benefit lasts until you move or take an aggressive action. The mountain does not chase the wind. The wind breaks against the mountain.
Monk's Breath		Tags: Heal, SPT, Restoration You have learned to control your breath and heart rate. Once per session, you may clear 1 Fatigue by meditating for one minute uninterrupted. This does not require a roll. The breath that is held is a weapon. The breath that is released is a shield.

3.2 3-4 XP Talents — The Working Knife

Talent	Effect
--------	--------

edirecting Cur- rent	Tags: Move, Flow, Gambit When an enemy misses you with a melee attack, you may immediately reposition them one range band (Close ↔ Near) in a direction of your choice. Describe how you use their momentum to guide them. Once per scene.
The Unar- moured Body	Tags: Armour, BOD, Flow You have trained your body to absorb and redirect force. When unarmoured, convert the first point of Harm you would take each scene to Fatigue instead. Your skin is your armour; your breath is your shield.
Pressure Point Strike	Tags: Strike, AGI, Gambit You know the map of the human body. When you make an unarmed attack, you may declare a Pressure Point Strike. On a hit, the target suffers -1 die on all physical actions until the end of their next turn. On a critical success, they lose their next minor action entirely.

3.3 5 XP Talents — Signature Moves

Talent		Effect
he Unstruck Bell		Tags: Defence, Flow, Overload You have never taken a blow you did not choose. Once per session, when you would be hit by an attack, you may declare that the attack misses you entirely. Describe how you were not there—a step back, a breath held, a shift of weight that no one saw coming. The GM gains 1 Story Beat as a cost (the universe notices your impossible stillness).
Master of the Open Palm		Tags: Strike, Combo, Restoration Your open hand can harm or heal. Once per session, you may convert a successful unarmed strike into a healing touch instead of dealing Harm. The target (ally or willing enemy) clears 1 Fatigue and, if they are suffering from a minor Condition (Fear, Shaken, Guilty), may roll Spirit+Resolve (DV 3) to remove it.

3.4 6 XP Talent — The Quiet Catastrophe

Talent	Effect
he Stillness That Moves	Tags: Move, Flow, Overload Once per arc, you may move through a space that should be impassable—a crowd that does not part, a wall of blades, a locked door—as if you were never there. You do not break, force, or open. You simply arrive on the other side. The GM cannot retroactively place obstacles in your path for that scene. Cost: You must accept a permanent Breath Scar; you can never again be surprised, but neither can you ever truly rest.

Part III

Monastic Traditions

Chapter 4

The Ways of the Unstruck Path

A monk is defined not only by talents but by the tradition they follow—the philosophical and martial lineage that shapes their understanding of stillness. Each tradition offers a set of techniques, a patron affinity, and a corruption-like path of deepening mastery.

4.1 Using Monastic Traditions

Each tradition is presented as a table of techniques, similar to the Patron's Gift and Signature Talent structures found elsewhere. A monk may learn techniques from their tradition by spending XP as follows:

- Basic Technique (4-6 XP): A foundational ability that defines the tradition's core approach.
- Advanced Technique (8-10 XP): A more powerful or versatile ability, often requiring a minimum Tier or attribute.

- Master Technique (12+ XP): A campaign-defining ability that represents the pinnacle of that tradition's path.

Unlike Patron obligations, tradition techniques do not generate Obligation or Corruption unless the tradition is tied to a specific Patron (as noted in the tradition's description). Instead, they cost Fatigue, Boons, or have narrative costs determined by the GM.

4.2 The Way of the Unstruck Bell (Ikasha — Shadow)

Patron Affinity: Ikasha, She Who Sleeps

The Unstruck Bell tradition teaches that the greatest defence is to not be where the strike lands. Followers of this path learn to read the gaps in perception, to become forgettable, and to move through shadows as if the shadows themselves had parted for them.

Basic Technique — Shadow Meld (6 XP)

Prerequisite: Stealth 2+

Once per session as an action, step into any shadow larger than yourself and emerge from another shadow within Near range. You cannot be targeted while moving between shadows. Mark 1 Fatigue after using this technique.

Advanced Technique — The Unobserved (8 XP)

Prerequisite: Tier II, Stealth 3+

When you are Hidden, social Story Beats cannot be used to frame you for a crime you did not commit (unless you act first). Additionally, witnesses suffer -2 dice to recall your face or describe you to authorities.

Master Technique — Threshold of Sleep (12 XP)

Prerequisite: Tier III, Spirit 3+

Once per session, walk through a locked door, a guarded threshold, or a magical ward as if it were mist. This does not work on barriers specifically enchanted against shadow-walking (GM discretion). Mark 2 Fatigue and gain +1 Obligation to Ikasha after using this technique.

Corruption of the Unstruck Bell

As the monk deepens their bond with Ikasha, the shadow leaves its mark.

Tier	Benefit	Cost / Quirk
------	---------	--------------

1	+1 die to Stealth in dim light or darkness.	Light Sensitivity: -1 die to Stealth in direct sunlight.
2	Once per scene, treat a failed Stealth roll as a success.	The Witness Debt: A raven appears to watch your next crime. If you fail that roll, the raven reports to a rival.
3	+2 dice to resist being tracked or identified.	Shadow Lag: Your shadow moves half a second behind you. Those who notice suffer -1 die to social rolls with you.
4	Once per session, become Hidden in plain sight (no roll required) in a crowd.	Hollow Attention: The Hollow begins to notice your erasures. GM gains 1 SB to spend on a pursuit complication.
5	Immune to mundane forms of surveillance (scrying, tracking dogs, witnesses).	Forgetful: You occasionally forget minor details of your own past. Mark 1 Fatigue when this happens.

6+	Once per session, become intangible to mundane harm for one scene.	Shadow's Mark +2 Obligation to Ikasha. Your reflection no longer appears in mirrors.
----	--	--

4.3 The Way of the Iron Vow (Mykkiel / Oath of Flame — Law)

Patron Affinity: Mykkiel, Arbiter of the Covenant, or the Oath of Flame & Light

The Iron Vow tradition teaches that the body is a temple and the fist is a gavel. Followers of this path swear binding oaths that grant power in exchange for restriction. They are monks who serve as justiciars, bodyguards, and arbiters—their word is law, and their law is enforced by their palms.

Basic Technique — Sworn Defender (6 XP)

Prerequisite: Body 3+

When you take the Defend action, you also grant an adjacent ally +1 Armour until your next turn. This stacks with other sources of Armour.

Advanced Technique — Unyielding Vow (8 XP)

Prerequisite: Tier II, Spirit 3+

Swear a vow before a witness (a specific action you will accomplish or a person you will protect). While actively working toward that vow, you ignore the first point of Fatigue each scene that would come from exhaustion, fear, or despair. Breaking the vow voluntarily causes you to mark 1 Harm (Stress) and lose access to this technique until you complete a suitable penance.

Master Technique — The Unbroken Covenant (12 XP)

Prerequisite: Tier III, Mykkiel or Oath of Flame patron

Once per session, declare a single oath you have sworn as inviolable. For the remainder of the session, you gain +2 dice to all rolls that directly advance that oath, and you ignore the first Harm 2 each scene that would prevent you from fulfilling it. When the oath is fulfilled (or becomes impossible to fulfil), you immediately mark +2 Obligation to your patron.

Corruption of the Iron Vow

The weight of law presses inward.

Tier	Benefit	Cost / Quirk
1	+1 die to Insight when detecting lies or broken promises.	Rigid Honour: Must uphold vows even when disadvantageous; -1 die to flexible actions.
2	Once per scene, treat a failed Resolve test as a success (you steel yourself).	Judge's Severity: Cannot easily overlook infractions; suffer 1 Fatigue if forced to.
3	+2 dice to Command when enforcing a sworn oath.	Suspicion: -1 die to social rolls with anyone you suspect of oathbreaking.

4	Once per session, force a target who just lied to you to test Resolve (DV 4) or be unable to speak for one exchange.	Compelled to Correct: Must point out falsehoods when noticed, regardless of tact.
5	Your sworn vows gain supernatural weight. Breaking them causes you Harm 2 (Stress), but you may ignore one external compulsion per scene that would force you to break an oath.	Monomania: When you swear a vow, you suffer -2 dice to all actions not directly related to fulfilling it until it is complete.
6+	Once per session, render absolute judgment on a target who has broken an oath in your presence. They suffer -2 dice to all actions until they atone.	Instrument of Wrath: Mark +2 Obligation. Your voice now tolls like a bell when you speak judgment; those who hear you cannot interrupt until your sentence is complete.

4.4 The Way of the Endless Cup (Thrysos — Drunken Master)

Patron Affinity: Thrysos, King of Revels

The Drunken Master tradition is perhaps the most misunderstood. Outsiders see a staggering fool; initiates see a fighter who has learned that predictability is death. By mimicking the unsteady gait of intoxication, the Drunken Master becomes impossible to anticipate. Every stumble is a feint, every spill a trip, every belch a battle cry.

Basic Technique — Stagger Step (4 XP)

Prerequisite: Body 3+

When an enemy misses you with a melee attack, you may immediately move one range band (Close ↔ Near) without provoking opportunity attacks. Mark 1 Fatigue to use this technique (once per round).

Advanced Technique — Drunken Fist (6 XP)

Prerequisite: Body 3+, Spirit 2+

Your unarmed strikes gain +1 die and ignore the first point of Armour when you are at Fatigue 2 or more (the wine guides you). This is a passive ability.

Master Technique — The Unbroken Bottle (12 XP)

Prerequisite: Tier III, Drunken Fist

Once per session, you may ignore all penalties from Fatigue for one scene. While this is active, each time you would be hit by a melee attack, you may instead stagger out of the way and force the attacker to hit another adjacent creature of your choice (narrate the stumble). After the scene ends, you collapse with Harm 2 (Exhaustion) and cannot use this talent again until you have rested for a full night.

Corruption of the Endless Cup

The revel claims its own.

Tier	Benefit	Cost / Quirk
1	+1 die to social rolls in feasts, taverns, or celebrations.	Compulsive Toast: Must drink when offered or mark 1 Fatigue.
2	Ignore the first 1 Fatigue each scene.	Restless Appetite: -1 die when abstaining from indulgence (food, drink, or touch).
3	Once per scene, treat a failed Acrobatics or Athletics roll as a success (you stumble into success).	Masquerade: Cannot act without a role or guise; -1 die to plain sincerity.
4	Once per session, frenzy grants +2 dice to melee for one exchange.	Ecstatic Blindness: -1 die to perception outside the revel; you may not notice threats that require sobriety.

5	Once per session, all allies within Near clear 1 Fatigue when you share a drink with them.	Hungering Host: You consume twice as much; denial causes Harm 1 (Stress).
6+	Once per session, become an avatar of revels; all allies gain +2 dice, enemies suffer -2 dice to resist your social actions.	Tyrant of Pleasure: Mark +3 Obligation; the revel grows monstrous, demanding a sacrifice (an oath, a relationship, or a life).

4.5 Creating Your Own Tradition

When designing a new monastic tradition, consider the following:

1. Choose a Core Philosophy. What does this tradition value? Stillness? Motion? Endurance? Deception?
2. Select a Patron Affinity (Optional). Is the tradition tied to a specific Patron, or is it a purely mortal discipline?
3. Design Three Techniques. Basic (4-6 XP), Advanced (8-10 XP), Master (12+ XP). Each should feel distinct and build on the tradition's core.
4. Craft a Corruption Table (If Patron-Tied). Six tiers of deepening benefits and costs. The costs should be thematic and roleplay-heavy.
5. Name It. The best tradition names suggest both a technique and a philosophy: "The Way of the Open Hand,"

"The Path of the Whispering Stone," "The School of the Falling Leaf."

Part IV

The Psionic Monk

Chapter 5

The Silent Mind

”The mind that moves the mountain first learns to be still. The thought that bends the spoon first learns to be empty.”

The monk and the psion share a secret: both have looked inward and found a door. The monk opens it with breath; the psion opens it with will. At the intersection of these paths lies the psionic monk—a practitioner who has learned to weaponise the silence between thoughts.

5.1 Integrating Psionics and Monk Talents

A psionic monk treats their Mental Strain (see the Psionics chapter of the Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire) as a secondary resource pool alongside Fatigue. The two are not interchangeable, but certain talents allow conversion:

- Ki as Mental Strain: A monk with the Psionics skill may spend 1 Mental Strain instead of 1 Fatigue to power any monk talent with the [Flow] tag.
- Mental Stillness: Once per scene, a psionic monk may reduce their Mental Strain by 1 by spending one minute in meditation (no roll required). This cannot be done in combat.

5.2 Psionic Arts for Monks

While any monk can learn psionic Arts, certain Arts complement monastic training particularly well:

Psionic Art	Monk Synergy
Telekinesis	The Unseen Hand replaces physical strikes at range. A monk can use Telekinesis to parry arrows, trip enemies, or deliver "pressure point strikes" from across the room.
Biofeedback	The Inward Physician is meditation made flesh. Monks who master Biofeedback can heal their own wounds, purge poison with a breath, and slow their heartbeat to appear dead.
Mind Shield	The Walled Garden is the ultimate expression of Still Point Stance. A monk with Mind Shield can no longer be surprised, read, or mentally compelled.
Precognition	Reading the Weather of the Skull allows a monk to act before the enemy acts—the ultimate expression of the empty breath.

Psychic Assault	The Breaking Thought is the closed fist of the mind. A monk who masters this Art can stun, confuse, or simply drop an enemy with a glare.
-----------------	---

5.3 Hybrid Build Examples

5.3.1 The Shadow Telepath (Way of Unstruck Bell + Telepathy)

Core Talents: Shadow Meld, The Unobserved, Telepathy (Surface Thoughts, Emotional State)

Playstyle: You are an infiltrator who doesn't need to pick locks or disable alarms. You read the guard's surface thoughts to learn the patrol route. You sense the captain's emotional state to know when he is distracted. When discovered, you step into a shadow and emerge behind them, delivering a Pressure Point Strike before they can raise the alarm.

Sample Progression:

- 2 XP: Monk's Breath
- 4 XP: Shadow Meld (Basic Technique)
- 6 XP: Telepathy (Art, Surface Thoughts only)
- 8 XP: Pressure Point Strike
- 10 XP: Emotional State (Telepathy upgrade)
- 12 XP: The Unobserved (Advanced Technique)

5.3.2 The Iron Mind Shield (Way of Iron Vow + Mind Shield)

Core Talents: Sworn Defender, Unyielding Vow, Mind Shield (Resist Intrusion, Shelter Allies)

Playstyle: You are the party's mental bastion. While the mages cast and the rogues sneak, you stand in the doorway and refuse to move. Enemies cannot read your allies' minds because you have erected a Walled Garden around them. When a psychic assault targets the group, you absorb the strain and convert it to Fuel for your Iron Vow.

Sample Progression:

- 2 XP: The Open Hand
- 4 XP: Sworn Defender (Basic Technique)
- 6 XP: Mind Shield (Art, Resist Intrusion)
- 8 XP: Unyielding Vow (Advanced Technique)
- 10 XP: Shelter Allies (Mind Shield upgrade)
- 12 XP: The Unbroken Covenant (Master Technique)

5.3.3 The Drunken Precog (Way of Endless Cup + Precognition)

Core Talents: Stagger Step, Drunken Fist, Precognition (Advantage on future rolls, Avoid named dangers)

Playstyle: You stagger not because you are drunk, but because you have already seen where the blade will fall. Your Precognition tells you that the enemy will swing high; you stumble low. It tells you that the floor will give way; you "accidentally" step around the weak spot. To observers, you are a lucky fool. To your enemies, you are a nightmare who cannot be touched.

Sample Progression:

- 2 XP: Stagger Step (Basic Technique)
- 4 XP: Monk's Breath

- 6 XP: Precognition (Art, Advantage on future rolls)
- 8 XP: Drunken Fist (Advanced Technique)
- 10 XP: Avoid Named Dangers (Precognition upgrade)
- 12 XP: The Unbroken Bottle (Master Technique)

5.4 The Silent Mind's Burden

A psionic monk walks two paths simultaneously, and each path demands its price. The monk pays in Fatigue and obligation; the psion pays in Mental Strain and the slow erosion of the self. When both debts come due at once—when the Fatigue track fills and the Mental Strain overflows—the monk risks becoming a hollow vessel: still breathing, still standing, but no longer present.

The Grey Wanderer once described meeting such a monk in the catacombs beneath Thepyrgos: "He sat in perfect lotus, eyes open, pulse steady. But when I spoke, he did not answer. When I touched his shoulder, he did not blink. The body was a temple, but the god had moved out. I left a coin on his palm and walked away. The coin was still there when I returned a year later."

Walk both paths if you must. But keep one foot on stone at all times.

Part V

The Three-Temples Monastery

Chapter 6

The Court That Does Not Move

The Three-Temples Monastery is not a fortress. It is a collection of stones, oak trees, and breath. It has no walls, no guards, no treasury. Its only defence is the reputation of its monks: those who enter with violence in their hearts find that violence returned to them tenfold, and those who enter with empty hands find tea and a place to sleep.

I am Brother Tarn, and I hold the rank of Keeper of the Unstruck Bell. Below me are the Five Elders, each responsible for a tradition. Below them, the monks who have taken vows. And at the bottom, the novices who scrub the floors and learn to breathe.

6.1 The Hierarchy of Breath

The monastery does not track rank by years served or enemies defeated. It tracks by breath.

Novice (First Breath) The novice learns to sit still for one hour. Most fail. Those who succeed begin to learn the Entering Breath.

Initiate (Holding Breath) The initiate learns to hold their breath for three minutes while meditating. This is not a physical test; it is a test of the mind's ability to override the body's panic.

Brother/Sister (Releasing Breath) The monk takes their first vow: "I will not strike first." They learn to redirect force, to parry, to disarm. They may leave the monastery but must return each season to renew the vow.

Elder (Empty Breath) The monk has learned to act from the space between thoughts. They are unpredictable, uncanny, and feared even by the other Elders. There are rarely more than five Elders at any time.

Keeper (The Unstruck Bell) There is only one Keeper. I hold the position now. When I die—or when I vanish into the hills to die alone—the Elders will choose another. Or they will not. The monastery has survived without a Keeper before.

6.2 The Monastery's Assets (What the GM Can Offer)

When players align themselves with the Three-Temples Monastery (or a similar monastic order), they can earn access to:

- The Breath Registry: A record of every trained monk in the region, their vows, and their current location. Useful for finding allies or tracking fugitives.

- The Silent Passages: A network of hidden paths beneath the city that only monks know. These passages allow stealthy movement between any two locations in the city that have a shrine or meditation alcove.
- The Novice Network: A group of young monks who act as messengers, lookouts, and distraction. Each is Cap 1, good for reconnaissance but not combat.
- The Healing House: A clinic run by the monastery where the sick and injured are treated without question. Monks may use the Healing House to recover Fatigue twice as fast (1 Fatigue per hour instead of per rest).
- The Unstruck Bell: A legendary artifact—a bell that rings only in the mind. Once per session, a monk may ring the Unstruck Bell (as an action) to impose -2 dice on all fear-based effects against the party for one scene. The bell's location is a secret known only to the Keeper.

Chapter 7

Notable Monks of the Three-Temples

Brother Tarn (Keeper of the Unstruck Bell)

Tier: IV

Motivation: Maintain the balance between the monastery and the city; prevent the Hollow from noticing the thresholds.

Leverage: He knows the true names of every monk in the region, and the location of every hidden meditation cell.

Quirk: He has never been seen eating. The novices whisper that he doesn't need to.

Sister Mira (Elder of the Open Hand)

Tier: III

Motivation: Heal the sick, protect the innocent, and remind the powerful that they are mortal.

Leverage: She trained half the healers in the city. They owe her favours, and she calls them in.

Quirk: She carries a small wooden bird that she carved as a novice. When she meditates, the bird sometimes sings.

Brother Stone (Elder of the Iron Vow)

Tier: III

Motivation: Enforce the monastery's oaths, hunt down those who have broken their vows, and protect the Keeper.

Leverage: He holds the Breath Registry and knows which monks have failed their vows. He does not forgive.

Quirk: He has not spoken in seven years. He communicates through hand signs and a small slate. The other Elders say his silence is a vow, not a wound.

The Abbot of the Empty Breath (Secret)

Tier: ?

Motivation: Unknown. Some say the Abbot is dead. Others say the Abbot never existed—that the Empty Breath is simply the space where a Keeper should be.

Leverage: Letters signed "The Abbot" arrive on warm paper, as if freshly pressed. They contain instructions that the Keeper always follows. No one has ever seen the Abbot.

Quirk: The Abbot's seal is a blank circle. A bell that cannot ring.

Part VI

Adventure Hooks and Rumours

Chapter 8

Jobs from the Monastery (d12)

When the players need work (or the GM needs a hook), roll or choose:

1. The Broken Vow. A former monk has broken their oath of non-violence and is terrorising the docks. Bring them back alive. The Elders will decide their penance.
2. The Poisoned Breath. Someone is poisoning the monastery's well. The water tastes of iron, and novices are falling into comas. Find the source.
3. The Silent Passage Thief. Someone has learned the secret of the Silent Passages and is using them to rob merchant caravans. The thieves' guild is not responsible—someone else is wearing their mask.
4. The Wandering Keeper. Brother Tarn has disappeared. He left a note: "The bell tolls for me. Choose the next Keeper, or don't." The Elders cannot agree. They need the party to find him—or confirm his death.

5. The Rival School. A new martial arts school has opened in the city. They teach the "Way of the Closed Fist"—aggression, dominance, and the exploitation of weakness. They are recruiting from the monastery's novice pool.
6. The Haunted Meditation Cell. One of the monastery's meditation rooms is now haunted. Monks who enter hear whispers that sound like their own thoughts. Something is feeding on their stillness.
7. The Debt of the Sleeping Master. An old monk lies in a coma, kept alive by the monastery's healers. His debt to a Patron has come due, and the Patron is sending a collector. The party must protect the sleeping man—or negotiate with the collector.
8. The Hollow Tithe. The Hollow has noticed the monastery's thresholds. Once a year, the monks leave a basket of bread at the crossroads. This year, the basket came back empty—but something was inside the bread.
9. The Stolen Breath. A thief has stolen the Breath Registry. Without it, the monastery cannot track its monks' vows. The thief is demanding ransom—but the registry cannot be copied. The party must retrieve the original.
10. The Novice's Vision. A novice has had a prophetic vision: the monastery will burn within the month. The Elders dismiss it as fever dreams. The novice is terrified. The party must investigate—or prepare for fire.
11. The Inquisition's Visit. The Chain-Lanterns of Ecktoria have arrived. They have heard rumours of "unsanctioned psionic activity” within the monastery. They demand to search the cells. The Elders refuse. The party is caught between.

12. The Unstruck Bell’s Secret. The Unstruck Bell has been stolen—or has it? The bell cannot be moved; it is a concept, not an object. But the Keeper swears it is gone. The party must discover what “missing” means for a bell that only rings in the mind.

Chapter 9

Rumours Heard in the Monastery Courtyard (d12)

1. Sister Mira once healed a dying warlord. He repaid her by burning a village. She does not heal anyone who carries a weapon anymore.
2. Brother Stone took his vow of silence after accidentally killing a student during a sparring match. The student was his son.
3. The Abbot of the Empty Breath is actually the ghost of the monastery's founder. He has been dead for two hundred years. The Keeper is the only one who can see him.
4. The Silent Passages lead not only under the city, but into the Ways Between. Monks who walk too far sometimes come back with empty eyes.
5. The monastery's well was dug on the site of an ancient execution ground. That is why the water tastes of iron—and why the Hollowed sometimes gather at midnight to drink.

CHAPTER 9. RUMOURS HEARD IN THE MONASTERY COURTYARD (D12)

6. The Unstruck Bell was not forged. It was found. It lay in a field, half-buried, next to a skeleton in grey robes. The skeleton wore the Abbot's seal.
7. There is a meditation cell that no one uses. The door is locked. The key was thrown into the well. The novice who asked why was expelled.
8. Brother Tarn is not the first Keeper to disappear. The previous Keeper walked into the hills thirty years ago. Some say he is still walking.
9. The Drunken Master tradition was not invented by the monastery. It was borrowed from a wandering beggar who beat three Elders with a broken bottle and then asked for tea.
10. The Hollow does not collect debts from monks. It is afraid of them. This is not a rumour. This is a warning.
11. The monastery has a secret library beneath the courtyard. The books are written in a language that changes depending on who reads them. The Abbot keeps the key.
12. The Grey Wanderer once stayed at the monastery for three days. He meditated in the courtyard, spoke to no one, and left a single coin on the well. The coin is still there. No one will touch it.

Chapter 10

The Debt of the Sleeping Master (Sample Adventure)

10.1 The Setup

The party is summoned to the monastery's infirmary. An old monk lies on a pallet of grey wool, eyes open but unseeing, lips moving in a language none of the novices recognise. His name is Master Kai, and he was once a teacher of the Way of the Unstruck Bell. Thirty years ago, he walked into the hills and did not return. Last night, a shepherd found him sitting cross-legged in a field, still breathing, still warm, but utterly absent.

Brother Tarn stands at the bedside. "He is not asleep," the Keeper says. "He is hiding. Something from his past has caught up with him, and he has run into the only place it cannot follow: his own memory. You must go in after him."

10.2 The Threshold

The party must enter Master Kai's mind. This requires a psionic anchor (a character with the Psionics skill and the Telepathy Art) who can pull the others into the dream. The anchor pays 1 Mental Strain per passenger (minimum 1). Non-psions cannot use psionic Arts inside the dream, but they can see, speak, fight, and interact with the environment normally.

The threshold is the pallet. The witnesses are each other. The price is one memory of comfort associated with the Master, which will be lost forever.

10.3 The Dream Heist

Once inside, the party appears in a memory version of the monastery's meditation hall. They must descend through nine chambers, each representing a hidden debt or unspoken regret of Master Kai's past. The final chamber contains the secret he has been hiding: the name of a woman he swore to protect during the Ashaani purges, and then abandoned.

Until the name is spoken aloud in the heart of the dream, the Master cannot wake—and the Spector (a grey figure representing his un-faced death) will stalk the party through the chambers.

10.3.1 Mechanics

- Master's Breath Clock [8]: Ticks every scene. When full, the Master's body stops breathing. The dream collapses; all PCs mark 2 Harm and gain the Haunted condition.
- Debt's Approach Clock [6]: Ticks when the party speaks a lie, fails a Resolve test, or damages a dream-construct.

When full, the woman's spirit manifests and attacks.

- Name Unspoken Clock [4]: Fills as the party discovers clues about the woman's identity. When full, the name is known and can be spoken in the final chamber.

10.4 Resolution

If the party speaks the name, the Master's eyes close, then open. He looks at Brother Tarn and says, "I am ready now." He dies within the hour, at peace. The party gains +1 Favour with the monastery and may each clear 1 Obligation or Corruption segment.

If the party fails—if the Master's Breath clock fills before the name is spoken—they wake to find the Master dead, his eyes still open, his lips still moving. The Spector has claimed him. The monastery will remember the party's failure for a generation.

10.5 The Grey Wanderer's Note on the Adventure

"I have been inside three dying minds. Two of them were gardens—overgrown, yes, but still growing. The third was a courtroom where the judge had been dead for forty years and the jury was made of the people he had wronged. That one took three days to escape. The trick is to remember that the dream is not real, but the debt is. You cannot argue with a ghost about whether you owe it. You can only pay."

CHAPTER 10. THE DEBT OF THE SLEEPING MASTER
(SAMPLE ADVENTURE)

Chapter 11

Last Words from Brother Tarn

You have read the techniques. You have seen the traditions. You know the price of the Unstruck Bell and the weight of the Iron Vow. Now close the book.

The monastery is not a place. It is a relationship with stillness. You can practice the Entering Breath in a crowded tavern, the Holding Breath in a prison cell, the Releasing Breath on a battlefield. The Empty Breath? That one you must find for yourself. I cannot teach it. No one can. The best I can do is point at the moon and hope you look up instead of at my finger.

Go. Make mistakes. Get hit. Learn why you should not have been there when the blow landed. Come back if you survive. I will keep the tea warm.

Brother Tarn

Keeper of the Unstruck Bell

Three-Temples Monastery

The ink is dry. The mirror is still. The bell does not ring.