

headPage epage

The Ninth Lock

A Campaign for Fate's Edge

The Overseer's Calculation

LargeContents

1	Adventure Identity Statement	3
2	Thematic Pillars	3
3	Campaign Structure	4
3.1	Act I: The Fragments (3–4 sessions)	4
3.2	Act II: The Betrayal (2–3 sessions)	5
3.3	Act III: The Threshold (2–3 sessions)	6
4	Mechanical Integration	6
4.1	Core Innovation: The Fragment's Bargain	6
4.2	Resource Management Layer	7
4.3	Timer Architecture	7
5	GM Support Systems	8
5.1	Session Preparation Checklist	8
5.2	Player Agency Reminders	8
5.3	Complication Generator (SB Spend)	8
6	Resolution Path Framework	9
6.1	Multiple Valid Approaches to the Climax	9

6.2 Outcome Matrix	9
7 Scalability and Modularity	9
7.1 Tier Adaptation	9
7.2 Session Modularity	9
8 Documentation Standards	10
8.1 PlayerFacing Materials (Handouts)	10
8.2 GM Quick Reference	10
9 Quality Assurance Checklist	10

wpage

Largeesection Adventure Identity Statement

What makes this campaign sing? A race against inevitability itself, where players must decide whether to help a desperate scholar uncover the truth of the world’s oldest debt—or stop her before she opens a door that should remain sealed.

What is the central tension? Moira of Stonehaven, guided by a fragment of the demon Varash, believes she can end the cycle of the Ninth by opening the lost city of Khasurah. The players must decide: aid her, betray her, or save her from herself—while agents of the three sisters, rival factions, and the Hollow itself close in.

What will players remember? The weight of choice when the future is shown to be inevitable—yet not fixed. The cost of knowledge. The ninth cup unpoured.

Largeesection Thematic Pillars

tem Horror by Consequence: The Ninth is not a monster; it is a debt that can never be fully paid. Horror comes from realizing that some doors, once opened, cannot be closed. tem Mystery by Revelation: The truth of Khasurah is revealed in fragments—each piece changes what the players think they know. tem Exploration by Discovery: The worldspanning quest for fragments reveals the layers of history beneath the Amaranthine.

Large section Campaign Structure

Large subsection Act I: The Fragments (3–4 sessions)

The players are recruited by Moira, a scholar turned ranger. She has located six fragments of the Black Ledger of Khasurah—scattered across the world. Her goal: assemble them to understand the Ninth taboo and perhaps find a way to end the Hollow’s hunger.

Opening Hook: Moira meets the party in a neutral location (a Sidhi lighthouse, a Thepyrgos weighhouse, a Tulkani caravan camp). She shows them a fragment she already possesses—a torn page from the Black Ledger, the ink still wet though it is millennia old. “Something is calculating. It has been calculating for nine thousand years. It will finish in nine more. We need to find the rest before it does.”

section The Fragments

tem The Ninth Line (Thepyrgos Archivolt): Sealed in a lead box requiring eight witnesses to open. The ninth witness is always the Hollow. The party must find a way to open it without summoning it.

tem The Overseer’s Ledger Page (Aeler Deep Vaults): Behind a door with nine locks. The ninth key is a secret no living being remembers.

tem The Spider’s First Cord (Crimson Valley): Held by a Lethaiar silkweaver. She will only give it in exchange for witnessing a broken promise.

tem The Serpent’s Shed Skin (Sekogo): The Ukwe (Speaking Tree) demands an answer to a riddle: “What debt is never paid?” tem The Raven’s Forgotten Name (Obishaal): Hidden in Ikasha’s dream. Requires entering the Ways Between and retrieving it from the sleeping goddess’s mind.

tem Samir’s Cut Page (Zakov): In a sunken vault guarded by a drowned captain’s ghost. He will only give it to someone who does not look back.

Each fragment retrieval is a miniadventure (1 session). The order affects difficulty and information revealed.

section Timers (Visible to Players)

tem Moira’s Certainty [8]: Ticks when players help her, when she argues her case, or when the fragment’s influence grows. At 4, she becomes more reckless. At 8, she is fully committed and cannot be reasoned with without Tam's intervention. tem Sisters' Attention [6]: Ticks when players uncover dangerous secrets, attract agents of Inaea, Isoka, or Ikasha. At 3, they are watched. At 6, an agent (Daughter of the Cord, SilkWarden, dreamer) arrives to stop them. tem Fragment's Whispers [4]: Ticks when a character uses a fragment for knowledge or fails a Resolve test. At 4, a character gains the Condition Haunted by Varash (the demon may offer a bargain). tem Overseer's Calculation [10]: Ticks automatically each session (or when players delay). When full, the Overseer completes the proof. The ninth lock opens if the party is not there to stop it.

largeesubsection Act II: The Betrayal (2–3 sessions)

After collecting three fragments, Moira reveals her true intent. She does not want to merely study Khasurah—she wants to open it. The fragment of Varash has shown her a true future: the Overseer will complete its calculation in nine years, and the Clockwork Demon will awaken, scouring the world of inefficiency, debt, and mercy. She believes she can intervene.

The players discover: Moira has been lying—withholding information, manipulating their allegiances, even sabotaging rivals who might stop her. She is not evil; she is desperate. The fragment speaks in her dreams, showing her visions of a silent, perfect world without hunger.

The Central Choice:

tem Side with Moira: Help her open Khasurah. Enter the drowned city (or its dreamecho) and face the Overseer. tem Betray Moira: Stop her from assembling the final fragments—steal them, alert the sisters' agents, or destroy the fragment (harming Moira in the process). tem Save Moira: Seek out Tam, her mentor, or another figure (the Grey Wanderer, a Daughter of the Cord) to intervene. Convince Moira to stop before it's too late.

sectionMidpoint Crisis (Mandatory)

Regardless of choice, the party is drawn into a threshold—either Khasurah (if siding with Moira) or a dreamecho of Khasurah (if trying to stop her). This is the final dungeon.

largeesubsection Act III: The Threshold (2–3 sessions)

The final location is Khasurah’s memory—a psychic echo of the city’s destruction, preserved by the Black Ledger fragments. It is unstable, shifting, and populated by Echoes of its citizens, Poltergeists of scholars, and Wardens left by the three sisters.

Central Chamber: A vast archive where the Overseer’s projection sits at a desk, still calculating. The ninth lock is not a physical door; it is a mathematical proof. If completed, it will open a gate for the Clockwork Demon.

Moirā’s state: If she is with the party, she is now fully under the fragment’s influence. She attempts to complete the proof by inputting the final variable—the name of Khasurah (or the name of the original sin). Speaking the name unlocks the ninth lock.

sectionFinal Choices (Multiple Outcomes)

tem Complete the proof with Moira: The ninth lock opens. The Clockwork Demon begins to manifest. The campaign ends with a desperate escape (or a world changed irrevocably). tem Destroy the fragments: Shatter the Kal’rantha fragment or scatter the Black Ledger pages. Moira collapses, free but traumatized. The Overseer’s calculation resets. tem Replace the variable: Change the proof—substitute a different name, a different condition. Seal the Clockwork Demon more permanently, or transfer the debt to a new entity. tem Negotiate with the Overseer: Convince the projection to stop—to accept that the variable cannot be known, the equation unsolvable. Requires a Spirit + Lore test (DV 6). The projection fades; the ninth lock remains closed forever.

Tam’s appearance: If the players sought him in Act II, he arrives at the climax. He does not fight; he speaks to Moira: “You said you would return in a generation. It has not been a generation yet.” Moira hesitates. The players act.

Largeesection Mechanical Integration

largeesubsection Core Innovation: The Fragment’s Bargain

Signature System: Varash’s Whisper

tem Purpose: Represents the demon of Fate’s influence—showing true futures to tempt characters into choices that serve inevitability. tem Integration: When a character touches a fragment or succeeds on a knowledge roll about Khasurah, the GM may offer a Bargain: accept a vision of a future outcome (true, but not inevitable) in exchange for a Story Beat or a tick on the Fragment’s Whispers timer. tem Player Agency: Players may refuse the bargain. Accepting gives them a genuine clue but accelerates their corruption. tem Sample Uses: “You see a vision of Moira standing before the Overseer, her hand on the final line. She is weeping. Do you accept this vision?” (Tick Whispers +1, learn that Moira will not be able to stop herself.)

largetsubsection Resource Management Layer

Khasuran Resonance: A new tracker (0–3) representing how attuned the party is to the memories of the drowned city. Gain Resonance by:

tem Using a fragment to solve a problem (+1) tem Spending a Boon to recall a vision of Khasurah (+1) tem Accepting Varash’s Whisper (+1)

At Resonance 3, the party can enter the dreamecho of Khasurah without an anchor—but they also attract the attention of the Wardens.

Asset Building Opportunities:

tem Each fragment, if not destroyed or returned, can become a Minor Asset (4 XP) granting +1 die to Lore or Investigation rolls concerning the Ninth. tem A character who successfully negotiates with the Overseer may gain a Boon: once per session, reroll a failed Resolve test when confronting inevitability (the ‘but you knew this would happen’ effect).

largetsubsection Timer Architecture

See Act I for the four campaign timers. Summary:

tem Moira’s Certainty [8] – Player actions and fragment influence. tem Sisters’ Attention [6] – Player discoveries and dangerous actions. tem Fragment’s Whispers [4] – Accepting visions, failing Resolve. tem Overseer’s Calculation [10] – Automatic each session.

When a timer fills, immediate consequences occur. The GM should announce the tick and describe the effect.

Large section GM Support Systems

Large subsection Session Preparation Checklist

tem[] Advance Overseer's Calculation by 1. tem[] Review which fragments remain and the party's relationship with Moira. tem[] Prepare 23 sensory details for each planned location. tem[] Note which timers are near filling; plan consequences. tem[] Have SB spend menus for the session's likely conflicts.

Large subsection Player Agency Reminders

At choice points, ask:

tem "What's the cost you're willing to pay?" tem "Who benefits if you succeed here?" tem "What would your character regret most?" tem "How does this align with your drives?"

When tension lags:

tem Introduce a time pressure (a timer ticks audibly). tem Raise personal stakes (a character's contact is endangered). tem Complicate success (the fragment offers a truth they didn't seek). tem Force resource expenditure (a Wardens attack requires a Boon to avoid.)

Large subsection Complication Generator (SB Spend)

tem 1 SB (Mild): Environmental pressure – a floor tilts, a Warden shifts position. tem 2 SB (Moderate): Tactical disadvantage – a rival faction arrives, a fragment's whisper reveals a false clue. tem 3 SB (Serious): Major setback – a fragment is stolen, Moira's Certainty ticks +1. tem 4+ SB (Major): Scene shift – the party is pulled into the dreamecho early, or a sister's agent demands a parley.

Large section Resolution Path Framework

Large subsection Multiple Valid Approaches to the Climax tem Direct Confrontation: Fight the Wardens and destroy the Overseer's projection. tem Indirect Manipulation: Use the fragments to rewrite the proof before Moira completes it. tem Creative Solution: Convince the Overseer that the variable is unknowable (negotiation). tem Sacrificial Gambit: One character offers their name as the final variable, sealing the lock with their own identity.

Large subsection Outcome Matrix

tem Success: The ninth lock remains closed. Moira is saved (or stopped). Cost: a character's memory, a fragment's destruction, or a new debt to the sisters. tem Compromise: The lock holds, but Moira is lost (she becomes a Hollowed, or wanders into Obishaal). The party gains a permanent enemy (a sister's faction). tem Failure: The ninth lock opens. The Clockwork Demon begins to emerge. The party must escape and find a new way to seal it (campaign continues). tem Transformation: The party chooses to replace the variable with something unexpected—a new covenant, a shared promise. The world changes in a small but profound way.

Large section Scalability and Modularity

Large subsection Tier Adaptation

tem Lower Tiers (I–II): Reduce Overseer's Calculation to 6. Simplify fragment retrieval to 12 scenes each. Focus on Moira's personal arc; reduce sister involvement. tem Higher Tiers (IV–V): Add subplots for each character tied to their backgrounds. Expand sister agents into full factions. Allow players to travel to the original Khasurah (not just its echo).

Large subsection Session Modularity

The campaign can be broken into:

tem 23 session arcs: Acts I, II, and III as standalone minicampaigns. tem 12 session adventures: A single fragment retrieval (e.g., “The Archivolt Heist” or “The Serpent's Skin”). tem Standalone encounters: A sister's agent confrontation, a vision from Varash, a sidequest to find Tam.

Large section Documentation Standards

large subsection PlayerFacing Materials (Handouts)

tem Fragment Descriptions: Onepage summaries of each fragment's location, keeper, and rumor.
tem Timer Tracker: A printable sheet with the four visible timers. tem Moirra's Journal Excerpts:
(from Up the Silverthread) to establish her character and Tam's wisdom.

large subsection GM Quick Reference

tem Fragment Keeper Motivations: A table (Keeper, Desire, Weakness, Price). tem Timer Triggers Summary: One page. tem SB Spend Menu for each Act: Tailored to the threats. tem The Overseer's Argument: A script for the negotiation path.

Large section Quality Assurance Checklist

large Essential Elements

tem[] Clear adventure identity statement. tem[] Meaningful player choices with consequences. tem[] Integration with core Fate's Edge mechanics (Boons, SB, Timers, Position). tem[] Custom mechanics (Varash's Whisper) that serve theme. tem[] Multiple valid approaches to conflicts. tem[] Clear escalation patterns (timers). tem[] Memorable NPCs (Moirra, Tam, fragment keepers). tem[] Atmospheric location descriptions (see sample below). tem[] Meaningful resource management (Resonance, fragments as Assets). tem[] Consequences that ripple forward (faction attitudes, world changes).

large Excellence Indicators

tem[] Mechanical innovation serves narrative (Varash's Whisper). tem[] Player agency reinforced throughout (choice in Act II, multiple endings). tem[] Thematic consistency maintained (debt, inevitability, choice). tem[] Multiple resolution paths available. tem[] Consequences feel earned and meaningful. tem[] Scalability options clearly marked. tem[] GM support materials comprehensive.

LargeSample Location: The Archivolt (Thepyrgos)

The lead box sits on a pedestal of black basalt, its surface warm to the touch. Eight chains dangle from the ceiling, each ending in a brass handcuff. A ninth chain hangs empty, swaying gently in a breeze that has no source. The notary who led you here has already retreated to the door. “Eight witnesses,” she whispers. “The ninth is always the Hollow. Do not let it be you.”

largeThe Ninth Line

Challenge: Open the box without summoning the Hollow. Solution: Use a silver mirror to reflect the Hollow’s attention. Requires an offering (a story, a memory) to distract it. Partial: The Hollow takes a minor memory (the name of a street, the face of a porter). Failure: The Hollow manifests and demands a name.

LargeEpilogue: After the Campaign

The world continues. The Overseer’s calculation resets (or completes, depending on the ending). Moira either returns to her wanderings, settles in a village, or vanishes into the Ways Between. The players are changed. They have witnessed the oldest debt and chosen how to respond.

The ink is still wet. The ninth page is blank. The Hollow reads over your shoulder.