Preface: The Ledger Bleeds

I am an Aeler Edgewalker. You call us mountain-dwellers who measure breath in silver bells and seal contracts in stone. How adorably naïve.

We don't just measure breath—we own the lungs that draw it. When a Tulkani chieftain swears an oath on his firstborn's life? That's not honour—it's collateral I've already hypothecated three times over. When a Veiled Sister binds a demon to a corpse to prop up her corpse-throne? That's not terror—it's a futures contract on soul-debt, and I'm the broker who sold the short position before the ritual even began.

You see the surface as "full of problems." How quaint. Problems aren't obstacles—they're inventory.

This book isn't a tourist's guide. It's a hit list with footnotes. I've marked the places where a well-placed bell doesn't just open a pass—it starts a war I've already shorted the bond market on. Where a forged seal doesn't just move a mountain—it triggers a landslide I've bought mineral rights to before the first crack appeared. Where a single true story doesn't just buy a ship's loyalty—it buys the captain's silence while I sell his manifest to pirates.

You want to build journeys? Draw your cards. Set your clocks. Spend your Story Beats like they mean something. But remember: every Diamond you earn is a tooth knocked out of someone else's jaw. Every Debt you incur? I already bought it from your victim for half what you'll pay—and I'm collecting interest in your marrow before you finish reading this sentence.

The road isn't just a ledger. It's a butcher's block. Every gate isn't a clause—it's a throat waiting for the knife.

— The Edgewalker

The Cartomancer's Compass

0.1 The Ledger of the Deck

The world does not speak in words. It speaks in suits, ranks, and the spaces between. Every bridge, every bribe, every broken oath can be laid out on a table of felt and dealt from a worn deck. This is not superstition. It is method.

The regional generators in this book—from the fog-choked levees of the Mistlands (section 8.1) to the walking cities of Ngomebe (section 20.1)—all speak the same language: the language of the fifty-two-card deck. Learn to read it, and you can generate a campaign, a crossroads, or a crisis in the time it takes to shuffle.

This chapter is your key. It explains how to interpret any card drawn from any regional generator, and how to weave those interpretations into the fiction at your table. Consider it the threshold between the abstract mechanics of the draw and the living, breathing world of Fate's Edge.

0.2 The Four Suits: A Universal Grammar

Every card in every generator carries the same four suit-meanings. They are the alphabet of the world's ledger.

0.2.1 ♠ : PlaceTheStage

Where does the scene happen? ♠ isthethreshold,thelandmark,thegroundbeneaththeaction.Itanswers : Where are we?

- High rank (10–A): A major landmark—a fortress, a capital, a haunted ruin. The place has a name that echoes in local songs.
- Mid rank (6–9): A functional location—a ford, a market, a shrine. The place has a purpose and a keeper.
- Low rank (2–5): A liminal or neglected place—a crossroads, a collapsed bridge, a smuggler's cove. The place is defined by what it lacks.

In the regional chapters, ♠ entriesarealwaysplaces.See, forexample, thebridgesandcanalsof Silkstrand (section 10.1).

0.2.2 ♥ : ActorTheFace

Who drives the scene? ♥ istheperson,thefaction,thevoicethatspeaks.Itanswers : Who is here?

- High rank (J–A): An elite, a ruler, a power-broker. The actor has authority and reach beyond the immediate scene.
- Mid rank (6–10): A professional, a functionary, a skilled operator. The actor has a trade and a price.

- Low rank (2–5): A commoner, an outcast, a victim. The actor needs something or has been failed by someone.

In the regional chapters, ♡ entries are always people or factions. See the merchants and spies of the Brass Coast (section 8.1) or the warden of the Mistlands (section 8.1).

0.2.3 ♣ : Pressure The Complication

What pushes back? ♣ is the storm, the debt, the knife in the dark. It answers : What goes wrong?

- High rank (10–A): A catastrophe, a betrayal, an invasion. The complication changes the shape of the journey.
- Mid rank (6–9): A serious obstacle a feud, a quarantine, a broken bridge. The complication costs time, resources, or reputation.
- Low rank (2–5): A minor hazard a sudden squall, a lost token, a raised toll. The complication is a nuisance, not a disaster.

In the regional chapters, ♣ entries are always complications or threats. See the river floods and witness—cord cut of Ayokha (section 35.1) or the market riot of Silkstrand (section 42.1).

0.2.4 ◇ : Leverage The Reward

What opens the door? ◇ is the token, the writ, the secret that changes Position. It answers : What do you gain?

- High rank (J–A): A major asset a noble title, a keystone charter, a general pardon. The reward reshapes the party’s standing.
- Mid rank (6–10): A significant tool a pass-stone, a witness cord, a lighthouse charter. The reward solves a specific class of problem.
- Low rank (2–5): A minor advantage a bridge token, a guest-cup, a rumour. The reward grants a single use of improved Position.

In the regional chapters, ◇ entries are always rewards or leverage. See the keystone charters of Ngomebe (section 24.1) or the share tablet of Fhara (section 24.1).

0.3 Rank and Severity: The Weight of the Card

The rank of a card from Ace (high) to 2 (low) sets the scale of its suit’s meaning. Use this ladder:

Rank	Narrative Weight
Ace	Legendary, campaign-altering, mythic
King/Queen/Jack	Major, faction-level, lasting consequences
10–7	Significant, scene-defining, costly
6–4	Moderate, manageable, a real cost
3–2	Minor, a complication but not a crisis

When a generator instructs you to set a clock by the highest rank, use this conversion:

- 2–5: 4-segment clock (short, local problem)
- 6–10: 6-segment clock (standard, journey-length)
- J, Q, K: 8-segment clock (extended, regional problem)
- A: 10-segment clock (epic, campaign-length)

0.4 Card Faces: The Court as Character

Face cards (Jack, Queen, King) are not merely high ranks. They are persons with agency, personality, and often a name.

- Jack: An agent, a functionary, a messenger. The Jack acts on someone else's authority. They are competent but replaceable.
- Queen: A power in their own right. The Queen has influence, resources, and a network. They are not easily replaced.
- King: The ultimate authority in their domain. The King is the source of law, the peak of the hierarchy. To challenge a King is to challenge the order itself.

When a face card appears in a ♡ (actor) draw, give the NPC a name, a motive, and a quirk. When it appears in a ♠ (plot) draw, give the NPC a name, a motive, and a quirk. When it appears in a ♣ (character) draw, give the NPC a name, a motive, and a quirk. When it appears in a ♦ (goal) draw, give the NPC a name, a motive, and a quirk.

0.5 Aces and the Ninth: The Hollow's Attention

An Ace is not merely the highest rank. It is a threshold. When an Ace appears in any draw, the Hollow takes notice. The GM gains 1 extra Story Beat (beyond any generated by 1s) to spend on a supernatural complication: a ghostly procession, a bell that rings without a clapper, a shadow that walks independently.

In regions where the Ninth Taboo is strong (see section 13.1, section 37.1, section 44.1), an Ace may also trigger a specific regional omen. For example:

- In Theona (section 13.1), an Ace of ♠ might add a missing step to a bridge.
- In the Ways Between (section 44.1), an Ace of ♡ might cause a reflection to speak.
- In the Mistlands (section 8.1), an Ace of ♣ might cause a bell – line to fail.

The GM should always read an Ace as a signal to escalate the uncanny.

0.6 By the Numbers: Procedure for Any Generator

When you sit down to generate a scene, a journey leg, or a settlement, follow this procedure:

1. Name the destination. Which region? Which route? Which authority controls the gate?
2. Shuffle and draw. Draw cards face-up, one for each suit you need. Most generators require all four suits; some (like travel legs) may use only three.
3. Read the ♠. This is your place. Describe it first. Set the stage.
3. Read the ♡. This is your actor. Introduce them. What do they want? Why are they here?
3. Read the ♣. This is your pressure. Complicate the scene. What just went wrong, or what is about to?
3. Read the ♦. This is your leverage. What can the players gain if they succeed? Be specific.
3. Set the clock. Use the highest rank among the four cards to determine the size of the scene's primary clock (see section 0.3).
4. Interpret faces and Aces. Give names to face cards. Apply regional Ace effects.
5. Play to find out. Use the generated elements as prompts, not scripts. The cards are seeds, not fences.

0.7 Regional Flavours: How Suits Shift Meaning

While the core suit meanings remain constant, each region inflects them with its own texture. A

♠ in Ecktor (section 2.1) is a forum or a coin-house; a ♠ in the Valewood (section 17.1) is a phasing ruin or a star-road. A ♥ in the Black Banners (section 11.1) is a mercenary captain or a condottabroker; a ♥ in Ykrul (section 9.1) is a singer.

Use the regional chapters as your lexicon. When you draw a card, consult the relevant table (e.g., section 3.1 for Acasia, section 18.1 for Oshiira). The table will give you a specific entry keyed to the rank and suit. Do not invent from scratch unless the table runs out — the tables are designed to evoke the specific flavour of the region.

0.7.1 Example: A Draw in Acasia

You are running a journey through the Broken Marches (section 3.1). You draw:

♠ 7, ♥ J, ♣ 4, ♦ Q

1. ♠ 7 : You consult section 3.1. A 7 of Spades is Hill-Motte Freshpalisade; ditch scattered with caltrops.]
 1. ♥ J : You consult section 3.1. A Jack of Hearts is Bride with No Dowry but a Claim-Daggers in the wedding ches.
 1. ♣ 4 : You consult section 3.1. A 4 of Clubs is Wedding Turns Ambush—You are caught between two bloodlines.]
 1. ♦ Q : You consult section 3.1. A Queen of Diamonds is Marriage Proxy—From the Margravine; bind a hill king.
1. Highest rank: Queen (rank equivalent to King/J/Q at 8). The scene's primary clock is 8 segments: The Feud Escalates [8].
 2. Interpretation: The party arrives at a hill-fort (Hill-Motte) on the eve of a wedding. The bride (Bride with No Dowry) is caught between two feuding bloodlines. The wedding turns to violence (Wedding Turns Ambush). If the party can survive the ambush and broker peace, the Margravine will grant them a Marriage Proxy — a powerful tool to bind a hill-king to their cause. The 8-segment clock tracks how quickly the feud spirals into open war.

This is the generator at work: four cards, one scene, immediate fiction.

0.8 The Unwritten Suit: When a Draw is Incomplete

Sometimes, a generator does not require all four suits. A travel leg, for example, may only need ♠, ♥, ♣ (see??). A social encounter might only need ♥ and ♣. When a suit is missing, treat its absence as a question :

- No ♠ : The place is ambiguous, shifting, or hidden. The scene occurs in a liminal space—across roads, a fog-bank, at a threshold.

- No ♡ : The actor is absent, silent, or dead. The pressure and place act without a face. This can be more frightening.
- No ♣ : The scene is calm, peaceful, or mercifully straight forward. This is rare in Fate's Edge. Treasure it.
- No ♦ : The reward is not a token but an outcome. The players gain Position, information, or a cleared clock rather than a reward.

0.9 Interpreting Any Draw, Any Region

When you need a prompt in a hurry — a random encounter, a rumour at a tavern, a discovery in a ruin — draw a single card. Use this quick-reference:

♠	A place or landmark. What is its name? What happened here?
♡	A person or faction. What do they want? What do they fear?
♣	A complication or threat. Who or what is the obstacle?
♦	A reward, token, or secret. What can be gained?

The rank tells you the scale. A low rank is local and personal; a high rank is regional and political. A face card demands a name; an Ace demands the Hollow's attention.

This single-card method is ideal for improvisation. It gives you one clear element to build around. Let the fiction answer the rest.

0.10 Final Guidance: The Cards Are Oracles, Not Scripts

The generators in this book are tools, not tyrants. If a draw gives you an entry that contradicts established fiction, or if you simply prefer a different interpretation, overrule it. The deck is a prompt, not a prison.

But trust it, too. The most memorable sessions often come from the card you did not expect. The Ace that arrives at the wrong moment. The Jack who speaks a name no one wanted to hear. The diamond that glows with a secret debt.

Shuffle. Draw. Interpret. And let the road unfold.

“The ledger is never closed. It is only passed to the next keeper.” — Dusana of the Raven Road

Part I

The Amaranthine Sea & Northern Shores

“The sea keeps a better ledger than any scribe. The reef remembers every secret whispered above its depths. Do not ask which flag flies highest – ask which hull leaks slowest.” — Dusana of the Raven Road

Chapter 1

Kahfagia

The Flag of Storms.

I was born on the tide, which is to say I was born owing. My mother was a net-mender who lost her fingers to a reef-cutter's debt. My father was a bell—that is to say, he rang when the Admiralty pulled his string. I learned to read the lantern codes before I learned my letters, and I learned that every light is a lie waiting to be told.

The Admiralty runs this place like a pirate charter with a budget—and oh, how they love pretending it's legitimate. They control the beacons that lure ships onto reefs, the booms that shatter hulls for salvage rights, and the tariffs that fund their champagne baths. But here's the secret the commodores don't want you to know: the lanterns are afraid of the dark too.

I've seen a Mirror-Keeper weep when her reflection showed her a daughter she'd sold for a pilot's license. I've watched a Privateer Captain kiss a silver coin before a raid—the same coin her mother kissed before she never came back. This is not a city of heroes. It is a city of people who learned that the sea is cheaper than mercy.

If you want to move cargo through the straits without becoming fish food, get a convoy letter stamped with the Admiral's seal. Or get smart. Or get gone.

— Captain Mira “the Lucky,” Sidhi exile, pirate by convenience

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Salt fish porridge—dried cod soaked overnight, boiled with hardtack and a splash of lamp oil. The oil is for calories. The fish is for memory. Every Kahfagian child learns to taste the salt and know which coast their grandmother came from.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count ships by their lanterns. Three lanterns means a Kahfagian merchant—safe. Four means an Oshiiran grain barge—neutral. One, low in the water, means a privateer. Run.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their hands. Dock-workers have rope-burned palms. Merchants have ink-stained fingers. Privateers have no fingernails—they bite them off in storms.

What is the most common crime? False manifests. Every third ship carries cargo that doesn't appear on its papers. The Admiralty knows. The Admiralty takes a cut. The Admiralty calls it a "tariff surcharge."

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Mirror-Keepers are not born—they are made. And the making requires a death. A sister, a daughter, a lover. Someone who drowned so the keeper could see through the fog.

Where do people go when they die? The tide takes them. Kahfagia has no cemeteries above ground. The drowned are weighted with chain and dropped in the deep channel. Their families light candles in paper boats and float them out at dusk. If the candle reaches the horizon, the soul is forgiven. If it sinks, the debt is not yet paid.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer your bell. Every Kahfagian carries a small brass bell on a leather cord—the sound of their name. Offering it to the wronged party means "I give you my voice. Speak for me." Refusing to return the bell after an apology is a declaration of blood feud.

What is the most important festival? The Beacon Lighting (midwinter). Every lighthouse keeper lights a new lamp from the Admiral's flame. If your beacon catches first, your year will be lucky. If it sputters, you will owe a death to the sea.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Admiral's lantern code has a ninth signal—never used, never spoken, burned into every keeper's memory. It means "Kill the witnesses. Sink the evidence. The sea will hide the rest."

1.1 Kahfagia — “The Creole Thalassocracy”

Quick Reference

Tagline: Every mirror is a blade, every beacon a promise. The sea obeys when we move the lights — but the spiders weave in the mirror-towers.

Admiral of Lantern-Law (Elite): “Every mirror is a blade, every beacon a promise. The sea obeys when we move the lights — and woe to the fool who rows against them. Yet I have seen the reflection move before the hand that holds it. The tides are not the only ones with secrets.”

Dockside Factor (Commoner): “The pilots see farther than kings. A gesture in lantern-code can open ports, or close them. Keep your debts paid, and your lamps trimmed. And if a grey-robed stranger offers to adjust your mirror for free — say no. The Lethai-ar have long memories, and longer webs.”

Genre / Mood: Creole thalassocracy, signal-and-lane politics, eldritch tide, secret infiltration.

Starting Location: The Lantern Pier admiralty chapel, where votive ships hang from the ceiling and brine drips from the icon of a drowned saint. A sea-notary unlocks a salt-stained reliquary and produces a chart with gilt edges. “Fetch the contraband bell from the corsair galleass Santa Dolorosa before moonrise — or the harbour names you accomplices. And watch for silk threads on the bollards. The Spider’s children are everywhere.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Kahfagia is the Creole child of Oshiira and the Vilikari — a thalassocracy where Oshiiran ledgers meet Vilikari tide-law. The Admiralty of Lantern-Law rules not by armies but by light, yet the real power flows through a tangled web of oligarchic families, each with their own spies, their own private navies, and their own seat on the Shadow Council. Above them all floats a central Admiralty fleet, charged with protecting the beacon monopoly — and with watching the watchers.

But the oligarchs are not the only players. Unseen, the Lethai-ar of Inaea have been infiltrating the mirror-towers for decades. A factor’s trusted secretary, a harbour master’s silent wife, a pilot’s apprentice with too-still eyes — they weave their webs not for coin, but for control. They do not seek to destroy Kahfagia. They seek to own it, strand by strand, until the entire thalassocracy hums to the rhythm of the Spider’s mercy.

What you notice first: The constant chime of bell-buoys. The smell of salt, tar, and burnt oil from a thousand lanterns. The way everyone — admiral to dockhand — glances at the tide clock before speaking. And the faint, almost invisible silk threads tied around the bollards of the wealthiest piers.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never argue with a Mirror-Keeper about where the channel lies. If they say the safe water moved, it moved. Your chart is already kindling. And if the Mirror-Keeper smiles too widely, check the back of their neck for a spider’s brand.

Regional Mood: The Lantern’s Vigil & The Spider’s Web

Power is visible here — literally. Every night, a thousand lamps burn along the channels, each a statement of control. To dim a light is to declare bankruptcy. To move a beacon is to declare war.

Commodores sit in their mirror-towers, watching reflections, while tide-clocks tick down to the next auction, the next inspection, the next quiet murder.

But beneath the visible power, another war is fought in whispers. The Lethai-ar agents of Inaea have spent a generation infiltrating the oligarchic families. A young heir who suddenly displays uncanny negotiating skill may not be talented — they may be woven. A Mirror-Keeper whose beacons never fail may be receiving guidance from a source that does not appear on any chart. The Spider’s web is patient. It does not break the thalassocracy; it guides it.

The Oligarchic Houses (Shadow Council)

The true rulers of Kahfagia are not the Admiralty alone, but the Shadow Council of seven oligarchic families. Each controls a monopoly (spice, salt, silk, timber, pitch, shipbuilding, or intelligence). Each maintains its own private navy and network of spies. Each vies for the empty seat left by the family that the Lethai-ar have already woven into silence.

- House al-Kassam (Spice): Oldest, proudest, most vulnerable. The Lethai-ar have already replaced the family steward.
- House Carrasco (Salt): Ruthless pragmatists; they suspect infiltration but cannot prove it.
- House Mirat (Silk): Secret allies of the Lethai-ar — they trade webs for influence.
- House del Puerto (Shipbuilding): Neutral; they build for anyone who pays.
- House Henares (Timber): Deeply indebted to the Admiralty; the Lethai-ar are slowly buying their notes.
- House de la Vela (Intelligence): The Admiralty’s own spy network — and already compromised.
- The Empty Chair: Once held by House Morat, now vacant. The other houses whisper that the Morats were not destroyed — they were rewoven.

Secret Faction: The Silk Vigil (Lethai-ar Infiltrators)

Agents of Inaea, the Spider’s children have spent a generation worming into Kahfagia’s elite. They do not steal or sabotage — they guide. A decision that benefits House Carrasco is subtly nudged toward the Lethai-ar’s long-term goal: a unified thalassocracy that answers not to the Admiralty, but to the Web.

Signs of Infiltration:

- A factor’s handwriting becomes unnaturally precise, the loops forming faint eight-shapes.
- A Mirror-Keeper’s reflections show the same face in every tower — a woman with chestnut-brown skin and eyes like polished jet.
- A ship that should have foundered instead limps to port, its crew speaking of a grey-robed passenger who vanished before docking.

Mechanical Hook: Once per session, a PC may roll Wits + Lore (DV 4) to notice a silken thread in an official’s collar or a spider’s brand on a dockhand’s wrist. On success, they identify a Lethai-ar agent. On failure, the agent becomes aware of their scrutiny — and the Web tightens.

Names of Kahfagia

Inspired by the sea-faring republics of the western coast, blended with Oshiiran and Vilikari influences: liquid consonants, soft vowels, and surnames that denote a port, a ship, or a founding ancestor.

a peppercorn sealed in wax. Bite it to test authenticity.

A Lantern License — Temporary authority to redefine the lane. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The harbour master spits when he hands it over. Use it wisely — or not at all.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (papers/rights/priority) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo sea & signal motifs — beacons that migrate, tides that remember, law that flows like water. If a King or Ace of Spades appears, also echo web motifs — silk threads on a bollard, a reflection that holds too long, the faint smell of spiced tea (the Lethai-ar are near).

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Pilot’s Mirror: Kahfagia’s strength is not its fleet but its monopoly on light and lane. To post a beacon is to redraw the map. Any character with a Mirror Warrant may permanently move a beacon or buoy (GM sets a 4-segment clock). For the duration of that clock, all navigation rolls on that lane are at +1 Position for the party and –1 Position for rivals.
- Lantern-Law Privilege: While flying an Admiralty flag or carrying a valid Lantern License, your ship may pass through chain-booms and customs points at +1 Position. The first time in a session you invoke this privilege, the GM gains 1 SB (the Admiralty is watching).
- Oligarchic Favour (Leverage Track): Instead of tracking coin debts, track Favour with the great families (al-Kassam, Carrasco, Mirat, etc.). Favour 1–3 gives you access to private docks, early auction warnings, and off-the-books pilots. Favour 4+ lets you call in a family to block a rival’s safe-conduct or raise a false alarm on their ship.
- The Web’s Patience (Secret Clock [6]): Tracks the Lethai-ar infiltration of the Shadow Council. The clock ticks when the party helps a Lethai-ar agent, exposes a rival house’s secrets, or ignores a silken thread. At 3, the Harpist’s name appears on a dockmaster’s manifest. At 6, the Empty Chair is filled — and the new house head bows to a grey-robed stranger. The party may reduce the clock by exposing an agent or by warning an oligarch (costs Favour 2).
- Western Reach Rumours: Once per port visit, a character may roll Wits + Lore (DV 3) to hear a rumour from a captain returned from beyond the mirror. On success, the GM reveals one of the six rumours (see below) as a foreshadowing hook or a clue for an ongoing arc.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Lantern Bearer — The Traveler. A light that never goes out; a promise that never sinks.
 - The Mirror-King — The Witness. Reflections that remember every lie, every promise, every cargo.
 - The Tide Father — Khemesh. The pressure beneath the keel; the debt that the sea collects at ebb.
 - The Spider’s Daughter — Inaea (secret). The web that binds the oligarchs, strand by patient strand.
 - The Unlit — Ikasha. The ninth lamp that is never lit; the safe harbour that exists only in rumour.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Saint Alvaro of the Lantern (The Traveler): The Admiralty's mirror-towers double as wayshrines for the Saint of Lost Channels. Sailors who light a candle before a voyage and whisper a destination to the mirror claim the tide will not turn against them before they reach it. The Mirror-Keepers charge a fee for this service — payable in salt, not silver.
- The Silken Coup (Inaea): The Lethai-ar call their infiltration the Genteel Harvest. They do not conquer; they adopt. An oligarch who accepts a grey-robed advisor finds that their children are betrothed to shadow-kin, their ledgers are copied in disappearing ink, and their mirror-tower shows only the face they wish to see — not the one that watches them sleep.
- The Tide-Sworn Compact (The Admiral of Sealed Tides): A small but influential order of notaries based in Kassamira Port. They adjudicate disputes over beacon rights, cargo claims, and pilotage fees. Their judgments are always delivered in triplicate, and they accept no bribes — only binding oaths. Those who lie before a Covenant judge find that their next three voyages are plagued by contrary winds.
- The Hospitallers of the Salted Veil (The Bitter Root): A hospice on Deadman's Quay is run by grey-robed healers of the Order. They ask no payment, but they never forget a face. It is said that if you accept their care, you owe a favour to the sea itself — and the sea always collects. Smugglers leave small offerings of fresh water on the pier to stay in the Order's good graces.
- The Ninth: In any lantern-lit scene, the ninth lamp lit in a room reveals a threshold. The wise stop at eight. Those who light the ninth are said to see a figure standing on the water outside the window — waiting.

Kahfagia Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Wake: Toss a crust over your shoulder before entering a new channel. Ignore the first Smothering Fog penalty. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Turn the Lantern: Spin the binnacle lamp once counter-clockwise. Cancel Boom Slam or take -1 die on your next pilot check (your choice). '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Name to the Deep: Whisper a true name into a lead line. Gain +1 Effect against corsairs for the scene, but mark Obligation to the Tide Court. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Cut the Thread: If you find a silk thread on your bollard, cut it with a silver knife. Negate the next Web's Patience tick. '[SUPERSTITION]'

Thematic SB Spend Table

(Unchanged; see earlier table.)

Western Reach Rumours (d6, fast hooks)

1. A harbour where bells toll under water; cargo must be named aloud.
2. A spice that stops bleeding — until moonrise.
3. A mirror-reef that reflects storms from a week ahead.
4. A pilotage guild that uses birds, not beacons.

5. A fleet that sails by shadow cast on fog.
6. A court that weighs debts in breath, not coin.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Sail + Wits): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Wake Surge.
- Cut the Lane (Pilot + Tactics): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a beacon is under your colour, +1 die.
- Weather the Squall (Resolve + Sail): On a hit in Black Squall, you pick who drifts; on a miss, the Keeper does.

Boss Seeds (Sea & Signal / Web & Silk)

- The Mirror-Keeper of Kassamira (signal tyrant) — Phases: Audit → Blacklist → Light Embargo. Cracks: rival beacon logs, Tide Court precedent, stolen codebook.
- Corsair-Chaplain of the Pointe (relic raider) — Phases: Charm → Board → Bell-Wake. Cracks: sanctified boom, cofradía oath, drowned-saint tithe.
- The Veiled Harpist (Spider’s Daughter) — Phases: Whisper → Weave → Harvest. Cracks: speak a true name of a Lethai-ar agent, cut a strand of the Web with silver, or remind an oligarch of a debt older than the Spider’s memory.

Patronage & Power

In Kahfagia, power flows through control of the sea lanes themselves — and through the silken threads that bind the oligarchs to the Spider’s will. The maritime oligarchs have built their empire not through conquest of territory but through mastery of navigation and the quiet manipulation of debt. Every beacon, every channel marker, every mirror-light is both a navigational aid and a legal instrument. But behind every mirror, a grey-robed woman watches. And she is very, very patient.

For the GM: Kahfagian patronage revolves around access — to channels, to cargo, to legal protection. Rewards often take the form of pilotage tokens, safe-conducts, or salvage rights. But the secret war of the Lethai-ar adds a new layer: players may be hired to expose an agent, to protect an oligarch from being "woven," or even to ally with the Spider’s children for a share of the Harvest. Use the Web’s Patience clock to track the infiltration; let players decide whether to slow it, accelerate it, or ride it to power.

Amaria – The Iron Shore

A small peninsula squeezed between Kahfagia’s Akilan holdings and the Oshiiran border, Amaria is a land of iron mines, coastal fog, and hybrid law. Ecktoria once claimed it; now it pays tribute to both Kahfagia and Oshiira to stay independent. Its people speak a creole of Kahfagian maritime slang and Oshiiran bureaucratic precision, and its courts rule by a blend of Admiralty tariff law and Vermilion Corps ledger-justice.

What you notice first: The smell of rust and brine. The way every official carries two seals — one for Kahfagia, one for Oshiira. The constant ticking of water-clocks that never agree on the hour.

The rule that kills newcomers: Never carry only one flag. Amarian vessels fly both the lantern and the grain sheaf. A single flag is a declaration of allegiance – and an invitation to be sunk by the other side.

Quick Generators for Amaria (d6 each)

Spades – Places (d6)

1. Iron Quay – A pier built from salvaged warship timbers. The nails are iron from the inland mines; they rust red, staining the water like blood. ‘[INDUSTRY]’
2. Coin-House of Two Ledgers – A counting-house where every transaction is recorded twice – once for the Kahfagian tariff, once for the Oshiiran grain tithe. The third ledger is the smuggler’s. ‘[TRADE]’
3. Fog Lighthouse (Disputed) – A stone tower with two lamps: one green for Kahfagia, one white for Oshiira. Only one is lit at a time. The keeper changes them with the tide. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
4. Smuggler’s Rope-Walk – A hidden cove where boats land at low tide. The rope-walk is a series of knotted lines that lead to a cave full of untaxed cargo. ‘[STEALTH]’
5. Mine Shaft of the Ninth Vein – An iron mine that goes deeper than the surveyors mapped. The miners whisper of a sealed door at the bottom – Aeler work, they say. ‘[MYSTERY]’
6. Dual Customs Post – A wooden shack with two windows: one for Kahfagian stamps, one for Oshiiran seals. The line snakes between them. Smugglers pay both clerks and skip the line. ‘[AUTHORITY]’

Hearts – People (d6)

1. Two-Ledger Clerk – Sits at a split desk, writing with two hands. Her left hand files Kahfagian tariffs; her right, Oshiiran grain receipts. Her third hand – the one no one sees – writes the real numbers. ‘[TRADE]’
2. Iron Miner (Free) – A former indentured labourer who bought his freedom with a year’s ore. His hands are stained red with rust. He knows the sealed door’s location but will not speak of it. ‘[LABOR]’
3. Smuggler Captain – Flies no flag. His ship’s name changes with each port. He speaks four languages badly and navigates by the taste of salt on the wind. ‘[STEALTH]’
4. Kahfagian Customs Agent – A one-eyed woman with a brass hook for a hand. She stamps cargo with a bell-shaped seal. The seal rings when the declared value is a lie. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
5. Oshiiran Grain Auditor – Thin, spectacled, carries a grain balance. He measures every sack against the Widow’s standard. He has found nine thieves this year. The tenth was his own clerk. ‘[JUSTICE]’
6. Fog Keeper (Lighthouse) – An old sailor who lost his sight to a Kahfagian mirror flash. He tends the lamps by touch. He knows which flag flies by the heat of the glass – green is cool, white is warm. ‘[WEATHER]’

Clubs – Complications (d6)

1. Tariff Double-Cross – Both Kahfagia and Oshiira claim the same customs fee. Pay one, and the other impounds your cargo. Pay both, and you are bankrupt. Smuggle, and you are a patriot. ‘[DEBT]’

2. Mine Collapse (Sealed Door) – A cave-in opens a passage to the sealed Aeler door. The miners are afraid. Something is breathing on the other side. The party is asked to investigate – or to seal it again. ‘[DISASTER]’
3. Lighthouse Outage – Both lamps go dark. Ships founder on the reef. The keeper is found dead, one hand on each lamp. The cause of death: old age – or old debt. ‘[DEATH]’
4. Census Dispute – Oshiira claims Amaria’s population for grain tithes; Kahfagia claims it for port taxes. The same people are counted twice – or not at all. The party is asked to audit the ledgers. The ledgers are on fire. ‘[POLITICS]’
5. Iron Embargo – A rival faction sinks an ore barge. Both powers blame each other. The price of iron spikes. The party’s cargo is now worth a fortune – and a target. ‘[COMBAT]’
6. The Ninth Vein Opens – The sealed door cracks. A cold wind blows from the deep. The miners flee. A voice whispers a name – the name of the party member who owes the deepest debt. ‘[MYSTERY]’

Diamonds – Rewards (d6)

1. Dual Customs Stamp – One stamp, two seals. Passes both Kahfagian and Oshiiran checkpoints without inspection. Use once per journey. ‘[TRAVEL]’
2. Iron Ingot (Ninth Vein) – A bar of ore from the sealed door’s chamber. It is warm to the touch. Aeler runes glow on its surface. Trade it to the True Masons for a favour. ‘[TRADE]’
3. Fog Keeper’s Log – A journal of tide and lamp schedules. Decode it to predict when the disputed lighthouse will be unguarded. Gain +1 Position on smuggling attempts. ‘[WEATHER]’
4. Two-Ledger Receipt – A document that proves you paid both tariffs. It is written in disappearing ink. The ink vanishes after one use – but the paper remembers. ‘[JUSTICE]’
5. Miner’s Compass – A brass needle that points to the sealed door. It also points to the nearest iron vein – and to the nearest heart that beats with greed. ‘[TRAVEL]’
6. Smuggler’s Flag (Neutral) – A plain grey banner. Fly it to pass between Kahfagian and Oshiiran patrols unmolested. The patrols will not salute. They will not shoot. They will pretend they did not see you. ‘[STEALTH]’

Chapter 2

Ecktoria

Marble & Fire.

My grandfather was a senator. He voted to burn the Ykrul tribute-pact, and then he voted to burn the inquiry into why the grain ships sank. He signed his name in wax and watched the city burn three times. He never raised his voice.

I am a Coin-House Factor. I seal deals with three ribbons—white for "ask," red for "now," black for "never." I have never used the black ribbon. Not because I am kind, but because "never" is a debt I cannot collect.

Ecktoria is an Empire that never quite died—more like a corpse propped up by gilded scaffolding and the stubborn refusal of its undertakers to admit the job's done. The Everflame burns in every basilica not as a symbol of divine truth, but as a literal lie detector: swear a false oath near it, and your tongue turns black. I have seen a merchant's tongue turn black mid-sentence. He finished his lie anyway. The buyers pretended not to notice. That is Ecktoria.

The statues watch. The fire judges. The marble remembers every name carved into its steps—and every name left out.

Do not refuse a toast in a coin-house. The ledgers are the true judges, and a declined cup is a declined credit. You will not borrow again.

— Marcus of the Red Ledger, Coin-House Factor, third generation

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Spiced flatbread dipped in olive oil and honey—but only if you can afford the honey. The poor eat millet porridge with a single dried fig. The fig is counted as part of the household's grain allowance.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count coins by touch. Every Ecktorian child has a box of worn sesterces; by age five, they can tell a debased copper from pure silver by the weight alone.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their signature. Ecktorians judge by handwriting before face. A clerk with a steady hand is trustworthy. A noble with a flourish is hiding something. A merchant who signs with an X is not worth doing business with.

What is the most common crime? Tax evasion—but it is not a crime, it is a sport. Every household keeps two ledgers: the white one for the Censor, the red one for the family. The art is in keeping the red ledger from looking like a confession.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Censor's clerks are paid to find discrepancies. They are also paid to lose them. The price of a lost discrepancy is exactly 5% of the tax owed. This is not corruption. It is "administrative flexibility."

Where do people go when they die? The family crypt, beneath the basilica floor. The wealthy are burned, their ashes mixed with marble dust and pressed into the floor tiles. The poor are buried in unmarked graves outside the walls. The Everflame's light does not reach that far.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You petition the Censor to have the wrong stricken from the public record. The petition costs a tenth of your annual income. If accepted, the wrong is erased—legally, it never happened. If rejected, the wrong is published, and you lose your civic standing.

What is the most important festival? The Triumph of the Flame (autumn equinox). The basilica's central flame is carried in procession through every district. To touch the flame is to be absolved of petty debts. To be burned by it is a sign that your debts are not petty.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Grand Magistrate's seal is a forgery. The original cracked in 783 AR. The current seal was carved by a prison engraver who was executed to keep the secret. The engraver's apprentice is still alive. They live in Silkstrand. They have the original sketches.

2.1 Ecktoria — “Marble & Fire”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The flame remembers. The marble judges. The ledger never sleeps.

Grand Magistrate (Elite): “The law here is written not in books but in marble and flame. Every edict carries the weight of centuries, and every judgment echoes in the very stones of the Forum. But the Forum has grown quiet of late. The patricians no longer listen.”

Ferrymaster (Commoner): “I’ve seen the city burn three times and rise again like a phoenix made of stone. The marble remembers, the bells tell the truth, and the fire judges all — especially those who think coin can buy clean hands. But this time the fire isn’t burning. It’s smiling. The rich have stopped looking at the flames. They only look at each other.”

Genre / Mood: Imperial decay, mercantile noir, flame-lit judgment, Renaissance decadence — a city walled off from its own rot, where the wealthy dance while the poor cough ash.

Starting Location: The Coin-House floor, marble cracked with soot lines, where votive candles burn beside melted icons. A factor with smoke-singed ledgers offers a purse. “The Lame King moves,” she says. “And the Basilica burns with him. Your credit is good — for now. Find out who lit the fire, or the Flame will audit your soul at dawn. And stay away from the Amber Palace. The Vigil has been... smiling.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Once the heart of the Utaran Empire, Ecktoria has worn its laurels into chains. Three centuries of sack, fire, and slow decline have not stripped its marble forums nor its gold-sealed coin-houses — but each day, more of its wealth slips into the hands of mercenaries and factions. The Black Banners march on its purse, avenging old Ykrul wounds by proxy. Processions still crown its stairways, yet ash lines every step. The city burns not only with memory, but with ambition still unquenched.

Yet the true sickness is not in the streets. It is in the Amber Palace, where the old patrician families have walled themselves away. They sit on laurels preserved from the empire, drinking wine that costs a village’s harvest, whispering deals with merchants who have never seen a loom. Maelstraeus, the demon of commerce and greed, has sunk his hooks into their ledgers; every contract they sign compounds interest in blood. Livaea, the demon of seduction and desire, has wrapped their hearts in silk; they marry for influence, divorce for scandal, and love only the reflection of themselves in gilded mirrors. The common folk call them the Unburdened — not because they carry no weight, but because they have forgotten what weight feels like.

The Vigil — once the empire’s secret police, now a fractured ghost of an institution — fights a silent war over the dream of restoration. One faction, the Censer-Knights, serves the Everflame and the Synod, hunting heresy and latent magic with brass censers and bells that ring at dawn. Another, the Unburnt, answers only to the old patrician houses, ensuring that no whisper of rebellion reaches the Amber Palace. A third, the Red Vigil, has sold itself to Maelstraeus, auditing debts and collecting interest in screams. They do not fight each other openly. They meet in the hypogeum of the Arena, under the gaze of statues that weep marble tears.

Beyond the capital's walls, the province is a patchwork of struggling towns, abandoned fortresses, and grainlands whose harvests are disputed by rival tax-collectors. The Everflame Orthodoxy preaches unity, but each sermon is a coded signal for a political camp. The statues watch. The fire judges. And in the sewers, the Vigil's informers listen for the name of the next person to vanish.

What you notice first: The smell of old incense and fresh bread — and beneath it, the faint sweetness of rot. The way crowds part for a procession — and close again for a knife. The marble steps, worn smooth by centuries of petitioners. The way the wealthy never step on the cracks.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never refuse a toast in a coin-house. The ledgers are the true judges, and a declined cup is a declined credit. You will not borrow again. But more than that: never accept a gift from a patrician without naming its price aloud. Maelstraeus and Livaea both listen, and a gift accepted in silence is a contract signed in blood.

Regional Mood: The Flame That Remembers — And The Dancers Who Forgot

Here, the past does not fade — it is polished into monuments. Every statue, every obelisk, every triumphal arch is a legal precedent carved in stone. Ecktoria is not one city but three: the marble forums of the old patricians (where the Unburdened hold masques that last for weeks, their faces painted with ash from the Everflame), the soot-stained alleys of the mercenary camps (where Black Banner captains drink with Vigil informers), and the basilicas where the Everflame's priests balance piety against profit (and sometimes sell indulgences for the sin of being born poor). The Grand Magistrate presides over a skeleton empire, but the real power moves in coin-houses, grain ledgers, and the whispered judgments of the Censor's Hall — and in the dreams of patricians who no longer remember the scent of rain.

The Vigil does not patrol the streets. It permeates them. Every tavern has an informer; every bathhouse has a spy; every marriage is witnessed by someone who reports to a faction of the Vigil. The Censer-Knights hunt unlicensed magic; the Unburnt hunt sedition; the Red Vigil hunts debt. They are not allies. They are not enemies. They are three creditors fighting over the same soul.

The patricians — the Old Blood — no longer govern. They perform governance. A session of the Parlement might see two senators debate the price of grain while their slaves hold silver trays of honeyed figs. A decree might be passed that doubles the salt tax, then rescinded an hour later because a duchess sneezed. They are not cruel. They are distracted. Livaea has taught them to crave the next pleasure before they have finished the current one. Maelstraeus has taught them that every transaction is a game, and every game is winnable if you have enough coin. They do not see the bread riots. They see a shortage of entertainment.

The Everflame still burns in the basilicas, but its light has grown dim. The High Priest speaks of unity, but his sermons are interrupted by coughing from the pews — not from illness, but from the ash that falls like snow. The common folk whisper that the flame no longer judges truth; it only records it, filing confessions in a vault that no one ever opens. The Vigil has a key. The patricians have a copy. The poor have nothing but their names, which the Censor's Hall writes in disappearing ink.

The Everflame — Faith of Ash and Incense

The state religion of Ecktoria is a syncretic faith that venerates the Eternal Flame as the divine principle, but its power flows through three great Orders, each devoted to a different Patron. The Basilica of the Unquenched Flame is the heart of the city: a cavernous space of gold mosaics, weeping saints, and the perpetual smell of beeswax and myrrh. Mass is held at dawn and dusk, the congregation coughing through the ash that falls from the censers. The priests sell indulgences in the side chapels — a silver coin for the remission of a small sin, a gold coin for a large one, a horse for a murder. The choir sings in Utaran, a language most parishioners no longer understand, but the melody is beautiful enough to make them weep.

- Order of the Oath of Flame & Light (Orthodox) — The public face of the church. They lead processions, bless marriages, and anoint the dying. Their rites are those of vows, radiance, and protection. They are the ones who light the great candles at dawn. Many are sincere; most are tired.
- Order of the Inquisitor Prime (Prosecutorial) — The Censer-Knights. They hunt untutored magic, root out demonic cults, and enforce the purity of the flame. Their rites are those of judgment, purification, and burning censure. They carry brass censers that smoke with bitter herbs, and bells that ring once for a warning, thrice for a raid. They are feared, but also respected — for they are the only ones who still take the flame seriously.
- Order of the Oath of Mercy and Grace (Hospitalier) — The healers and confessors. They run hospices, tend to the sick, and hear the confessions of the dying. Their rites are those of healing, forgiveness, and the spiral of care. They are often at odds with the Inquisitor Prime — mercy can look like leniency. The common folk love them; the patricians ignore them.

The Everflame is both beautiful and ugly. Its gold leaf covers the same marble where debtors once scratched their names. Its hymns are sung by choirboys whose families sold them for a loaf of bread. Its relics — a nail from the True Cross, a tear of Saint Lucia — draw pilgrims from across the empire, but the priests charge admission, and the poor sleep on the steps. The flame itself is a wonder: a pillar of blue-white fire that never gutters, tended by the High Priest alone. It is said to show the truth to any who stare into it long enough — and to show the same truth to the Vigil, who watch from the shadows.

The Three Ecktorias: Faction Spectrum

Ecktoria is not a single polity but a battlefield of three competing visions. Most citizens and factions fall somewhere between these poles, shifting allegiance as the grain price changes. Superimposed on them are the whispers of Maelstraeus and Livaea, who have no faction — only debtors.

- Old Blood (Patrician Traditionalists) – The ancient senatorial families who remember when Ecktoria ruled the world. They worship precedent, hoard marble, and see mercenaries as necessary filth. Their power is in law, lineage, and the silent networks of the Censor’s Hall. Clocks: PATRICIAN PATIENCE [4], BLOOD DEBT [6]. Patron whispers: Livaea — they marry for influence, betray for pleasure, and mistake cruelty for wit.

- Black Purse (Mercenary & Trade Leagues) – The new power: condotta brokers, coin-house factors, and mercenary captains who have bought what birth could not give. They care about supply lines, not bloodlines. Their loyalty is to the next contract, and their god is the ledger. Clocks: CONTRACT SPIRAL [4], PAYDAY FEVER [6]. Patron whispers: Maelstraeus — they measure profit in interest, interest in suffering, and suffering in silver.
- The Everflame (Church & Inquisition) – The priests, inquisitors, and relic-keepers who claim that the Eternal Flame is the only true sovereign. They offer legitimacy to whoever pays the tithe — and withdraw it from whoever forgets. Their power is in pulpits, processions, and the fear of excommunication. Clocks: HERESY INDEX [4], SANCTUARY VIOLATION [6]. Patron whispers: Neither — the Everflame remembers, but the Vigil has learned to filter its truths.

Superimposed on these are the Ykrul creditors (who hold Ecktoria’s debt like a leash), the Black Banners (who hold its streets like a lease), and the Vigil (who hold its secrets like a knife). A wise politician learns to balance all three — and keeps a boat ready on the Dolmis.

The Vigil — Three Faces of the Secret Police

The Vigil is not one order but three, each claiming the mantle of the old imperial secret police. They do not cooperate. They do not war. They audit each other.

- The Censer-Knights (Orthodox, Everflame) — Hunters of untutored magic. They carry brass censers that smoke with bitter herbs and bells that ring once for a warning, thrice for a raid. They answer to the Synod and the High Priest, but their true loyalty is to the precedent — the law that magic must be licensed, indexed, and taxed. A Censer-Knight raid is heralded by a single, low bell. They are the most feared and the most public. Clocks: CANDLE-SMOKE SWEEP [4], HERETIC INDEX [6].
- The Unburnt (Patrician) — Bodyguards and spies of the Amber Palace. They wear red sashes and carry no visible weapons. Their job is to ensure that no whisper of rebellion, no bread riot, no debt revolt ever reaches a patrician’s ear. They are experts at redaction — not killing witnesses, but making them forget. Clocks: PALACE SECRETS [4], REDACTED MEMORY [6].
- The Red Vigil (Maelstraeus’s Own) — Debt-collectors and interest-enforcers. They serve no noble, no church, no magistrate — only the ledger. They audit the wealthy for the wealthy, finding hidden obligations, unpaid tithes, and compound interest that has grown teeth. A Red Vigil agent never demands coin. They demand names. Clocks: INTEREST DUE [4], LEDGER OF NAMES [6].

The Vigil’s three commanders meet once a month in the hypogeum of the Arena, under the gaze of statues that weep marble tears. No record is kept of these meetings. No one admits they happen. The common folk say that if you see a Vigil agent, it is already too late — but they cannot agree on which Vigil.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (papers/favor/precedence) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo marble and fire motifs — statues that watch, flames that judge, and law that remembers every name. Also echo the Vigil's presence — a cough in the crowd, a seal on a document you did not stamp, a mirror that shows a different face.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Imperial Ruins: Every district bears half-collapsed arcades, serving as markets, courts, or shelters for mercenary companies. The Vigil knows every hidden passage.
- Competing Factions: Dukes, guilds, and priests stage processions that collide at bridges and squares, each claiming legitimacy. The Vigil collects bets on the outcome.
- Monuments as Weapons: Statues, obelisks, and colonnades are not only symbols — they are barricades, rallying points, and high ground when the city riots. The Vigil has a map of which statues can be toppled.
- Everflame Orthodoxy: The basilicas preach unity, but each sermon is a coded signal for a political camp. The High Priest plays balance while cultivating his own following. The Vigil decodes every sermon.
- Black Banner Contracts: Foreign mercenaries fill the gaps left by a shrinking citizen levy, their loyalty secured only by steady coin. The Vigil audits their pay.
- The Amber Palace Quarantine: The patricians have not left the palace in a decade. No one is certain if they are prisoners or patrons. The Vigil maintains the perimeter — and delivers the wine.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Saints & Cults):
 - St. Marcellus of the Gilded Scale (Mykkiel) — The Justiciar. His order enforces unwritten laws; reading a sealed precedent binds the reader to enforce it. His shrine is the Censor's Hall. The Vigil keeps a copy of every precedent.
 - St. Valeria of the Serpent (Isoka) — The Shedding Saint. Pilgrims who confess at her chapel forget one sin — and one kindness. Her mosaic shows a snake eating its tail. The Vigil uses her chapel to erase memories.
 - St. Lucia of the Undying Flame (Oath of Flame & Light) — The Witness of Embers. Any oath sworn over her shrine's flame cannot be broken; the breaker sees their own face in every wave until they drown. The Vigil swears oaths there — and never breaks them.
 - The Reckoner (Maelstraeus) — The Ledger Keeper. A mystery cult of coin-house factors. They offer credit at the cost of a hidden interest that compounds in blood. The Red Vigil are their debt-collectors.
 - The Ember Prefect (Heretic Cult) — A schism that believes the flame should not be contained. They meet in the arena hypogeum, chanting the Unspoken Ninth Citation. The Grand Magistrate has outlawed them three times. The Vigil has infiltrated them twice.
 - The Velvet Mask (Livaea) — A secret society of patricians who worship pleasure as the only truth. Their rites are said to last nine days. No one has ever left a rite unchanged. The Vigil watches their parties — and reports to the Unburnt.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Bitter Root: Daughters of the Cord run a hospice in the Shatterline Bazaar. They ask no payment — but they cut threads. A renegade Sister hides among the arena slaves, trying to untie her cord from a coin-house debt. The Vigil has her file.
- Malachai, the Chained Angel: A silver coin that never spends circulates among the grain-prefects. Take it, and your store never runs dry — but the coin will reappear in the mouth of a starving child. The Red Vigil uses it to mark debtors.
- The Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire: Ecktorian psions are called “Flame-Readers.” They see the future in the Everflame’s flicker. The High Priest employs three — and has never trusted a forecast that didn’t smell of smoke. The Vigil employs their apprentices.
- The Threshold Compendium: The Imperial Arena is a Class IV Poltergeist site — the collective rage of every gladiator who died for the crowd. Saikou Ira would ring a bell eight times and leave a wreath of laurel. The Vigil rings the bell nine times. The Arena answers.
- The Ninth: In any Ecktorian court, the ninth citation of precedent voids all previous. The wise stop at eight and settle. Those who cite the ninth hear a faint laughter from the marble walls — and their cases are never heard again. The Vigil cites the ninth often. The laughter does not bother them.

Ecktoria Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Flame: Crumble a crust into the Everflame. Ignore the first Bread Riots penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Ribbon: Tie a single knot in a coin-house credit ribbon. Cancel Frozen Purse or take −1 die on your next debt roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Marble: Whisper a dead debtor’s name into a statue’s ear. Gain +1 Effect when collecting from their heirs this scene, but mark Obligation to the Grand Magistrate. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Spit on the Seal: Before signing any contract, spit on the wax seal. If it sizzles, the Vigil has a copy. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

- Ecktoria (Procession): Crowds chant your name, banners block your path, trumpets announce your arrival.
- Ecktoria (Patronage): Seals break in your hand, favors are revoked, noble houses compete for your allegiance.
- Ecktoria (The Vigil): A seal appears on your documents that you did not stamp. A cough from the crowd sounds like your name. Your reflection in a polished shield has a red sash.

Extensions (Plug-in)

- Cross-Region Hooks (optional draws):
 - Aeler True Masons bid to shore a failing aqueduct; accepting stabilizes Aftershock but grants them soft leverage in the ward. The Vigil audits the contract.
 - Aelinnel Green-Market broker offers “truth-credit” on court gossip; pay later in favors or names. The Vigil pays in silence.
 - Black Banner retainer parade demands back pay on the Triumph Stairs; crowd sympathy tilts your next parley. The Vigil arrests the ringleader.
- Faction Entanglements During Travel (use en route or on city entry):

- If the party holds any Condotta Diamonds, begin with Bread Riots at +1 segment (mercenary grain trains re-routed).
- Entering with an Underway Pass (Aeler) grants +1 Position on Aqueduct Walk scenes but ticks Ducal Conflict once (guild jealousy). The Vigil notes your pass.
- Carrying Green Market tags downgrades one Censor’s Hall action but flags Inquisitorial Visit at the next temple. The Vigil compares tags.
- Trade Good Consequences (pick 1 when a haul sells):
 - Arena Steel → street duels spike → start Arena Spill at 1. The Vigil collects the weapons.
 - Relic Fragments → basilica prestige swings → tick Church Purge or grant Basilica Audience. The Vigil inspects the relic.
 - Survey Rights → boundary re-plat → downgrade one Border Dispute or upgrade a rival’s. The Vigil updates the map.
- Diplomatic Favor (minor currency):
 - Earn by resolving a public scene without bloodshed (Forum, Procession, Coin-House).
 - Spend 1 to reduce DV of a permit/audience by 1, or to ignore Blocked Bridge for one crossing.
 - Holding 2+ makes you “interesting”: start a Red List [4] that advances on snubbed patrons. The Vigil adds your name.
- Reputation Echoes (soft power):
 - Crowd-Loved (Laurel-Deed): first time per session you face a mob, set Position one step safer. The Vigil watches how the mob loves you.
 - Coin-House Trusted (Credit): ignore the first Frozen Purse; next time, it returns at +1 severity. The Vigil audits your credit.
 - Clerically Vouched (Everflame): downgrade one Inquisitorial Visit; if abused, promote Church Purge. The Vigil has a copy of your voucher.

Monuments as Mechanics (opulence with teeth)

- Processional Geometry: When acting on the Triumph Stairs, choose: +1 Effect or –1 Heat; on a miss, Rerouted Triumph advances. The Vigil stands at the top of the stairs, watching.
- Aqueduct Leverage: Securing an aqueduct span grants a one-scene high ground tag in any linked ward; if collateral hits, tick Aftershock. The Vigil knows where the aqueduct leaks.
- Forum Acoustics: Rally speeches at the Grand Forum grant an extra assist die if at least 20 witnesses; failure spawns Bread Riots at +1. The Vigil counts the witnesses.

Plug-in SB Conversions (Ecktoria flavor)

- Any 1 SB may become Crowd Drift: shift the scene’s terrain in favor of or against you (bridges clog, stairs clear).
- Any 2 SB may become Seal Revoked: void one paper (Permit/Chit/Indulgence); to avert, sacrifice Diplomatic Favor.
- On 3+ SB offer Patron Bargain: accept a visible mark (ribbon, laurel brand) to halve consequences; start a Patron Debt [6].

Hidden Orders & Ancient Conspiracies (d12 hooks)

1. The Ash Senate – a ledger of “extinguished” patrician lines still voting by proxy through funerary guilds. The Vigil has the key.
2. Surveyors of the Ninth Mile – decumanus-masters who can move boundaries with ritual math; a lost rod sets precedent across the city. The Vigil owns the rod.
3. Lantern Tetrarchy – four basilica beadles who decide which miracles are counted; the fifth lamp was broken in a purge. The Vigil lit the purge.
4. The Red Marble Compact – coin-house founders who tithe 1 in 100 coins to a secret indemnity fund used to flip coups. The Red Vigil administers the fund.
5. Archivum Umbrae – censor clerks maintaining a shadow index of names that must not stand trial (yet). The Vigil reads the index nightly.
6. Peregrine Brotherhood – ferrymasters trading in sealed confessions; blackmail that floats. The Vigil buys the confessions.
7. The Laurel of Dust – a gladiators’ mutual that chooses which champions live long enough to hold office. The Vigil chooses the champions.
8. Aqueduct Collegium Obscura – engineers who keep a second set of sluice keys; droughts become elections. The Vigil has the third set.
9. Order of the Broken Obelisk – survey-cult that believes Mile-Zero is wrong and can re-found the city with one stone. The Vigil has the stone.
10. The Funeral Republic – undertakers running a parallel courier state through catacombs and wakes. The Vigil uses their couriers.
11. The Ember Vault – a sealed reliquary under the Arena; victors’ sweat was bottled for augury. The Vigil broke the seal.
12. Triumphal Maskers – procession costumers who encode heretical theses into robe pleats and torch patterns. The Vigil decodes the theses — and sometimes agrees.

Cults & Mystery Rites (d10)

1. Children of the Phoenix (rebirth by fire): ash-marks grant +1 die vs. fear in crowds; mark Fatigue if you hesitate near open flame.
2. Verdant Laurel (blood to marble, sap to coin): once/session turn 1 Harm into 1 Coin-House Credit; start a Green Debt [4].
3. Mask of the Thirteenth (forbidden procession step): walk through a riot unmolested; next parley with clergy begins one step worse.
4. Brotherhood of the River Tongue (truth ferried at night): ask the Dolmis one yes/no; a ferryman shows up later to collect a name.
5. Candlemakers of Ever (flame remembers lies): blue flame points to falsehood; the liar dreams of you for three nights (Exposure +1).
6. Sable Standard (war saint cult): your banner ignores morale checks once; start a Blood-Tithe [4] owed to the saint’s chapel.
7. The Ninth Bell (hour that is not kept): skip a queue or sentence; next edict you need arrives late (Delay SB free once).
8. Guild of Red Accountants (sin as ledger): convert 2 SB into a Magistrate’s Postponement; add Karmic Debt [6].
9. The Marble Eaters (mortification sect): bite stone, gain +1 Effect resisting crowd crush; take Harm 1 (Stress) if you boast.

10. Torch of Saint Vessa (saint of necessary arson): sanctify a fire to purge a tag (Plague/Corruption); City Heat +2.

Religious Schisms & Trials

The Everflame Divide (choose a live schism)

1. Orthodox Basilica vs. Ember Reformers: Is miracle counted by law or kindled by need?
2. Laurel Theologians vs. Street Saints: Does glory flow down from triumphs or up from bread-lines?
3. Iconoclast Ward vs. Reliquary Keepers: Is the flame purer without images?

Schism Mechanics (table-facing)

- Heresy Index [0–6]: ticks when players publicize a stance, defy clergy, or wield cult rites in view. At 3: inquisitorial audits become common; at 6: Church Purge (Q) auto-triggers once/session until lowered.
- Sanctuary / Anathema Tags: locations acquire tags during arc scenes. Sanctuary: first harm in scene becomes Fatigue; Anathema: first social miss spawns “Proscribed Sigil.”
- Trial by Fire (mini-procedure, 3 beats):
 1. Assembly: set the forum/stair as arena; state thesis in one sentence (players or NPCs).
 2. Witness: three proofs (relic, miracle, precedent). Each proof: test Social/Arcana/Resolve vs. crowd DV; on success, reduce Index by 1 or gain Basilica Audience.
 3. Judgment: roll Crowd Mood (1d6): 1–2 mobs, 3–4 silent acceptance, 5–6 laurel toss (gain Laurel-Deed). If Index ≥ 4 , –1 to the roll.

Ecktoria – Marble and Fire

Starting Location: The Coin-House floor, marble cracked with soot lines, where votive candles burn beside melted icons.

“In Ecktoria, even faith must balance its ledgers, and the gods audit in ash.”

In... the Coin-House floor, a factor with smoke-singed ledgers offers a purse. “The Lame King moves,” she says. “And the Basilica burns with him. The Amber Palace has not answered a summons in a month. The Vigil is asking questions. I suggest you find the answers before they find you.”

Regional Motifs Coin-oaths, basilica relics, marble acoustics, augury smoke, Vigil seals.

Whispers to Offer “Bid against the city,” “Pocket the relic shard,” “Name an innocent debtor,” “The Vigil’s informer sits in the corner.”

External Clocks Threat: Procession of Ash [6]; Community: Credit Panic [4]; Anchor: Basilica Choir [4]; Vigil: Red List [6].

Complications Smoke speaks truths; coins stick to skin; a reliquary runs hot; a seal appears on your documents that you did not stamp.

Anchors at Risk A choir novice; a patron account; a Vigil informer who owes you a favour.

Escalation Beat The Basilica tolls a note only one PC hears. The Vigil hears it too.

Relief Return the shard; pay a city-debt in blood or ; route the procession elsewhere; give the Vigil a name.

Boss Seeds (Cults & Conspiracies)

- The Ember Prefect (schismatic inquisitor): Phase [8] Citation → Censure → Auto-da-fé → Purge. Lair: Everflame Cloister. Counters: relic provenance, crowd-favor, rival sermon. Vigil twist: The Prefect was once a Vigil informer. The Vigil knows where he hides.
- The Surveyor-Primus (geomantic usurper): Phase [6] Re-plat → Dispossess → Erase. Lair: Mile-Zero. Counters: Aeler measure-rods, witness line, broken rod. Vigil twist: The Primus has a Red Vigil agent as a protégé.
- Phoenix of the Arena (miracle or hoax?): Phase [10] Hype → Immolation → “Rebirth” → Riot. Lair: Imperial Arena. Counters: doused ash, Mask of the Thirteenth, Everflame test. Vigil twist: The Phoenix is a Vigil experiment. The Unburnt want to contain it. The Red Vigil wants to sell tickets.
- The Velvet Mask (Livaea’s cult): Phase [8] Invitation → Masque → Debt of Pleasure. Lair: The Amber Palace. Counters: an unbroken oath, a mirror with no reflection, a name spoken without desire. Vigil twist: The Vigil’s Unburnt faction attends every masque. They are not there to stop it.

Diamonds: Forbidden Leverage (add to §2.1)

14. Shadow Index Leaf – remove one name from the Red List for a week; add Countercoup +1.
15. Ember Writ – sanction one cult rite as “orthodox” for a scene.
16. Surveyor’s Ninth Rod – redraw one ward line unnoticed (until dawn).
17. Vigil Seal (Red) – For one scene, the Red Vigil treats you as a contractor. Interest will be collected later.

Cross-Contamination (fast ties)

- Aeler True Masons: backing an iconoclast audit grants shoring crews; bell-codes now gate temple entries. The Vigil has the bell-codes.
- Aelinnel Thorn Courts: hawthorn chaplains host “mirror sermons”; a basilica gains Sanctuary while a rival becomes Anathema. The Vigil watches both.
- Black Banners: war-chaplains monetize indulgences; clearing Payday risks +1 Heresy Index. The Vigil takes a cut.

Patronage & Power

Ecktoria’s decline is not collapse, but transformation. Wealth bleeds into patronage webs: a senator’s indulgence, a censor’s indulgence, a noble’s purse. The city’s great houses keep mercenary captains on retainer, while priests sell ritual processions as public theater and private favor. And everywhere, the Vigil watches — not to stop the rot, but to take notes.

Yet beneath the decay, two demons whisper. Maelstraeus teaches that every contract is a weapon, every debt a leash. Livaea teaches that every desire is a chain, every pleasure a payment. The patricians who once ruled the world now rule only the Amber Palace, and the Amber Palace is a gilded cage. They do not see the bread riots. They do not hear the Vigil’s footsteps. They dance. They drink. They forget that the flame remembers everything.

For the GM: Patronage should function as both opportunity and trap. Any gift (a purse, permit, or charter) binds the receiver to service, but patrons can die, fall from favor, or suddenly proscribe what they once allowed. The Vigil offers a different kind of patronage: protection in exchange for information. A party that pays the Vigil in secrets may find doors opening — and other doors closing behind them. To emphasize the decadence and dread:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (seals, ribbons, laurel crowns, Vigil marks) that can be stolen, forged, or voided.
- Let rival patrons issue conflicting "safe-conducts," forcing players to choose whose favor matters more.
- Use processions, funerals, or trials as arenas for social contests, where patronage debts surface and shift allegiances.
- Introduce the Vigil’s Faction Clock [6] to track which Vigil faction (Censer-Knights, Unburnt, Red Vigil) has the most leverage over the party. When it fills, that faction makes a demand.

Patronage in Ecktoria is not mere background — it is the engine of politics, coin, and survival. And beneath it all, Maelstraeus and Livaea are writing a contract. The city is the collateral. The poor are the interest. The patricians are the signature — and they signed in blood long ago.

Chapter 3

Acasia

The Broken Marches.

We do not speak of the Curse. We speak around it, under it, through the gaps where words used to fit. The Curse is not a thing. It is the space where a thing used to be.

I am a charcoal-burner. My family has worked these woods for three generations. My grandfather could name every tree between the Pale Causeway and the Wolfstairs Pass. My father could read a deer's track in packed clay. I can tell you where the villages used to be. The map in my head has more empty spaces than marks.

Acasia was not always like this. Once, the granaries held grain through winter. Once, the roads carried more than ghosts and tax collectors. Then the trees started dying. Not all at once—slowly, branch by branch, forest by forest. The Blackwood turned grey, then brittle, then silent. The farmers said it was a curse. The duke said it was blight. The merchants said it was the tariffs. The priests said it was the will of gods who had stopped listening.

Nobody said it was guilt. Nobody had to. Guilt is the smell of mildew on old parchment. Guilt is the way a village watches you pass without opening its gates. Guilt is the empty chair at the feast, the unmarked grave behind the chapel, the child who will not meet your eyes because their parents told them not to speak to strangers.

The truth—the one we do not speak—is that we could have saved the Blackwood. We saw the first trees wither. We saw the sap run black. We did nothing. We told ourselves it would pass. We told ourselves the duke would fix it. We told ourselves the forest was not our responsibility. And then the forest died, and the silence that followed was our answer.

The Curse of Acasia is not a spell. It is a memory. The land remembers what we did—and what we failed to do. Every broken milestone on the old Imperial Road is a forgotten promise. Every abandoned vineyard is a harvest we chose not to plant. Every bridge that leads back to the same shore is the road we refused to take.

Never sign a contract on a bridge. The river is a witness, and it never forgets a signature. But more than that: the bridge knows when you are lying. Not to the other party. To yourself.

We are the Curse now. We carry it in our silence, in our empty fields, in the way we turn away when someone asks where the children went. Acasia is not a broken province. It is a province that broke itself, one small refusal at a time, until there was nothing left to break but the people who stayed.

And still we stay. Because leaving would mean admitting we were wrong. And that is the one thing guilt cannot bear.

— Corvin, charcoal-burner of the Blackwood, who no longer names the trees because there are too few left to name

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Hardtack soaked in broth—if you have broth. If not, hardtack and hope. The granaries have been empty for three winters. The merchants sell grain at famine prices. The duke says the roads are too dangerous for caravans. The farmers say the duke owns the caravans.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To name the dead. Every Acasian child has a list of ancestors they repeat at bedtime. The list gets shorter each generation. Not because children forget. Because the dead are forgetting themselves.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Whether they have a shadow. The Curse takes shadows first. A man without a shadow is not cursed—he is already gone. His body just hasn't stopped moving yet.

What is the most common crime? Bridge-toll evasion. The roads are unsafe, the ferries are unreliable, but the barons still demand payment for crossings no one can make. The crime is not in refusing to pay. The crime is in being caught trying.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Curse began with a promise broken on the Blackwood Bridge. A baron promised his daughter to a lord of the old forest. He married her to a lowland knight instead. The forest remembered. The forest is still waiting for the wedding.

Where do people go when they die? Into the Blackwood. Burial is forbidden—the ground rejects the dead. Bodies are carried to the tree-line and left. The wood takes them. Sometimes, at dusk, you can see them walking between the trunks. They do not look back.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You walk the Broken Mile—a stretch of road that collapsed into the river a decade ago. If you reach the far side, you are forgiven. If you fall, you were not sorry enough. No one has reached the far side in seven years.

What is the most important festival? The Counting of the Names (midwinter). Every village lists its dead aloud, from oldest to newest. If a name is forgotten, the ghost walks until someone remembers. The list grows longer each year. The memory grows shorter.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The duke's son is a ghoul. He was lost in the Blackwood as a child. They found him three days later, pale and smiling. He does not age. He does not eat. He only watches. The servants know. The servants do not speak.

3.1 Acasia — “Broken Marches”

Tagline: The Empire conquered it first. The Empire left it last. Now neither remembers why.

Margravine of the Broken March (Elite): “The tithe must be paid, not merely offered. A promise written in ash and sealed with iron will is worth more than a thousand gold coins scattered on the wind. The Empire is dead. Its debts are not.”

Hedge-Witch (Commoner): “Don’t cross the Pale Causeway at dusk, especially not if you’ve got a silver tooth. The bridge’ll remember it, and next time you pass, it’ll want more than just your footfall. In Acasia, every road has a memory. The question is who pays the toll. The Empire forgot. That’s why it fell.”

Genre / Mood: Low-fantasy wasteland, mercenary realism, cursed borderlands.

Starting Location: The Pale Causeway’s last inn, walls soot-blackened by coal and a century of gossip. A bounty poster flutters beside a half-empty hearth. The innkeeper is a one-eyed woman who pours small beer without asking. A stranger at the bar offers a sealed contract: retrieve a dowry chest from a Blackwood matriarch before the Margravine’s feast day. “The chest contains a claim, not coin,” the stranger whispers. “But a claim in Acasia is worth more than gold—it is a key to a bridge that does not loop. The Empire’s surveyors marked it. Then they died.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Acasia was the first province the Utaran Empire swallowed when it turned its eyes east. The legions marched through the Pale Causeway, crushed the hill-kings, and planted their eagles in the Blackwood. For centuries, Acasia was the empire’s eastern breadbasket and its first line of defence. Grain flowed west; coin flowed east. The roads were straight, the bridges paid, and the Curse was just a farmer’s whisper.

Then the empire rotted from within. When the last Utaran emperor died and the provinces broke away, Acasia lingered for another hundred years — a ghost province whose governors still stamped Utaran seals, whose courts still cited Utaran law, whose coins still bore the emperor’s face. No one came from the west to collect the taxes. No one sent legions to enforce the peace. The Acasians kept the forms, because they had never learned to keep anything else. They had no native king, no unifying faith, no common tongue beyond the legionary’s Latin. They were the empire’s children, and when the empire died, they became orphans.

For a century they clung to the ruins. Then the plagues came. Then the famines. Then the Curse — a slow rot of roads that led nowhere, bridges that looped back on themselves, villages that woke to find their neighbours’ houses standing empty. The old imperial surveys became maps of places that no longer existed. The grain blights turned the storehouses to dust. The free companies, once hired to keep the peace, became the only law.

That was two hundred years ago.

Now Acasia is a wound that will not close. It sits between Ecktoria to the west and Vhasia to the east, claimed by both, ruled by neither. Petty kings raise their banners in burned keeps. Free Companies trade loyalty like grain, swapping colours mid-march. The Margravine of the Broken March keeps a tally of feuds, binding bloodlines to her feast days. The Lame King travels on a throne carried by debtors, making law by pointing. And the Curse — the nameless thing that makes crossroads turn back on themselves — is not a myth. It is the weight of broken promises, and Acasia is drowning in them.

South, on the marshy islands of the Amaranthine coast, the city of Silkstrand squats on reclaimed silt, trading in silk, silver, and secrets. The Acasians call it “the Sink” — a place where the Curse thins, but where law is measured in coin, not custom. Few Acasians go there. Fewer return unchanged.

What you notice first: The smell of mildew on old parchment and wet ash. The way every milestone has been recarved — first in Utaran, then in a half-dozen failed scripts. The silence of a village that heard you coming and chose not to open its gates.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never sign a contract on a bridge. The river is a witness, and it never forgets a signature. The Empire’s last governor signed a treaty on the Pont-du-Tithe. No one knows what it said. The bridge remembers.

Regional Mood: Famine, Ambition, and the Ghost of Empire

Here, the past is not a memory — it is a predator. The Utaran Empire left behind roads that lead to nowhere, laws that contradict each other, and a hunger that no harvest can fill. Acasia’s petty kings hold court in burned keeps, their crowns forged from iron nails pulled from famine coffins. The Margravine keeps a tally of feuds, binding bloodlines to her feast days. Free Companies trade loyalty like grain, swapping colors mid-march. And beneath it all, the Curse waits. It is not a monster. It is a geometry: the wrong turn, the bridge that leads back to the same shore, the bell that tolls for no funeral. In Acasia, the land itself has become a contract, and the fine print is written in mildew.

The Curse is not ancient. It is a legacy. Some say it began with the last Imperial Survey, when the surveyors tried to map every bridge, every ford, every toll—and in the measuring, broke something. Others say it was the plagues, when the dead were buried in unmarked pits and the priests forgot the proper rites. The hedge-witches say it was the empire’s own fault: they ruled Acasia for centuries but never taught the Acasians to rule themselves. When the empire left, the land had no king, no law, no memory. The Curse filled the gap.

Now the Margravine and the Lame King fight over the scraps, while free companies sell their swords to whichever claimant pays first. The hedgewitches tie red thread around bridges and leave offerings of salt at crossroads, hoping to keep the Curse from spreading. The villagers pray to saints the Empire forgot. And the roads — the old imperial roads — still march west toward a capital that no longer exists.

Prominent NPCs of Acasia

Name	Role/Title	Motivation	Rumoured Quirk
Zara “the Ledger”	Margravine of the Broken March	Keep the province from fracturing completely	She has never lost a feud; her sword is also a counting rod. She claims descent from the last Utaran governor.

Oren “ Tin Crown ”	The Lame King	Be recognised as a true sovereign	His traveling throne is carried by debtors; he pays them in promises. His grandfather was a free company captain who declared himself king.
Ysabeau	Hedge-Witch of the Blackwood Charcoalers	Survive the Curse and keep her kin from the rope	She knows which bridges eat travellers, and her price is a story that ends badly. Her grandmother witnessed the last imperial survey.
The Bride	Dowry chest claimant (Blackwood matriarch’s heir)	Recover the chest before the Margravine’s feast day	She carries a dagger in her wedding veil. The claim is to a bridge that drowned. The bridge was built by the Utaran legions.
Vladan	Free Company Captain (“The Rusted Banner”)	Find a permanent contract before winter	He has served three kings this year. He cannot remember their names. His company’s banner is an Utaran eagle, torn and stitched.

Sister Ash	Ex-Imperial surveyor	Finish the old map of Acasia	She visits villages that no longer exist. The map shows them anyway. She carries a sealed chest of the last governor’s papers.

(Pass/Ruin/Toll-Town) Broken milestone on the old Imperial Road; borders “moved” overnight. Vine-terrace hillside with an abandoned press; strangler ivy owns it now.

Spades — Places

2. Broken Milestone

[RUIN] [OMEN]

On the old Imperial Road; borders “moved” overnight.

The stone has been chiseled seven times. The last mark is still wet. The first was cut by Utaran legionaries.

3. Vine-Terrace Hillside

[RUIN] [HARVEST]

Abandoned press; strangler ivy owns it now.

The ivy has grown around a skeleton. The skeleton still holds a wine cup. The vintage was the year the last governor left.

4. Toll-Bridge Town

[TOLL] [BOUNDARY]

Over a cold river; two tolls, no receipts.

The second toll is collected by a child. The child does not speak. The bridge was built by the legions. It remembers their footsteps.

5. Wolfstairs Pass

[MOUNTAIN] [AMBUSH]

Switchbacks beneath a stonefall cliff.

The stones were placed by a landslide that knew your name. The pass was the empire's eastern gate. No army has crossed it in a century.

6. Sootfall Abbey Ruins [RUIN] [DEATH]

Bell tower intact; crypts breathing.

The breathing is a prayer. The monks are still down there. They have been praying for the empire's soul for two hundred years.

7. Hill-Motte [FORTIFICATION] [WAR]

Fresh palisade; ditch scattered with caltrops.

The caltrops are from a siege that ended last week. The bodies are still rotting. The siege was over a bridge toll. The bridge has not collected in fifty years.

8. Border-Stone Ring [BOUNDARY] [OMEN]

Carved with seven crowns; each points wrong.

The crowns belong to kings who never existed. The stones remember them anyway. The eighth crown was the empire's. It is not carved. It is implied.

9. Blackwood Charcoalers' Hollow [FOREST] [WITCHCRAFT]

Witch-posts at every path.

The witch-posts were made from the gibbets of tax collectors. The tax collectors still swing. They were collecting for the empire. They have not stopped.

10. Salt-Road Ford [RIVER] [DEATH]

Rains expose old bones in the chalk banks.

The bones are from three wars. They are not all human. The ford was the empire's salt route. The salt is still in the water.

J Iron Mine Adits [UNDERGROUND] [WHISPERS]

Held by a miners' commune; the air is full of whispers.

The whispers are the mine's memory. It remembers every collapse. The last collapse was the year the empire fell. The miners are still digging.

Q Margravine's Hunting Lodge [NOBLE] [SECRETS]

Tapestries of victories that never were.

The tapestries were woven by a blind weaver. The threads are from her own hair. The victories are Uтарan. The weaver was Acasian.

K War-Camp City [WAR] [REFUGE]

Tents around a burned keep; every banner claims the throne.

The keep was burned by its own lord. He did not want to share the heat. The lord was the last imperial governor. He died in the fire.

The last high road that survives the spring thaws.

The causeway is made of bones. The bones are from the workers who built it. The workers were Acasian. The empire paid them in promises.

His tally-rod has notches from a dozen villages. The villages are now empty. He collects for the Margravine. She does not ask where the grain goes.

3. Roadside Prior [FAITH] [RELIC]
 Three lay brothers guarding a relic.
The relic is a finger bone. The prior claims it belonged to a saint who starved to death. The saint was an Uтарan missionary. The Acasians ate his offerings.
4. Hedge-Witch [WITCHCRAFT] [KNOWLEDGE]
 Knows which bridges eat travelers.
Her price is a story. The story must have a bad ending. She has heard all the good ones. The bridges listen when she speaks.
5. Free Company Captain [MERCENARY] [FATIGUE]
 Pike and shot between contracts.
He has served three kings this year. He does not remember their names. His first contract was with a man who called himself emperor. The man is dead. The contract is not.

His paper is a single page folded into a boat. The other half is elsewhere. The other half is in the Margravine’s counting house. She does not know.
7. Salt-Baron [TRADE] [VIOLENCE]
 Hired blades; owns the ford and your timetable.
His salt is grey. It was cut with ashes from a burned village. The village refused to pay the imperial salt tax. The empire is dead. The salt is not.
8. Blackwood Matriarch [NOBLE] [VENGEANCE]
 Tends the feud like a garden.
Her garden grows tombstones. She waters them with tears—her enemies’. Her grandmother was the last Acasian to hold an imperial title. The empire took it back. She has not forgotten.
9. Ex-Imperial Surveyor [KNOWLEDGE] [LONELINESS]
 Has the last accurate map.
The map shows villages that no longer exist. The surveyor visits them anyway. She leaves offerings of bread and ink. The ghosts do not eat. They watch.
10. “King” of Three Villages [CLAIMANT] [IRON]
 Iron-nail crown, iron-will taxes.
His crown was a plowshare. He reversed the curse. The curse reversed back. He does not know.
- J Bride with No Dowry but a Claim [CLAIM] [DESPERATION]
 Daggers in the wedding chest.
The claim is to a bridge that drowned. The bride intends to collect. The bridge was built by the legions. The legions are gone. The bridge is not.
- Q Margravine of the Broken March [AUTHORITY] [FEUD]
 Half saint, half tax roll.
She has never lost a feud. Her tally stick is her sword. Her great-great-grandfather was the last imperial governor’s clerk. He stole the seal. She still has it.
- K The Lame King [CLAIMANT] [FATIGUE]
 Traveling throne; makes law by pointing.
His throne is a sedan chair carried by debtors. They owe him everything. He owes the Margravine a bridge toll. He has not paid. The bridge remembers.

A The Cursed Child of Silkstrand

[MYTH] [OMEN]

A rumor more than a person; her laughter ends sieges.

She is said to be twelve years old. She has been twelve for a century. She was born on the day the last imperial governor died. She does not age. She does not forget.

(Feud/Levy/Weather/Curse) Peat-fog; all horns sound like someone calling your name. Sudden levy—every traveler pressed for a day’s service. Bridge feud; rival banners drop the chain on your cart.

Clubs — Complications/Threats2. Peat-Fog

[WEATHER] [FEAR]

All horns sound like someone calling your name.

The name is not yours. Answer it, and the fog will take you. The fog is the empire’s last breath.

3. Sudden Levy

[AUTHORITY] [TIME]

Every traveler is pressed for a day’s service.

The levy master has a list. Your name is on it—in fresh ink. The list was copied from an imperial tax roll. The roll is two hundred years old.

4. Bridge Feud

[BOUNDARY] [VIOLENCE]

Rival banners drop the chain on your cart.

The chain was forged from a broken oath. It rattles when liars approach. The oath was sworn to the emperor. The emperor is dead. The chain does not care.

5. Grain Blight

[HARVEST] [FEAR]

Doubles the tithe; refusal means torches at night.

The blight has a face. It is the face of a tax collector who died hungry. The collector worked for the empire. The empire did not pay him.

6. Scree Slide

[MOUNTAIN] [BLOCKED]

Seals the pass; the “safe” detour is owned by your enemy.

The enemy raised the toll yesterday. He was expecting you. The pass was the empire’s eastern gate. It still remembers the legions.

7. Wedding Turns Ambush

[SOCIAL] [TRAP]

You are caught between two bloodlines.

The bride’s veil is a shroud. The groom’s ring is a knife. The feud began when the empire divided the valley. The valley has not healed.

8. Witch’s Tithe Night

[WITCHCRAFT] [DEBT]

Lights move in the woods; owe nothing or else.

The lights have voices. They are arguing over who should collect. They are the ghosts of imperial tax collectors. They have not stopped working.

9. Pox Sign

[DISEASE] [ISOLATION]

On a village gate; your escorts desert you.

The pox is a rumor. The desertion is real. The pox came with the last imperial supply train. The supply train never arrived.

10. Condotta Breaks

[MERCENARY] [BETRAYAL]

The Free Company flips colors mid-march.

The new colors are the same as the old colors. The captain just wanted to raise morale. He was hired by the Margravine. He was also hired by the Lame King. He is collecting both salaries.

J Heretic Preacher [FAITH] [RIOT]

Sparks a march; toll-gates come down in splinters.

The preacher’s text is a tax receipt. He reads it like scripture. The receipt was issued by the empire. It is still valid. No one knows to whom.

Q Imperial Pretender [CLAIMANT] [POLITICS]

Arrives; every petty lord changes tabards.

The pretender’s seal is a sunburst. The sunburst is slightly crooked. The seal was stolen from the last governor’s tomb. The governor’s ghost is following him.

K River Overruns the Levee [WEATHER] [DESTRUCTION]

The pontoon goes; your rivals don’t.

The river’s name is “Debt.” It remembers every unpaid crossing. The empire’s engineers built the levees. They calculated the flood levels. They did not calculate the Curse.

A The Curse Stirrs [CURSE] [TRAP]

No matter the road, you return to the same crossroads.

The crossroads has a signpost. The arms are labeled “Regret,” “Hunger,” “The Same.” The post was planted by the last imperial surveyor. She is still walking.

(Papers/Claims/Safe-Conduct) Toll-exemption plaque for one bridge (once); monastery letter for bed and bread on a named road.

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Toll-Exemption Plaque [TRAVEL] [ONCE]

For one bridge (once).

The plaque is a bronze leaf. Hold it up, and the toll-keeper will spit—but step aside. The leaf was minted by the empire. The empire’s mines are closed. The metal is still good.

3. Monastery Letter [HOSPITALITY] [ONCE]

For bed and bread on a named road.

The letter is sealed with a wax tear. The monks will honor it—or they will not. The abbot was an imperial clerk. He still follows the old forms.

4. Wine-Right [TRADE] [ONGOING]

On an abandoned terrace; locals will work for shares.

The wine is from a vine that grows over a mass grave. It tastes of iron. The grave holds the last imperial garrison. They were paid in promises.

5. Condotta Contract [MERCENARY] [ONCE]

A signed pike contract (one battle on your terms).

The contract is written in blood. The blood is from the captain’s own finger. The contract was copied from an imperial legionary oath. The words have changed. The weight has not.

6. Tithe-Remission Writ [AUTHORITY] [ONCE]

For a village; they owe you a season’s labor.

The writ is stamped with a bell. The bell’s clapper is a finger bone. The bell was cast from melted imperial coinage. The coinage was debased. The bell rings true.

7. Border-Stone Adjustment [BOUNDARY] [ONCE]

Move a line two fields over.

The adjustment is a lie. The truth is that the line was always there. The line was surveyed by the empire's best geometers. They are all dead. Their measurements are not.

8. Pass-Key Charm [TRAVEL] [ONGOING]

Recognized by Pale Causeway watchmen.

The charm is a knotted cord. Untie it to pass—or to stay. The cord was tied by an imperial courier. The courier's route was swallowed by the Curse. The cord remembers the way.

9. Sealed Dowry Chest [CLAIM] [MYSTERY]

Of claims, not coin; certain doors open.

The chest is locked with a riddle. The answer is a name you do not know. The name is the last imperial governor's. He wrote it on the inside. He is the only one who has seen it.

10. Mine-Share [RESOURCE] [ALLIANCE]

In the commune; they fight like they mean it.

The share is a pickaxe. The commune will lend you a miner—or a grave. The mine was opened by the empire's first surveyors. They found iron. They also found something else. They did not name it.

J Blood-Peace Charter [SOCIAL] [TRUCE]

Suspend a feud long enough to move your wagons.

The charter is a white ribbon. Blood will not be spilled while it flies—but blood will remember. The ribbon was woven by a hedge-witch. She used thread from a tax collector's uniform. The collector is dead. The thread is not.

Q Marriage Proxy [SOCIAL] [ALLIANCE]

From the Margravine; bind a hill-king to your cause.

The proxy is a wedding veil. The veil was worn by a ghost. The ghost was the Margravine's grandmother. She married an imperial legate. The legate never came home.

K The Lame King's Traveling Writ [AUTHORITY] [ONCE]

Troops must make way (for now).

The writ is a broken scepter. The Lame King's seal is a footprint. The footprint was pressed into wax by his grandfather. The grandfather was a free company captain. He could not write. He used his boot.

A Curse-Redemption Rite (Temporary) [RITUAL] [ONCE]

For one night, no crossroads can hold you.

The rite is a whisper. The whisper is a name you have never spoken. The name is the Curse's. It does not want to be spoken. It does not want to be silent. It wants to be paid.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (papers/claims/safe-conducts) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo plague and curse motifs—crossroads that turn back on themselves, bells tolling for no funeral, banners blackened by mildew, the ghost of the empire in every milestone.

Additional Features

- Feud as Currency: Any insult, accident, or rumor can birth a feud; the GM may replace an SB result with a feud-token tied to a petty lord or house. Feud-tokens act as reusable complications: once per scene, the GM can spend a feud-token to have a rival appear, a bridge close, or a village refuse aid.
- Rot & Tithe: Each market or harvest scene carries a risk of rot—add a pressure if food or coin are exchanged without a blessing or a seal. A failed roll may double the tithe or spoil stored supplies.
- The Curse Remembers: When roads or negotiations stall, the GM may quietly repeat imagery—crossroads, whispers, mildew—to remind players that Acasia itself resists resolution. If the party ignores three such omens, the Curse Stirrs complication triggers automatically.
- Empire’s Ghost: Any ancient imperial structure (milestone, bridge, fortress) may still be haunted by the echo of its original purpose. A character who makes an offering (a coin, a salute, a whispered oath) may gain +1 die on a single roll within sight of that structure. The offering must be sincere. The empire does not accept bribes. It accepts memory.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Bitter Root: Daughters of the Cord run a hospice in a burned abbey. They ask no payment—but they cut threads. A renegade Sister hides among the charcoalers, trying to untie her cord from a Rothari death warrant. She says the empire’s last debt is still unpaid.
- The Threshold Compendium: The Pale Causeway is a Class II Anchor site—the ghosts of workers who died building it still carry stones. Saikou Ira would leave a silver coin in every crack. The workers do not spend the coins. They stack them. They are building something.
- Malachai, the Chained Angel: A silver coin that never spends circulates among the toll-collectors. Take it, and your passage is always free—but the coin will taste of blood every time the Causeway floods. The coin was minted in the empire’s last year. The emperor’s face is worn smooth.
- The Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire: Acasian psions are called “Feud-Readers.” They taste the weight of old grudges in the water. The Margravine employs two—and has never trusted a settlement they didn’t whisper. They say the Curse is not a thing. It is a conversation. The empire is still talking.
- The Ninth: In any Acasian scene, the ninth toll paid at a bridge is never the last. The wise pay eight and barter for the ninth. The ninth toll is collected by a child with no name. The child is the Curse’s accountant.

Acasian Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Milestone: Crumble a crust at a broken milestone. Ignore the first Peat-Fog penalty.
- Knot the Contract: Tie a single knot in a writ’s ribbon. Cancel Bridge Feud or take –1 die on your next negotiation (your choice).
- Name to the Blight: Whisper a dead tax collector’s name into a grain sack. Gain +1 Effect when avoiding tithes this scene, but mark Obligation to the Margravine.

Decline & Patronage

Patronage here is as brittle as candle wax. The Rothari Clan holds their marches by fear and iron law—patronage from them is real, but cruel, demanding service in blood or levy. Elsewhere, noble names are little more than titles printed on parchment and sold like promises. The Margravine keeps a tally of feuds, binding bloodlines to her feast days, while mercenary captains trade loyalty for coin, switching colors with each bell.

To seek a patron in Acasia is to choose which hunger you will feed: the Rothari's iron teeth, a Free Company's purse, or the hollow blessing of a saint who may never have lived. Yet even false crowns cast shadows long enough to shelter those desperate enough to kneel. The empire is dead. Its debts are not. And the Curse is patient.

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from tithe-collectors or petty lords.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby Free Company patrols or village watchmen.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for feud-trackers or hedge-witches.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favorable road conditions.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: River reeve or Free Company captain becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to fog or bridge closure.
- Foe Appears: A rival bloodline or toll-lord's enforcer arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional feud-kin, Free Company deserters, or Margravine's guards arrive.

- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes - contract voided/levy doubled/curse triggered.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: Margravine, Lame King, or Cursed Child intervenes.

- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically - fog thickens/bridge falls/curse loops.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice - omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Acasia (Feud & Tithe): Toll collectors demand double, bloodlines take offense, wagons are seized as “payment.”
- Acasia (Rot & Famine): Grain blights spread, wells run dry, abandoned villages hold only ghosts.
- Acasia (Curse & Crossroads): Roads loop back, milestones point the wrong way, the same bridge appears twice.
- Acasia (Empire’s Ghost): A phantom legionary marches past, an imperial seal glows on a broken stone, a tax collector’s ghost demands arrears.

Boss Archetypes in Acasia

- The False King (Feud/Authority) — A petty lord or pretender who crowns themselves on the ruins of empire. Phases: Levy Demanded → Feud Declared → Hasty Coronation. Cracks: a Blood-Peace Charter suspends his authority; a Marriage Proxy binds him to a rival.
- The Witch of the Blackwoods (Witchcraft/Curse) — A hedge-witch, matriarch, or revenant who manipulates feuds and curses. Phases: Tithe of Fear → Curse of the Crossroads → Hollow Wedding. Cracks: a Curse-Redemption Rite breaks her hold; a Mine-Share gives the commune courage to defy her.
- The Tithe Collector (Greed/Extortion) — A bureaucrat-priest with writs, escorts, and the ability to summon feuds or famine with a single decree. Phases: Audit of Souls → Seizure of Grain → The Reckoning. Cracks: a Toll-Exemption Plaque voids his claim; a Wine-Right buys off his debtors.
- The Rotting Child (Mystery/Curse) — A folkloric horror tied to Acasia’s plague of false crossroads. Phases: Laughter in the Fog → The Bridge That Loops → The Feast of Ends. Cracks: a Tithe-Remission Writ fed to the fog; a Monastery Letter read aloud at the crossroads.
- The Imperial Ghost (Undead/Precedent) — The shade of the last imperial governor, still trying to collect the taxes. Phases: Audit of the Damned → Summon the Debtors → The Emperor’s Peace. Cracks: produce the original imperial charter (in the Sealed Dowry Chest), pay a wergild in the empire’s own debased coinage, or convince the ghost that the empire is truly dead.

Encounter Seeds (Quick Hooks)

- The Dowry That Walked: A Blackwood matriarch’s dowry chest has been stolen. The chest contains a claim to a bridge that never floods—and a curse that the Margravine wants broken. The chest was last seen in the hands of a free company captain who claims he is the heir to the empire.

- The Lame King's Feast: The Lame King invites the party to a feast. The feast is a trial. The food is memory. The wine is lies. The king wants to know who killed the last imperial surveyor. The surveyor is sitting at the table.
- The Curse of the Pale Causeway: The Causeway is repeating. Every crossing brings the party back to the same inn. The innkeeper is missing a finger. She says she gave it to the bridge. The bridge wants more. The bridge remembers the empire's last toll.

Chapter 4

Vhasia

The Fractured Sun.

Two crowns. One kingdom. A river so wide it might as well be a border—and oh, how the crowns love pretending it's not.

I am a Road Warden. I have served under three different banners on this same stretch of road, and the only constant is that someone always wants to collect tolls. The Northern Seigneurie and the Southern Parlement both claim the throne, both flood the river with paperwork to "prove" their right, and both are too busy arguing over seal wax colours to notice that the Fenwoods already burned Lence, and the Sun-court is a memory.

The Last Dauphin? A rumour. But rumours pay well when you're the one who started them—and I started three: that he was swapped at birth with a goatherd's child, that he's secretly a Veiled Sister in disguise, and that he's been dead for ten years, his "reappearance" a puppet show run by the Seigneurie's spymaster.

Never carry a coin that bears only one sunburst. The realm has three mints, and the wrong metal on the wrong road is treason.

— Road Warden Cerran, who has not slept in two days and is not sure which crown he serves

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Dark bread and watered wine—the wine cuts the dust from the road. The nobility eat spiced eggs and fresh cheese, but they eat behind closed doors. To eat well in public is to invite envy. Envy is a dagger.

What does a child learn before they can walk? Which colours not to wear. Black and gold are the Northern Crown's colours. Red and silver are the Southern Parlement's. A child who wears the wrong colour to the wrong village may not return home.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Which side of the road they walk on. The north side is the Crown's. The south side is the Parlement's. The middle is no man's land—literally. Bandits, spies, and messengers use the middle. So do ghosts.

What is the most common crime? Raiding across the Belworth. The river is the border, the border is a suggestion, and the suggestion is enforced by armed men on both sides. The crime is not in raiding. The crime is in being caught on the wrong bank at dawn.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Sun-court was not burned. It was bankrupted. The Fenwoods did not sack Lence—they bought it. Every judge, every clerk, every guard captain had a price. The Fenwoods paid it. The Vhasians are still paying interest.

Where do people go when they die? To the crypts beneath the Sun-court—if they can afford a plaque. The poor are buried in unmarked graves along the Belworth floodplain. The river floods every spring. The dead wash downstream, into the land of the other crown. Neither side claims them.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a chevauchée—a raiding party that burns a village in your name. The apology is not in the burning. The apology is in the promise that the village will be rebuilt with your own hands. If you burn a village and do not rebuild, you have not apologized. You have started a feud.

What is the most important festival? The Sun-return (spring equinox). Both crowns claim the sun as their symbol. On this day, both hold processions. The processions are identical. The participants do not acknowledge each other. The sun does not care.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Queen-Mother has no claim to the regency. Her son is not the Dauphin. The real Dauphin died in childbirth. The Queen-Mother's daughter was stillborn. The child on the throne is a foundling, bought from a Tulkani caravan. The Tulkani know. The Tulkani are still waiting to be paid.

4.1 Vhasia — “The Fractured Sun”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The sun may be fractured, but the embers still burn. Which claimant will you warm your hands on?

Cardinal-Regent of the Broken Sun (Elite): “The sun may be fractured, but our authority is absolute within our domains. Every coin minted here carries our blessing, and every law written bears our seal – the rest is just politics. The rest is also ash.”

Road Warden (Commoner): “I’ve served under three different banners on this same stretch of road, and the only constant is that someone always wants to collect tolls. My horn calls honest warning – best heed it. The Fenwoods burned Lence ten years ago, and now every duke with a coin purse thinks he’s king. The Queen-Mother plots, the Dauphin hides, and the Two Crowns sharpen their swords. Me? I just want to get home before the snows.”

Genre / Mood: Courtly intrigue, chevauchée warfare, fractured legitimacy, a kingdom that cannot mourn.

Starting Location: The Pont-du-Tithe, its golden arches catching fire in the sunset as pilgrims chant from both banks. A Duchy Constable in splendid armor guards the toll gate. “The Chevauchee burns,” he says, gesturing to distant smoke. “Two Crowns march to meet it. Whose seal do you carry? Speak quickly – the levy waits for no one. And keep your hand away from your sword. The bridge remembers the last blood spilled here.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Vhasia is a realm of broken coronations and split loyalties, still bleeding from a wound a decade old. Once a proud province of the Utaran empire, the unified Sun-court shattered like its heraldic sunburst when the Fenwoods of Viterra and their allies sacked the capital of Lence and cast down the old Blood line. Duke Braedyn Fenwood – father of the woman who would become Viterra’s Warrior Queen – led the assault, his iron-shod cavalry grinding the Sun-king’s army into the mud of the Ford of Ashes. They burned Lence until the mirrors melted and the very stones wept. They left the throne empty – not destroyed, but open. And they left a wound that has not healed.

Now rival dukes, duchesses, abbesses, and parlements claim the fractured light. Everywhere, signs of fracture: chipped sun-discs on milestones, worn tabards bearing half a crown, coins minted in rival cities with different suns. In Vhasia, legitimacy is as fragile as a mirror, and every oath risks breaking along the fault lines of politics, faith, and fortune.

The memory of the sack haunts every negotiation. The Queen-Mother, Elianor Everblood (née Longblood), lost her husband and her firstborn in the flames. She rules from a riverside keep, weaving alliances and hiding a secret – a Dauphin, real or false, who may be the key to restoring the Sun-court. Her son Valdais, Duke of Adria, claims the throne by blood and steel. The Two Crowns – rival dukes crowned in rival cathedrals – march their levies through fields that can feed neither. Routiers sell their swords by the season, and parlement clerks drown justice in procedure. Vhasia is not a nation at war. It is a nation that forgot how to be at peace – and that has not yet learned how to grieve.

What you notice first: The smell of old smoke and fresh ink. The way every noble's seal has a hairline crack. The constant, nervous laughter of courtiers who remember whose head rolled last season.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never carry a coin that bears only one sunburst. The realm has three mints, and the wrong metal on the wrong road is treason. Also, never mention the Fenwood name without naming the Queen of Viterra first. The wound is still raw.

Regional Mood: Crowns, Courts, and Companies

Here, the past is a weapon and the future is a debt. The Fenwoods came from Viterra with fire and iron, broke the Sun-king's army at the Ford of Ashes, and burned Lence until the mirrors melted. Duke Braedyn Fenwood led them; his daughter Veralyn – now the Warrior Queen of Viterra – was his wife's attendant and witness to the sack, a fact that complicates every border negotiation. The Vhasian nobility has not forgotten. They cannot forgive. But they cannot afford a war with Viterra, either.

So they fight each other instead.

Now every duke with a long purse and a short conscience backs a claimant. The Queen-Mother weaves alliances from her riverside keep, holding a Dauphin – perhaps her grandson, perhaps a commoner with a convincing birthmark – as a bargaining chip. The Two Crowns – Valdais Longblood of Adria in the north, and a rival claimant backed by the southern parlements – march their levies. Routiers sell their swords by the season, and parlement clerks drown justice in procedure. Vhasia is not a nation at war. It is a nation that forgot how to be at peace. And ten years later, the smoke from Lence still hasn't cleared.

The Players of the Great Game

The succession crisis has four major factions, each with a claim, a secret, and a price.

- Queen-Mother Elianor Everblood (née Longblood): Widow of the last Sun-king, mother of the claimant Valdais, and estranged from both. She holds the Dauphin – a child of uncertain legitimacy – in seclusion. Her price is a guarantee that her grandson will not be killed. Her secret: she is not sure if the child is truly of the Blood.
- Duke Valdais Longblood of Adria: The northern claimant. Nephew – or half-brother, depending on the rumor – to the last Sun-king. A tournament champion with a flawless record and a suspicious habit of opponents falling ill before jousts. His claim rests on blood and steel. His secret: his mother, Elianor, does not trust him.
- The Two Crowns (Rival Dukes of the South and West): Backed by the southern parlements and the western march lords. Their claim rests on election and expediency. Their secret: they have been known to accept Viterran gold – but never the Fenwood seal.
- The Last Dauphin (The False/Real Heir): A child of nine years, hidden in the Queen-Mother's keep. His legitimacy is a matter of faith. His existence is the only thing keeping Valdais from marching on his mother's castle. His secret: even Elianor does not know if he is truly her grandson – but she acts as if he is.

Names of Vhasia

Inspired by the fractured duchies: Francien, Norman, and Brittonic influences. Soft vowels, silent consonants, and surnames that recall a bridge, a ford, or a stained banner.

Renaud	Isabeau	de Lence	the Unbuckled
Corin	Oria	d'Aethor	Bell-Sworn

(Château/Cathedral/Forest) Wayside shrine with pilgrims tacking petitions to a scorched sun-disc; vine-terraced clos above a millstream with napping watchmen.

Spades — Places

2. Wayside Shrine — Pilgrims tack petitions to a scorched sun-disc; each parchment curls in different winds. The petitions are never answered. The shrine is a mailbox for the dead – especially those who fell at Lence.

3. Vine-Terrace — Clos above a millstream; watchmen nap, halberds traded for bottles. The best vintage is called “Crownbreaker.” It tastes like smoke and regret. The year of the sack was a particularly good harvest.
4. Bastide Square — Neat as a checkerboard; merchants pay homage to different “hours” of the Sun. The square has a gallows. It rotates to face whichever claimant lost the last duel. The wood is still green.
5. Royal Forest — Antler posts mark laws no king remembers; poachers still hang. The forest’s deer have grown bold. They wear crowns of shed antlers. Some say they are the ghosts of the old nobility.
6. Pont-du-Tithe — Toll-bridge flanked by chapels and crossbows; chains blessed by rival bishops. The chains were forged from melted sunbursts. They ring in different keys. The Fenwood army crossed here. The bridge still groans when Viterrans approach.
7. Great Fair — Outside a chartered town; counting sheds ring like bells, rumors louder still. The fair has a Court of Miracles where counterfeiterers sell to informers. The best forgery is a sunburst coin that rings true – until you test its weight.
8. Salt Pans — Wind-pumps on an estuary; gulls own the law, smugglers own the night. The salt is grey. It tastes of old tears and older debts. The smugglers carry more than salt – they carry the Queen-Mother’s letters.
9. Siege-Château — Hoardings patched, cistern low, banners cut into ragged suns. The banner’s ragged edges are from a Fenwood sword. The owner still limps. He lost his son at Lence. He fights for Valdais – but he does not love him.
10. Cathedral Yard — Cranes creak, stones fly, scaffolds bristle with rival masons’ marks. The mason’s marks are clan signs. A scratched-out mark means a dead foreman. One mason’s mark is a sunburst with a crack – the mark of the Queen-Mother’s architect.
- J Parlement Hall — Hung with faded tapestries; sunbursts spliced and re-stitched by claimants. The tapestries show battles that never happened – and some that shouldn’t have. One tapestry shows the sack of Lence from the Fenwood perspective. The Queen-Mother has ordered it burned three times. It keeps reappearing.
- Q Queen’s Causeway — Mile-long oath paved in quarried stone; half-sunk each spring. The sunken half is a graveyard for vows. The stones are slippery with old lies. The Queen-Mother walks here at dawn. She speaks to the dead.
- K Sun Palace (Lence) — Shattered mirrors, brambled gardens; courtiers playing at kingship. The mirrors were covered after the sack. No one wants to see what they show now. The courtiers pretend the king still lives. The servants know better.
- A King’s High Road — Milestones chipped of crowns; yet every army still marches it. The road is paved with the bones of tax collectors. They are not missed. The Fenwood army marched here. Their footprints are still visible in the stone.

(Lord/Court/Company) Road warden with dented badge and honest horn; vintner-guild syndic counting saints’ days as credit terms.

Hearts — People & Factions

2. Road Warden — Dented badge, honest horn; ignored by both crowns but knows the roads. His horn is cracked. It still sounds – but the note is always half a step flat. He was at Lence. He does not speak of it.

3. Vintner Syndic — Counts saints' days as credit terms, vintages as treaties; wine as diplomacy. He keeps a bottle of Crownbreaker in every cellar. He knows which vintage each duke prefers. He also knows which duke's wine is poisoned. He does not ask.
4. Abbess-Chatelaine — Rules a fortress-convent with iron accounts and sharper scripture. She has never drawn a blade. The scaffold has, on her orders. She sheltered refugees after the sack. The Queen-Mother owes her a debt. The Queen-Mother does not forget debts.
5. Routier Captain — Scarred and mercenary; prefers ransoms to loyalty; coin as conscience. He switches banners as often as his shirt. His loyalty is to the paychest – and his mother. He fought for the Fenwoods at Lence. He still has nightmares.
6. Duchy Constable — Splendid armor, empty coffers, pride swollen as a banner; glory over gold. His armor was his grandfather's. It still has the dent from a Fenwood axe. He serves Valdaïs because Valdaïs pays – but he served the old king first. He cannot forgive himself for surviving Lence.
7. Parlement Clerk — Drowns foes in procedure, fishes them out for fealty; law as a weapon. His quill is a dagger. He sharpens it every morning. He keeps a list of who voted for which claimant. The list is written in disappearing ink. Only he knows the reagent.
8. Salt-Farmer — Gabelle lessee with cudgels, writs, and a river-chart no crown has; tax as tyranny. His ledger is written in salt. One drop of water and the debts vanish – along with the evidence. He is the Queen-Mother's man. He does not say so aloud.
9. Trouvère — A scandalous lay about the last Sun-king brings knives to tavern doors. He sings the truth. That is why he sleeps in a different inn every night. He knows who really ordered the burning of Lence. He will not say. He values his tongue.
10. Marshal-Exile — The Sun-court's hammer; now wielded by whoever pays in silver. He lost the Battle of Ashes. He still sees it in his dreams – and his nightmares. He was the last man to see the old king alive. The king's last words were a curse on the Fenwood name.
- J Heretic Perfect — Preaches peace while tucking hidden daggers into parchment margins. His sermon is a code. The psalms tell you which bridge to cross – and which to burn. He is the Queen-Mother's spy. He is also Valdaïs's spy. He is also his own spy.
- Q Queen-Mother — Riverside keep; weaves alliances as if they were dowers. She has outlived three husbands and two sons. She is not mourning. She is waiting. Her grandson – real or false – will sit on the Sun-court. She will not live to see it. She has made her peace with that.
- K Two Crowns — Rival dukes, each “crowned” in rival cathedrals, neither whole. One wears a crown of iron. The other wears a crown of words. Both rust. Neither was at Lence. Neither speaks of it.
- A Last Dauphin — A rumor with a birthmark; armies march for whispers alone. He may be a baker's son. The armies don't care. They need a sun to follow. He has never seen the sun. He knows three languages, the lineage of every noble house, and the taste of every poison. He does not know if he is a prince or a puppet. He does not ask.

(Chevauchée/Law/Church) Chevauchée burning loyalty oaths as well as barns; smoke curls like scripture. Interdict falls on a county; bells silenced, trade stalls.

Clubs — Complications/Threats

2. Chevauchée [WAR] [RAID] — Raiders burn loyalty oaths as well as barns; smoke curls like scripture. The raiders wear no colors. Their horses answer to whistles – and grudges. They were at Lence. They remember.

3. Interdict [RELIGIOUS] [LEGAL] — Falls on a county; bells silenced, trade stalls, heretics prosper. The bells were melted for shot three wars ago. The silence is old. The interdict was ordered by the Cardinal-Regent – but no one knows which claimant he serves.
4. Forest Law [LEGAL] [HUNT] — Venison becomes treason; poachers hang from antler posts. The antler posts are carved with the names of the hanged. They whisper at dusk. The names include survivors of Lence who could not find work.
5. River Spate [WEATHER] [DELAY] — Ferries chained, bridges drowned, pilgrims stranded mid-prayer. The water is the color of old gold. It washed away a mint last spring. The mint belonged to a claimant who could not pay his routiers. The routiers now raid for the other side.
6. Coin Debasement [ECONOMY] [LEGAL] — Three mints, three suns, no trust; soldiers demand silver alone. The silver is from the same mine – but the stamp is a prayer, not a promise. The Queen-Mother controls two mints. Valdais controls one. The Cardinal-Regent holds the dies.
7. Parlement Divided [LEGAL] [POLITICS] — A siege laid on parchment before walls; war by paperwork. The clerks duel with citations. The loser pays the winner’s ink bill. The winner gets to draft the next round of tax levies. The peasants pay both.
8. Company Mutiny [WAR] [MERCENARY] — Unless arrears are paid – in blood or coin; mercenaries as a time bomb. The mutineers have a list. Your name is on it – or will be by nightfall. The list was leaked by the Queen-Mother’s spy. She wants the routiers to switch sides.
9. Relic Dispute [RELIGIOUS] [LEGAL] — Two abbeys claim the same saint’s bones; mobs answer with stones. The bones are actually from a cow. The saints don’t mind. They like the attention. The abbeys are backed by rival claimants. The cow was from a farm that burned at Lence.
10. Harvest Blight [ECONOMY] [WEATHER] — Bread locked behind pikes; bakers guarded as lords. The blight has a name. It is the name of a duke who raised the levy too late. His fields fed the Fenwood army. His people starved. He still rules.
- J Tournament “Accident” [CHIVALRY] [ASSASSINATION] — Hides an assassination; your favor is now evidence. The lance was filed with a prayer. The prayer was answered – but not for the target. The victim was a claimant’s champion. The killer was never found. The Queen-Mother smiled.
- Q Royalist Restoration [POLITICS] [FEAR] — Sunburst badges painted overnight on doors and graves. The paint is the color of dried blood. The badges face the wrong direction. The Queen-Mother’s agents paint them. She wants the people to remember that the Sun-court once existed.
- K Feudal Levy [WAR] [LEGAL] — Lords demand levies in days, not months, with three days’ bread. The bread is hardtack from the last Fenwood siege. It still smells of smoke. The levy was called by Valdais. The lords are his cousins. They do not want to march. They owe him.
- A Winter Campaign [WEATHER] [WAR] — Roads turn to mud, hooves to ice, armies to ruin. The snow is grey with ash. The Pass of Ashes has a sister pass now. The Fenwood army marched through the Pass of Ashes. The ghosts still march there.

(Charter/Patent/Right) Safe-conduct sealed by a duke or abbey; honored only once, on one road; burgess charter for a market ward.

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Safe-Conduct The seal is cracked. The road is watched. Use it before the seal breaks. The seal was cracked at Lence.
3. Burgess Charter The charter is a bell. Ring it, and the town answers – or it doesn't. The bell was cast from a melted sunburst. It rings true – but only for those who remember.
4. Bridge Farm — Tolls at Pont-du-Tithe for a season, if you can hold it. The tollkeepers are loyal to the last coin. Yours or theirs. The bridge was rebuilt after Lence. The stone is new. The ghosts are old.
5. Paréage Charter — Shared rule with a monastery – half justice, half rent, no peace. The monks pray for you. They also pray for your enemies. Balance. The monastery sheltered refugees after the sack. The Queen-Mother has not forgotten.
6. Wardship — Over a minor heir; lands obey you “for now.” The heir has a knife. He knows how to use it. He learned from watching you. His father died at Lence. He does not know which side his father fought for. He does not care.
7. Gabelle Lease — Salt-tax rights; lucrative, hated, and dangerous. The lease is a death warrant written in profit. Cash it wisely. The salt pans are near the Belworth. The Vhasian border is close. The Fenwood raids come at dawn.
8. Letters Patent — Raise a free-company under your banner; an army as a business. The letters are signed in blood – yours or the notary's. Both are valid. The notary lost a hand at Lence. He signs with his left. His right is buried in Lence.
9. Remission — Of feudal dues for a village; they'll march when called. The village has a long memory. They remember the last lord who promised mercy. He was a Fenwood. They do not forgive.
10. Low-Justice — Grant (stocks, fines, gallows) in a troublesome hamlet. The gallows rope is new. The notches are from the last hamlet. The hamlet was burned by routiers. The routiers were paid by a claimant. The claimant denies it.
- J Confiscation Writ — Against a royalist estate – if you can seize it first. The writ is a race. The other claimant rides a faster horse. The estate belonged to a lord who died at Lence. His widow still lives there. She has a knife.
- Q Queen's Audience — Private with the Queen-Mother; a whisper becomes policy. The audience is a chess game. She always wins – but she lets you take a pawn. The pawn is the Dauphin. Do not touch him.
- K Sunburst Warrant — Of the fallen court – most still bow if shown boldly. The warrant is a ghost. It has no power – only the power of belief. The ghost was signed by a dead king. The dead king's seal was stolen from his tomb. The Queen-Mother has the original.
- A General Pardon — Temporary: rebels absolved if they bend the knee. The pardon is a spring. It will close when the season turns. The rebels were at Lence. They fought for the old king. They fled when the Fenwoods broke the line. They are still running.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (charters/patents/rights) that change position rather than call for a roll.

- If any A appears, echo fractured sun motifs – light that splinters, oaths that crack like glass, smoke that smells of Lence, and a child who may be a prince or a puppet.

Additional Features

Fractured Seals: When brandishing a writ, badge, or charter tied to a Sun-court claimant, step Position up one step for the scene’s next interaction at a gate, court, or checkpoint. Each use advances a Legitimacy [4] clock linked to the claimant; when it fills, rivals challenge the authority on sight. The seal’s crack widens with each challenge. Eventually, it will break.

Parlement Games: If a scene touches petitions, guild disputes, or feudal appeals, the first Diamond played becomes a policy lever: treat it as two Diamonds toward swaying a decision or rewriting a custom. Afterward, start or advance a Whispered Precedent clock; when it fills, backlash spreads as other courts cite the case against you. The Queen-Mother’s clerks are masters of this. They have never lost.

Gabelle Knife-Edge: At bridges, fairs, or salt depots, convert Diamonds tied to tolls, leases, or safe-conducts into immediate passage or tariff relief for the company (no roll). Each conversion ticks a Resentment [4] clock for the locale; when it completes, expect boycotts, ambush rumors, or an audit by rival officials. The salt farmers remember Lence. They do not forget.

Vhasian Chivalry & the Round of Five Virtues: The knights of the western cantons (Ethor, Adria) follow the Round of Five Virtues: Courage, Courtesy, Mercy, Prowess, Truth. In a formal joust or a legal duel, the GM may award Victory by Virtue rather than by blood: the combatant with the higher Virtue score wins the dispute, even if they lost the physical exchange. This is the law of the tilt – and the law of the court. But at Lence, the Fenwoods showed no mercy. The knights still argue about whether chivalry died there.

The Armor Closes / The Song Escapes (Chivalric Clocks): The Cantor Alain, bearer of the Cracked Ring, sings a warning at every tourney:

- Armor Closes [6] – advances when knights choose protection over mercy, when gorgets are buckled tight, when chivalry becomes siege mentality. When full, the cantons close their borders and the raids become wars.
- Song Escapes [8] – advances when a Cantor sings the truth, when mercy is shown, when armour is unbuckled. When full, a moment of genuine connection occurs – though it may be fatal.

In Rouen, Alain still sings the Planctus Armatus each spring, and the congregation weeps for Sir Corin, who unbuckled his gorget to hear a thief’s voice and was undone by the mercy he offered. Sir Corin died at Lence. He was trying to save a child. The child is now the Dauphin – or so the Queen-Mother claims.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Seint Michel, the Judge of the Scar (Mykkiel): The Order of the Gilded Scale maintains the Chivalric Ledger – a record of every oath sworn and broken in the cantons. A page torn from this ledger can serve as a single-use Claim String (gain +1 Position in any court). The Order’s justiciars are feared and respected; they never unbuckle their gorgets, and they have never lost a case. The Queen-Mother keeps a copy in her riverside keep, wrapped in a grey shroud. The page that records the Fenwood oath of safe passage – broken at Lence – is still blank. The Order will not write it. They are afraid of what will happen if they do.

- Seint Isabeau, Who Slumbers Amongst the Lilies (Ikasha): In the Ethorian marches, knights whisper prayers to Seint Isabeau when they long to set aside their steel. Her shrine is a hawthorn grove where armour must be left at the gate. Pilgrims who enter bare-skinned and speak a true regret find that their next wound heals in a single night – but they dream of a woman in white who asks, “Will you remember how to be touched?” Those who return to the grove a second time are never seen again. The knights who survived Lence do not go near the grove. They are afraid of what they might forget.
- Seint Evroul of the Cairn (Mor’iraath): In the high passes of the Ethorian marches, a rusted knight in an unopened helm haunts the old barrows. He is the patron of those who carry a blood-debt and cannot rest. To call upon him, one must pour a cup of salt water at a cairn and name the wrong done to your house. He will witness one blow; if it lands, the foe is Marked by the Cairn – any spirit may locate them for a year. If it misses, the blow turns inward. The Marshal-Exile carries a scar from such a bargain; he does not speak of it. He named the Fenwoods. The blow missed. He still does not understand why.
- The Order of the Sunken Cup (The Hospice of the Broken Blade): A grey-robed hospice in the ruins of Lence treats the wounded of both crowns. They ask no payment, but they record every name in a ledger that never dries. The Restorationists suspect they are spies for the Queen-Mother; the Two Crowns accuse them of erasing debts. Sister Oria, the hospice’s custodian, is also the keeper of the Lantern-Rites House on the Belworth – neutral ground where even claimants must leave their blades at the door. The ledger has a page for every person who died at Lence. The page is still being written. The ink is still wet.
- The Ninth: In any Vhasian court, the ninth citation of precedent voids all previous. The wise stop at eight and settle. Those who cite the ninth are said to hear a faint laughter from the marble walls – and their cases are never heard again. The laughter is the dead king’s. He was the ninth king of his line. He died at Lence. He is still laughing.

Vhasian Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Sun: Crumble a crust onto a cracked sun-disc. Ignore the first Chevauchée penalty. The sun-disc should be from Lence. The older the crack, the better.
- Knot the Seal: Tie a single knot in a charter’s ribbon. Cancel Parlement Divided or take –1 die on your next legal argument (your choice). The ribbon should be black. Black is for mourning.
- Name to the Salt: Whisper a dead claimant’s name into a salt pan. Gain +1 Effect when collecting debts from their faction this scene, but mark Obligation to the Queen-Mother. The salt pan should be on the Belworth. The dead claimant’s name should be spoken only once. The Queen-Mother will know.
- The Lence Candle: Light a candle in the ruins of Lence. For the next scene, any oath sworn by candlelight is binding – but the candle will gutter if the oath is false. The dead will witness. They do not forgive.

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Rival officials or court guards take notice.
- Noise: Parlement clerks or routier patrols are alerted.
- Trace: Trackers or tax collectors mark your route.
- Delay: A setback costs time or a favourable legal window.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.
- Lence Echo: A flash of smoke, a distant scream, a child’s face in a window. The memory of the sack surfaces. The GM gains 1 SB to spend on a fear effect.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: A duchy constable or abbess-chatelaine begins responding.
- Position Lost: Legal challenge or road closure costs you advantage.
- Foe Appears: A rival claimant or free-company arrives.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test.
- Claimant’s Agent: A spy working for Valdias, the Queen-Mother, or the Two Crowns reveals themselves. They demand a favour or a bribe.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional routiers, parlement guards, or ducal forces arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool or weapon becomes unusable.
- Major Twist: A writ is voided, an interdict declared, or a levy called.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1 or an appropriate Condition.
- The Dauphin’s Name: Someone speaks the child’s name aloud. The Queen-Mother’s spies are everywhere. The party is now on her radar.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates fully.
- Authority Arrival: The Two Crowns, Queen-Mother, or Marshal-Exile intervenes.
- Scene Shift: A chevauchée hits, the river floods, or the parlement erupts.
- Patron Omen: An omen appears, a blessing is lost, or a curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn.
- The Sack Relived: Smoke rises from Lence. The Fenwood banners appear on the horizon. It is a false alarm – or is it? The party must test Resolve (DV 4) or lose 1d4 Fatigue from remembered terror.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Fractured Authority: Seals break mid-signing, legal papers rewrite themselves, badges refuse honour.
- Legal Warfare: Court decisions reverse, precedents are cited against you, writs expire prematurely.
- Sun Symbolism: Sun-discs crack underfoot, light splits into contradictory shadows, oaths shatter like glass.

- Lence's Shadow: A ghost appears – a soldier, a child, a king. It asks a question. Answering costs a memory. Refusing costs a curse.

Patronage & Power

In Vhasia, power flows through the remnants of imperial authority, fractured legitimacy, and the careful manipulation of legal and religious institutions. Former Utaran provincial structures still provide a framework for governance, but competing claimants to the Sun-court have created a complex web of overlapping jurisdictions and conflicting loyalties. The true power lies with those who can navigate this legal maze and maintain the appearance of legitimate authority.

But beneath the charters and the writs runs a deeper current: the memory of Lence. The Fenwood sack was not just a military defeat; it was a wound to the soul of Vhasia. Every negotiation, every duel, every sealed document carries the weight of that loss. The Queen-Mother plays a long game, her Dauphin a card she may never play. Valdais wants the throne his father could not hold. The Two Crowns will accept any solution that leaves them richer. And the common folk – the farmers, the salt-panners, the road wardens – just want the raiding to stop.

They will wait. They have waited ten years. They can wait longer.

For the GM: Patronage in Vhasia revolves around legitimacy, legal documents, and the ability to command respect from institutions that no longer have a clear central authority. Rewards often take the form of charters, writs, and official positions that can be leveraged into greater influence. To emphasize the post-sack grief and the fragile peace:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (seals, badges, writs) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided – especially if they bear the old king's seal or the Fenwood mark.
- Let rival claimants issue conflicting authorities, forcing players to choose whose favor matters more – and whose memory of Lence they are willing to invoke.
- Use the parlements, cathedrals, and châteaux as arenas for social contests, where knowledge of law and custom determines success – and where the mere mention of the Fenwood name can shift the tide.
- Introduce the Lence's Shadow mechanic: whenever a scene involves a legal dispute, a military maneuver, or a negotiation with a noble who lost family in the sack, the GM may spend 1 SB to invoke the memory of the burning. The Position worsens by one step, and the losing party may gain the Haunted Condition.

In Vhasia, your papers are your power, and your power determines whether you rule or are ruled. But your memory of Lence – and how you use it – determines whether anyone will follow you.

The Vacant Throne & Campaign Clocks

For long-form political campaigns:

- Vacant Throne Clock [10]: Advances when a claimant gains a major advantage (battle, noble defection, foreign alliance). Retreats when the party brokers a truce or exposes a weakness. When full, a claimant takes Lence and declares themselves king. The Queen-Mother will not live to see it.
- Armor Closes [6]: Advances when knights choose protection over mercy, when gorgets are buckled tight, when chivalry becomes siege mentality. When full, the cantons close their borders and the raids become wars. The Fenwoods taught Vhasia that mercy is a weakness. The knights have not forgotten.

- Song Escapes [8]: Advances when a Cantor sings the truth, when mercy is shown, when armour is unbuckled. When full, a moment of genuine connection occurs – though it may be fatal. The Cantor Alain has been trying to fill this clock for ten years. He is still trying.
- Claimant’s Coup (per claimant): A 6-clock that advances when that claimant wins a Parlement vote, a joust, or a skirmish. When full, they march on Lence. The Dauphin – real or false – watches from the Queen-Mother’s keep.
- Lence’s Reckoning [8]: Tracks the party’s engagement with the memory of the sack. Advances when they aid a survivor, recover a relic, or speak the truth about what happened. When full, a survivor reveals a secret: the old king’s last words, the location of a hidden treasure, or the true parentage of the Dauphin. The secret will change the succession.

Boss Seeds (three-phase foes)

- The Red Marshal (Exiled Sun-court hammer) – Phases: Chevauchee Call → Banner Turn → Lists to War. Cracks: Letters Patent buys one round of obedience; General Pardon lets a unit stand down. He was at Lence. He ran. He has not forgiven himself.
- Cardinal-Regent of the Broken Sun (scarlet gloves) – Phases: Interdict Blade → Seal Both Ways → Confessional Leak. Cracks: Queen’s Audience cancels Interdict Blade once; a Synod Indulgence treats a church check as controlled for one scene. He was not at Lence. He blessed the Fenwood banners before they marched. He does not speak of it.
- The Parlement Spider (chief clerk; quills like daggers) – Phases: Motion to Delay → Counter-Citation → Filed at Dawn. Cracks: Sunburst Warrant opens a “royal window”; a Burgess Charter lets a town court overrule once locally. He keeps the lists. He knows which nobles voted for the Fenwood peace. He does not show the list to anyone.
- The Two Crowns (rival dukes) – Phases: Contradictory Edicts → Levy in Hours → Coin Trial. Cracks: Sunburst Warrant + public mass unites them for one scene; General Pardon calms levy unrest once. They were not at Lence. They sent levies. The levies never returned. They pay the widows’ pensions. They do not visit the graves.
- The Queen-Mother (Elianor Everblood) – Phases: Weave the Web → Unveil the Dauphin → The Sun Rises Again. Cracks: produce proof of the Dauphin’s illegitimacy, convince Valdais to kneel, or find the old king’s true heir (a child hidden in the Mistlands). She has outlived three husbands and two sons. She will outlive you.

Legendary Sites & Trials

- Tournament Ordeal (Bastide Square) – Declare Purse, Patent, or Pardon as stakes. Win to cash a matching $\diamond$; lose and spawn Tournament “Accident”. The square was built on the site of a mass grave from L
- Cathedral Scaffold Assize – Argue law atop creaking beams; each good point moves Position up; each slip marks Exposure. A Paréage Charter lets you call a recess once. The cathedral was rebuilt after the sack. The old stones are in the foundation. They still remember the fire.
- Pont-du-Tithe Vigil – Keep the bridge peaceful through dusk: clear 3 segments on Bridge Peace by feeding pilgrims, quieting relic zeal, and paying one tithe from your purse. The bridge was the first structure the Fenwoods burned. The replacement stone was brought from Viterra. It still smells of smoke.

Chapter 5

Viterra

The Hedge-Law Realm.

Every hedge here marks not just a boundary but a principle—the careful balance between order and freedom, justice and mercy. Our law grows like the hedges themselves, tended with precision and patience.

I am a Queen’s Justiciar. I have never lost a legal duel. My opponents have a habit of falling down stairs. I do not push them. The stairs remember their debts.

Viterra breathes with the careful rhythm of precedent and petition. Once a proud kingdom before becoming a Utaran province, it is now reborn under a Warrior Queen who rules by legal precision as much as military might. The realm’s true sinews lie not in steel but in writs, charters, and the ancient rights that bind lord to tenant, crown to county, and church to common.

But do not mistake us for gentle. The Queen’s Peace is not a promise—it is a contract, renewed each morning by every magistrate, every justicar, every clerk who opens a ledger. And across the Belworth, the Vhasians still claim our hedges are theirs. Let them try.

Never cross the Belworth without a charter recognized on both banks. Viterran law and Vhasian claim fight every crossing, and the river takes the losers.

— Justiciar Elodie Venn, who invoked the Right of Acknowledgment and watched a father speak truth to his son for the first time

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Barley porridge with a drizzle of honey—if you own bees. If not, porridge with salt. Salt is the currency of the poor. Honey is the currency of the hopeful.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To recite their lineage back three generations. Every Viterran child knows their grandparents' names, their grandparents' trades, and their grandparents' debts. A child who cannot recite their lineage is a child without standing. Standing is everything.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Whether they carry a seal ring. A seal ring means they have the right to make contracts in their own name. A stranger without a seal ring is either a servant or a criminal. In Viterra, the difference is a matter of paperwork.

What is the most common crime? Boundary disputes. A hedge moved three feet east. A milestone replaced under cover of darkness. A ford declared "private" when it has been public for two centuries. The courts are clogged with such cases. The lawyers are rich. The hedges are patient.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Queen is not a warrior. She has never drawn a sword. Her reputation was forged by a propaganda campaign run by her spymaster. The spymaster is dead. His successor is more discreet.

Where do people go when they die? To the family plot—if they have a family. The landless poor are buried in parish cemeteries, their headstones marked with a single word: "Anonymous." The ghosts of the anonymous wander the hedgerows at dusk. They do not remember their names. They remember their debts.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You petition the hedge-court for a "writ of contrition." The writ requires you to state your wrong aloud, in public, while holding a handful of earth from the wronged party's land. If the earth crumbles, you are forgiven. If it holds, your apology is not accepted. You may try again next season.

What is the most important festival? The Opening of the Rolls (autumn). Every county sends its tax records to the capital. The procession is a week long. The documents are carried by children, so that the next generation may learn the weight of obligation.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Codex of Precedents has a missing page. It was torn out fifty years ago, during a trial for treason. The page contained the precedent for executing a monarch. The Queen knows. The Justiciars know. The page is hidden in a lead-lined box beneath the hedge-court at Thornwood. The hedge-court is haunted. The ghost knows where the key is.

5.1 Viterra — “The Hedge-Law Realm”

Quick Reference

Tagline: Every hedge is a boundary. Every boundary is a claim. Every claim is a blade.

Warrior Queen (Elite): “The hedge that is not defended is only a suggestion. And the law that is not enforced is only a memory. I will have both remembered — in stone, in blood, and in the ledgers of every parish from the Belworth to the Dolmis.”

Fen Reeve (Commoner): “The dikes hold back more than water — they hold back chaos. Every rod measured, every stone placed, keeps the flood from washing away not just our fields but our very way of life. Across the Belworth, the Vhasians still claim our hedges are theirs. Let them try. We have lawyers. We have swords. Sometimes they are the same people. The Queen’s peace is a contract; she signs it each morning with a sword. I just hope the ink holds.”

Genre / Mood: Post-imperial consolidation, legal warfare, border adventurism, the fragile crown.

Starting Location: The Hall of Dawning tilt-yard at first light. Dawn-knights drill in armor polished like mirrors. Beside them, advocates rehearse arguments with the same intensity. A Queen’s Justiciar slides a parchment across an oaken rail. “Three charters, one road across the Belworth. The Vhasian claimant says the bridge is theirs. The local reeve says it’s crown land. The abbey says it’s a pilgrimage, not a toll. Carry the Queen’s writ, break the Quiet Tolls, and make them agree — by clause or by cut. The Earls are watching, and the Queen has only just secured the throne. Fail, and you’ll give her enemies the excuse they need.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Viterra breathes with the careful rhythm of precedent and petition — but also with the raw, unhealed scar of a kingdom that threw off the Utaran yoke and is still learning to stand alone. Once a proud, independent kingdom before the legions came, Viterra never forgave the empire. It was the first to break away when the Utaran Imperium faltered, its hedge-laws and parish courts preserving a stubborn, deep-rooted identity that parchment and wax could never erase. Now, under a young and untested Warrior Queen, Viterra is trying to remember what it means to rule itself.

But the crown is not secure. Queen Veralyn Everblood took the throne only after the sudden death of her brother, King Baldwyn Brightside, who reigned for barely two years before succumbing to a swift, mysterious illness. His death was a wound the kingdom has not healed. The succession was contested: the earls of the northern marches, who remember when their ancestors ruled as petty kings, demanded concessions; the barons of the western borderlands, many with Vhasian blood and Vhasian gold in their pockets, whispered that a woman could not hold the crown. The Queen has spent her first year in the saddle, riding from keep to keep, sealing charters with her own seal, settling feuds with her own justiciars, and — when necessary — proving her right to rule with a blade in her hand. The throne is secured, for now. But the kingdom is a patchwork of loyalties, and every hedge hides a knife.

The realm’s true sinews lie not in steel but in writs, charters, and the ancient rights that bind lord to tenant, crown to county, and church to common. Every hedgerow, every parish stone, every ferry crossing carries the weight of custom older than memory. Yet there is no single, unified law. The Queen's law competes with the earls' law, with the barons' law, with the ancient custom of the fens, with the Ubral clan law that still holds in the high passes, and with the Vhasian claims that bleed across the Belworth. A deed that is valid in Valora may be worthless in the Marches. A judgment that holds in a crown court may be overturned by a hedge-moot at dusk. The very question which law is law is the central argument of the kingdom.

Viterra is not a nation at peace. It is a realm that wages law as war, and war as law. The Queen's Peace is not a promise — it is a contract, renewed each morning by every magistrate, every justicar, every clerk who opens a ledger. And the ink is still wet on many pages.

What you notice first: The smell of damp parchment and fresh ink. The clatter of writ-runners' boots on cobblestones. The way every noble's hand rests on a seal ring — and every commoner's hand rests on a hatchet.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never cross the Belworth without a charter recognized on both banks. Viterran law and Vhasian claim fight every crossing, and the river takes the losers.

Regional Mood: Hedge, Crown, and Claim

Here, law is a blade. The Warrior Queen rules from Valora, her throne a bench of precedents. She is young, untested, and surrounded by counselors who mistake caution for loyalty — and by courtiers who still whisper the name of her dead brother. The old Fenwood dukes — whose ancestors sacked Lence and left the Vhasian Sun-court fractured — still hold vast estates in the northern marches, and their claims across the Belworth keep the border smoking like a low fire. The earls of the north, descendants of the old hill kings, watch her every move, waiting for a misstep. The barons of the west, many of whom swore oaths to Vhasian claimants before they swore to her, smile with teeth that glitter with coin from across the river. Every spring, the Queen's justiciars ride west with warrants and escorts, demanding homage from villages that have paid Vhasian tithes for a generation. Every autumn, Vhasian routiers raid the grain convoys, and the legal duels that follow are fought with steel and citation alike. The border is not a line on a map. It is an argument. And the Queen intends to win it.

North, the Ubral clans watch from their cairns, ready to rekindle feuds if a Viterran levy crosses the passes. South, Thepyrgos sends clerks and spies, testing the edges of Viterran jurisdiction with every disputed toll. And in Theona, the Three Greens mumble old curses while Viterran bailiffs try to count their cattle — and always miscount by one. The Queen's rule is not yet secure. Every charter she signs is a challenge. Every justiciar she sends is a declaration. Every duel fought in her name is a step toward a throne that is still being carved.

Legal challenges may escalate to physical confrontation. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The auditors work by candlelight. The shadows on the walls look like gallows.
6. Border Snarl — Three courts arrest the same hay-cart; whose hay is it? Which lord’s charter takes precedence? Bribes flow like wine. Frontier justice often involves armed standoffs.

‘[LAW]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ The hay is from a field that was Vhasian last spring. Now it’s Viterran. The field hasn’t moved.

7. Isle Refusal — Theona withholds levy; the quays choke on rumor, ships idle while lawyers debate maritime law and ancient treaties. Naval blockades become legal enforcement actions. ‘[POLITICS]’ ‘[LAW]’ Theona’s envoy carries a hawthorn branch. The Queen’s justiciars will not touch it.

The ultimate legal weapon. ‘[LAW]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ The challenge is written on both sides of the parchment. There is no blank space to refuse.

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Ferry Priority — Belworth crossing (once); a horn answers, though perhaps the wrong ferry; customs officials look the other way for the right coin. Legal right of way backed by armed escort. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The priority token is a writ signed by both banks. The ink on one side is newer.

4. Market License — Valora’s square; a guild nod still needed, but the right seal on the right parchment opens many doors. Legal protection from merchant guild enforcement. ‘[TRADE]’

The license is written on vellum from a Vhasian abbey. The irony is noted.

5. Dawn Escort — Four lances at dawn; loyalty waxes and wanes with pay, but their presence keeps lesser men from troubling you. Legal authority to enforce your writs. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
The lances are from the Fenwood armory. The Fenwood dukes have their own plans.
 6. River Charter — Guaranteed haul on a grain artery — weather permitting and proper duties paid to the right officials. Legal right protected by river patrol. ‘[TRAVEL]’
The charter is stamped with a seal that looks like a crown — or a sunburst. No one can agree.
 7. Map Correction — A hedge moves, borders shift, lawsuits bloom; a new survey can make or break a man’s fortune overnight. Legal survey backed by armed surveyors. ‘[LAW]’
The surveyors carry chains and swords. The swords are for when the chains disagree.
 8. Customs Seal — Fairport for Dolmis cargo; honored today, disputed tomorrow, but tonight it clears the way for what needs moving. Legal immunity from customs enforcement. ‘[TRADE]’
The seal is a wax crab. It pinches when pressed.
 9. Thing Ruling — Sharp local bite, but appeals run swifter than oaths; justice swift but not always just, depending on which purse feeds the judge. Court decisions enforceable by local levy. ‘[LAW]’
The ruling is carved on an oar. Break the oar, and the ruling breaks with it.
 10. Salt Allotment — Winter depot; the Queen’s writ opens doors, old hands still count sacks, but the right connections ensure the best salt reaches the right tables. Legal monopoly backed by military force. ‘[TRADE]’
The salt is from a pan worked by Ubral exiles. They still count in clan measure.
- J Wardship — A minor fen-keep; men-at-arms “for now,” a tutor has plans, but the right guardian can be found for the right price. Legal guardianship with military authority. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
The ward is a child. The child has a seal ring. The ring is older than the kingdom.
- Q Queen’s Audience — Private; her questions strike like thrusts, but her favors can elevate a man from nothing to something overnight. Royal decree carries immediate enforcement power. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
The audience lasts one hour. The paperwork lasts a generation.
- K Ducal Warrant — Fenwood to enforce customs; old power bows, new power watches, but the parchment carries weight in any court. Legal authority backed by noble house military. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
The warrant is signed in blood — or ink that looks like blood. The difference matters at trial.
- A Duel Sanction — Right to challenge in legal combat; the Queen’s seal makes it official, Dawn-knights serve as seconds, the winner takes all legally. Ultimate legal enforcement mechanism. ‘[LAW]’ ‘[COMBAT]’
The sanction is a coin. Heads you duel, tails your opponent chooses the weapon.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (writs/charters/priority) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo hedge-law motif — boundaries blur, charters contradict, precedent splinters, and the careful web of legal authority shows its cracks. Legal warfare escalates to physical conflict.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Hedge-Law Momentum: When a valid writ, charter, or warrant is presented in the proper parish, step Position up one category on social or logistical actions in that locale for the scene. The first contradiction starts a Border-Lace [4] clock; advance each time competing papers are invoked.
- Beacon & Bell Chain: If two adjacent beacons or brotherhood bells are under your influence, convert one Club draw into a travel delay for others while the party proceeds with improved Effect for movement and logistics. The signal draws scrutiny; the GM may bank 1 SB tied to local authority.
- River-Right Window: At a ferry, tidework, or customs stair, play any Diamond tied to crossings or seals to open a short window of lawful passage: one convoy passes uninspected, or one cargo clears at priority. The window closes immediately if a storm, audit, or levy card is revealed.
- Legal Duel Protocol: When legal disputes cannot be resolved through argument, parties may challenge each other to a duel. The winner's position becomes legally binding. Requires proper sanction and seconds (see Duel Sanction Diamond).
- Vhasian Claims: Any Viterran noble with land across the Belworth may invoke a Ducal Warrant to attempt to collect rents or enforce judgments in Vhasia. Doing so starts a Border Snarl clock, as the Vhasian claimants are unlikely to cooperate.
- Theona Contest: The Warrior Queen's authority over the Three Greens is nominal at best. Any attempt to enforce Viterran law in Theona triggers an Isle Refusal complication, and the local taboos may twist the law into knots.
- The Succession's Shadow: The sudden death of King Baldwyn Brightstide and the contested succession left deep scars. Any legal dispute that touches on inheritance, legitimacy, or royal authority is automatically one step more volatile. The GM may spend 1 SB to introduce a witness, a document, or a rumor related to the succession crisis.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - * Saint Elodie of the Unburdened Knot (Inaea / Oath of Mercy and Grace):
A legendary figure from the early days of Viterran independence, Saint Elodie was a hedge-priestess who wandered the disputed borderlands, binding feuds with red thread and forgiveness. Her most famous miracle was the Unknotting of the Fenwood Vengeance — a blood feud that had run for nine generations. She took a strand of hair from each family's eldest, tied them into a single cord, and then cut the cord in half, declaring: "The past is severed. What you owe now is not to the dead, but to the next stranger who asks for bread." The families feasted together for the first time in centuries. Her shrines are wayside posts where travellers leave a knotted cord; the first person to untie a knot and offer it to a stranger in need is said to receive her blessing (+1 die to their next act of mercy or reconciliation). The Temple of Light has never canonised her — she was too folk, too female, too hedgerow — but the common folk remember. The Queen's justiciars respect her precedent: A severed debt is not a gift. It is a thread that now binds you to the living." (Some scholars whisper that Saint Elodie was not a priestess but a mortal avatar of Inaea, the Spider's Daughter, or a wandering Runekeeper of the Oath of Mercy and Grace. The Church of the Everflame calls her a heretic; the fen folk call her grandmother.)
 - Saint Michel of the Gilded Scale — Mykkiel. The law that does not bend; the judge who cannot be bought.

- Saint Isabeau of the Lilies — Ikasha. The dream of setting aside the crown; the mercy of forgetting duty.
- Saint Evroul of the Cairn — Mor’iraath. The oath that outlasts the oath-taker; the debt paid in blood and stone.
- The Hedge King — The Traveler. The road that belongs to no lord; the path that finds its own way.
- The Brightside Martyr (folk cult) — A local veneration of King Baldwyn Brightside, who died before he could rule. His followers believe his ghost still rides the borders, and that the Queen rules in his name — not her own.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Hedge-Seal (The Dike Covenant): Covenant judges in the eastern parishes adjudicate disputes over river tolls and inheritance. They carry no weapons, only a set of iron scales and a copy of the Hedge-Law Tables. A ruling from the Order is binding in both Viterra and the Vhasian marches, but any party who lies before them forfeits their right to appeal. The Warrior Queen has granted them a charter; the Fenwood dukes consider them spies.
- Saint Cuthbert of the Fen (The Traveler): A legendary reeve who walked the flooded dikes during the Great Storm and lit every beacon by hand. His shrines are stiles and bridge posts; travellers who touch the iron ring on his shrine and speak a destination find the road holds firm. The Temple of Light has absorbed his cult, but the fen folk still leave offerings of eels at his cairns.
- The Cog-Cults of the Northern Hills (The Clockwork Monad): In the high parishes near the Ubral border, secret fraternities of millers and surveyors believe that law is a machine that can be perfected. They meet in abandoned watermills, measuring boundaries with brass chains and reciting the Canons of Proportion. The Everflame calls them heretics; the Queen’s justiciars ignore them because their charts are always accurate.
- The Salt Sworn of the Eastern Coast (The Pale Shepherd): Along the Dolmis shore, a syncretic cult tends to the drowned. They build cairns of salt stone and leave no offerings — only the names of the lost, carved into driftwood. The Temple of Light has tried to suppress them three times; each time, the mission ships have been found adrift with no crew and a single name carved into the mast: Oblivion.
- The Ninth: In any Viterran court, the ninth citation of precedent voids all previous citations. The wise stop at eight and settle out of court. Those who cite the ninth are said to hear a faint laughter from the marble walls — and their cases are never heard again.

Viterran Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Hedge: Crumble a crust at a parish boundary stone. Ignore the first Border Snarl penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Writ: Tie a single knot in a charter’s ribbon. Cancel Audit Freeze or take –1 die on your next legal argument (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the River: Whisper a dead claimant’s name into the Belworth. Gain +1 Effect when arguing against their heir’s claim this scene, but mark Obligation to the Queen’s Justiciar. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

- The Brightside Candle: Light a candle in memory of King Baldwyn before a difficult legal proceeding. On a roll that includes a 1, you may reroll that die once — but if you still fail, the ghost of the dead king is said to watch from the shadows. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

- Viterra (Legal Warfare): Court decisions reverse without warning, witnesses recant, duel seconds change sides.
- Viterra (Succession Politics): A document surfaces bearing King Baldwyn’s seal; a northern earl declares the Queen’s writ invalid in his lands; a baron offers to switch sides — for a price.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Survival): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Thorn Hedge.
- Cut the Charter (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a Ducal Warrant is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Assize (Resolve + Lore): On a hit in Audit Freeze, you pick whose ledgers are examined; on a miss, the GM does.

Legal Combat System (Summary)

When legal disputes cannot be resolved through negotiation, parties may engage in formal legal duels. These combine verbal sparring with physical combat:

Phase 1: Pleadings

- Each advocate presents their case (Wits + Sway vs. DV 3)
- Success grants +1 die to the next phase
- Failure creates 1 SB that the opponent can spend

Phase 2: Cross-Examination

- Attack opponent’s arguments (Wits + Insight vs. DV 3)
- Success inflicts Fatigue 1 on the opponent
- Critical success forces opponent to answer truthfully

Phase 3: Trial by Combat (if unresolved)

- Physical combat with legal stakes (Body + Melee or relevant combat skill)
- Winner’s position becomes legally binding
- Loser suffers legal consequences (fine, loss of claim, imprisonment) plus physical harm

Boss Seeds (three-phase foes)

- The Violet Clerk (Master of Counter-Seals) — Phases: Produce Earlier Patent → Split the Writ → Seal Fast. Cracks: a Queen’s Audience overrules his seal; a Duel Sanction forces personal combat; a Map Correction voids his boundary claim.
- The Thorn Captain (Queen’s Quiet Hand) — Phases: Queenspace Zone → Duel Warrant → Swap the Field. Cracks: a Map Correction reveals a loophole; a Dike Allotment lets you claim the field as “flood zone”; a Border Routier testifies to the Queen’s favor.
- The Saffron Abbess (Keeper of Bell-Law) — Phases: Wrong Hour → Bless or Damn → Mixed Tribunal. Cracks: a Queen’s Justiciar invokes crown supremacy; a Border Routier bribes her bell-ringer; a Thing Ruling from Theona forces her to recuse.
- The Brightside Claimant (Pretender) — Phases: Produce the Lost Charter → Rally the Northern Earls → March on Valora. Cracks: find proof that the charter is a forgery; convince Earl Morcar to stand with the Queen; survive a legal duel with the claimant's champion.

Legendary Sites & Trials

- Belworth Stairs Ordeal — Cross the river without a charter. On success, you prove that possession is nine-tenths of the law. On failure, the river takes your name — and your cargo. (Wits + Survival vs. DV 5.)
- Hall of Dawning Vigil — Spend a night in the tilt-yard. At dawn, you recall a forgotten legal precedent. Gain a one-use Precedent Edge (+1 die in any court). The ghost of a dead duelist may challenge you to a legal dream-duel. (Spirit + Lore vs. DV 4.)
- Hedge-Moot at Dusk — Settle a boundary dispute by walking the hedge. Each successful navigation test (Wits + Survival) clears 1 segment from a Border Snarl clock. A miss plants the thorn of a future feud (advance Border Snarl by 1).

Extensions (Plug-in)

- Legal Dial (Crown ↔ Local Custom): Track the party's stance on authority.
 - Crown High: +1 Position when invoking royal writs, charters, or the Queen's name; first appeal to local custom starts one step worse.
 - Local High: +1 Effect on hedge-law, parish rights, or ancient precedent; first royal petition starts one step worse.
 - Center the dial by hosting a mixed moot or surrendering a contested seal to a neutral third party.
- Courtroom Mini-Game (fast trial):
 - Lay three stones: Precedent, Equity, Force.
 - Argue a point (roll Lore+Diplomacy vs. DV 3). On a hit, move one stone to your side. On a miss, the opposing advocate gains Citation Edge.
 - Win two stones to secure a temporary Court Ruling (treat as a Diamond for one scene).
 - Halric's Interjection (2 SB): flip Precedent, but start Whispered Precedent [2] with the losing side.
- Cross-Border Tensions (fast pressure):
 - Two opposed clocks: Queen's Peace vs Border Fire (size by highest rank in the seed).
 - Each leg, choose Viterran Road (safe, slow), Vhasian Claim (fast, risky), or Ubral Pass (hidden, costly).
 - Advantage: Vhasian Claim→Viterran Road (shortcuts), Ubral Pass→Vhasian Claim (concealment), Viterran Road→Ubral Pass (supplies).
 - Spend a Ducal Warrant to shift one segment from Border Fire to Queen's Peace.
- Start-of-Scene Rumors (1d6):
 1. Wrong Wax: a rival's seals softened; +1d to forgeries this scene.
 2. Empty Beacon: tower unmanned; travel faster, scrutiny harsher.
 3. Dawn-Lane Cleared: first convoy action gains +1 Position.
 4. Clerk's Wedding: filings delayed; first petition ignores Audit Freeze.
 5. Fen High Water: ferries slow; river-charters count double value.

6. Mask at Progress: someone uses your name at court; +1d to social opens, +1 SB banked by GM.

- Plug-in SB Conversions (Viterra Flavor):

- 1 SB → Hedge Shift: a boundary moves; increase DV by 1 for navigation or legal rolls this scene.
- 2 SB → Citation War: increase DV by 1 unless you produce a precedent (spend a $\diamond$ orrecallapastruling).
- 3+ SB → Seal Crack: a writ loses half its value; swap one held $\diamond$ foralesserrightuntilre-witnessed.

- Reputation Echoes:

- Court-Favored: once/session, downgrade Audit Freeze to a minor delay; the next document you present is scrutinized (+1 DV).
- Fen-Tested: +1 Position when resolving dike or flood crises; legal arguments about water rights start one step worse.
- Double-Sealed: +1d with both royal and local courts in a truce scene; any betrayal earns Border Snarl from both sides.

- Cross-Region Hooks (quick integration):

- Ubral (Stone & Oath): A Ducal Warrant acts as a Guest-Token once at a clan hearth, but starts a Feud Rekindled tick if you collect tolls twice in a tenday.
- Thepyrgos (Synod Law): A Queen’s Audience can suspend a synod interdict — but starts Whispered Precedent in Thepyrgos.
- Vhasia (Fractured Sun): A Duel Sanction is recognized on the Pont-du-Tithe — but a rival abbey can turn it into Parlement Divided on a Club draw.
- Theona (No Ninth): Ferry Priority overrides a local taboo once; if the Ninth custom is in play, the writ “forgets” one clause on use (GM banks 1 SB).

Conspiracy Flourishes (keep it close, keep it quiet)

- Hedge-Moots at Dusk: Parish elders “trim hedges” while trading sealed whispers.
- Cipher Roses: Folded writs stamped with thorn-petals; one petal missing marks a false clause.
- Mirror Hours: Beacons flash lawful signals — reversed for those who know the counter-code.
- Eel-Letters: Oiled parchment smuggled in eel-baskets; ink runs in water, truth does not.
- Quiet Steel, Quieter Quills: Dawn-knights duel at first light; advocates settle three duels before breakfast with ink alone.
- Progress Masks: Courtiers wear legal devices as masque motifs (seal, chain, beacon) to signal faction at a glance.
- Bell Penance: A single off-hour peal grants amnesty to those who confess a clause before the twelfth echo.
- The Brightside Prayer: Whispering the dead king’s name before a legal proceeding is said to turn the judge’s heart — or curse the speaker.

Patronage & Power

In Viterra, power flows through the careful application of law, the management of ancient rights, and the delicate balance between imperial legacy and reclaimed sovereignty. The Warrior Queen maintains authority through a combination of military might and legal precision, while the old duchies and local officials wield influence through their knowledge of traditional customs and hedge-law. The true power lies with those who can navigate this complex legal landscape and maintain the appearance of legitimate authority while building genuine support.

But remember — in Viterra, law is warfare. Every document is a weapon, every courtroom a battlefield, and every advocate a soldier. The pen cuts as deep as any blade, and legal victory can be as decisive as military conquest. And beneath it all runs the shadow of the dead king, Baldwyn Brightside, whose brief reign and sudden death left a wound that has not healed. The Queen's rule is lawful — but is it right? The earls whisper. The barons scheme. The ghost of the past walks the hedgerows at dusk.

For the GM: Patronage in Viterra revolves around legal documents, local rights, and the ability to command respect from institutions still finding their post-imperial identity. Rewards often take the form of writs, charters, and official positions that can be leveraged into greater influence. To emphasize the fragile crown and the contested succession:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (seals, writs, charters) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided — especially if they bear the dead king's seal.
- Let rival duchies and Vhasian claimants issue conflicting authorities, forcing players to choose whose favor matters more.
- Use the courts, parishes, and muster grounds as arenas for social contests, where knowledge of law and custom determines success.
- When legal conflicts escalate beyond words, transition naturally to physical confrontation with appropriate stakes.
- Introduce the Succession's Shadow as a recurring complication: old loyalties, forged documents, and the ghost of the dead king can upend any legal certainty.

In Viterra, your papers are your power, and your power determines whether you rule or are ruled. But when words fail, steel speaks — and the law says both are valid. The Queen's Peace is a contract. She has signed it in blood. Will you?

Chapter 6

Thepyrgos

City of a Thousand Stairs.

Every stair climbed is a word in the great conversation between earth and sky. This city is not built—it is grown, stone by stone, law by law, until the very architecture speaks wisdom.

I am a Bell-Runner. I know every step that creaks a warning and every landing that whispers gossip. The bells tell the city's mood better than any lord—three chimes means business, six means trouble, and nine means the hunters are coming.

The Synod rules here with the delicacy of a brick wrapped in velvet—they hate unsanctioned magic like it's a personal insult, but they adore infrastructure, especially when it's shiny, expensive, and comes with a side of indulgences they can sell to the faithful. The Chain-Lanterns move at dawn, their brass censers swinging, their bells tuned to the frequency of latent magic. In the university's forbidden tiers, the Witness and the Ninth arm rival fraternities with citations and curses, and no one is sure which side the Archon secretly favours.

Never let a bell-ringer count your breaths. The Chain-Lanterns pay well for names that ring false on the test stairs.

— Sofia, Bell-Runner, who ties a knot in her hair for each hunter she has outrun

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Flatbread with olive oil and a boiled egg—if you are a clerk. If you are a student, bread and water. If you are a professor, bread, water, and a single fig. The fig is a status symbol. The status is "I have not been audited."

What does a child learn before they can walk? To read a bell schedule. Thepyrgos runs on bells—dawn bells, market bells, curfew bells, trial bells. A child who cannot read the bells cannot cross the city without a guardian. A child without a guardian is a child who will be sold to the university for dissection.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their step count. Thepyrgos has a thousand stairs. A stranger who counts them aloud is either a pilgrim or a spy. A stranger who climbs them in silence is either a native or a ghost.

What is the most common crime? Unsanctioned magic. The Synod licenses every spell cast within the walls. An unlicensed cantrip is a misdemeanour. An unlicensed healing is a felony. An unlicensed summoning is a death sentence—not for the caster, who will be executed, but for the summoned, who will be bound to the city's foundation as a "structural consultant."

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Silent Stair is not silent. It whispers. The whispers are the confessions of the dead—scholars who died in the university's service, their secrets recorded in the stone. The Chain-Lanterns listen. They do not share.

Where do people go when they die? To the catacombs beneath the university. The catacombs are a library of bones. Each skeleton is labelled with the scholar's name, their thesis, and the date of their death. The unlabelled bones are the ones who died before they could finish. They are still writing.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You submit a "retraction" to the Synod's Committee on Ethical Correction. The retraction must be published in the public square, read aloud by a herald, and witnessed by at least three notaries. The fee is 50 silver. The shame is free.

What is the most important festival? The Convocation of the Steps (summer solstice). Every citizen climbs the thousand stairs to the upper citadel. At the top, the Archon reads the names of the dead from the past year. The names are carved into the steps as they are read. The steps are getting crowded.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Archon is a fraud. He never passed the Synod's examination. His degree was purchased from a disgraced dean whose signature is forged on every document. The forger is still alive. They live in the catacombs. They have the original quill.

6.1 Thepyrgos — “The City of Unfinished Proofs”

Quick Reference

Tagline: Every stair is a question. Every answer is a debt. The Ninth and the Witness argue over who holds the receipt.

The Archon (Elite): “Every stair climbed is a word in the great conversation between earth and sky. This city is not built – it is grown, stone by stone, law by law, until the very architecture speaks wisdom. But the stairs remember more than the living. They remember the ones who never came down.”

Bell-Runner (Commoner): “I know every step that creaks a warning and every landing that whispers gossip. The bells tell the city’s mood better than any lord – three chimes means business, six means trouble, and nine means the hunters are coming. But on the ninth bell, the stairs themselves answer.”

Genre / Mood: Scholarly vertical city, Byzantine bureaucracy, Grecian folk horror in the hinterlands, metaphysical war between memory and forgetting.

Starting Location: The Synod Hall at dusk. Gold-glass mosaics glitter as a Matriarch reads a scroll aloud. “The Beacon Crown sees traitors in the smoke. A child’s talent was sold to the Commissary last night. Find the informer — or the next stair seized will be yours. And if you hear a stair creak where none exists, do not turn around. The Ninth is counting.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Thepyrgos is both realm and city, built on the bones of the drowned Astroegro Empire. The capital rises in tiers of towers, terraces, and endless stairs above the Dolmis shore – but the stairs are not stone. They are fossilised vertebrae, the spine of a leviathan that Khemesh dragged under when the last emperor broke a covenant older than the sea. Once a Utaran province, now a nation unto itself, Thepyrgos is famed for its universities, libraries, and debating synods, where precedent and philosophy weigh as much as pikes or coin.

The Astroegro were a human civilisation of formidable magic, the ancient rivals of the Valewood’s Empire of Leaves. Their ruins litter the hills and swamps south of the city, and their legacy haunts every threshold. When the Empire of Leaves fell, Lethai-thora refugees – high elves who had served as archivists and lore-keepers – fled across the Black River and were granted sanctuary in Thepyrgos. Generations later, their descendants still walk the city’s tiers, their silver hair and ink-stained fingers a quiet reminder of a pact older than the synod. Many now hold chairs at the university, tend the forbidden archives, or secretly serve the Witness or the Ninth.

Outside the city, the countryside is a rugged coastal landscape of limestone hills, olive groves, and whitewashed villages – but the weather is warmer, wetter, and the valleys are choked with reed-filled marshes. This is the land of the Hyro people, the surviving descendants of the Astroegro. The Hyro carry the fracture of their ancestors in their blood. A child born in the hills might dream in geometries that do not exist. A farmer might hear the stones whispering in a language no living throat can shape. The Chain-Lanterns and other Witch-Hunter Commissariats ruthlessly patrol these villages, using bounty postings, candle-smoke tests, and stair-seizures to identify and kidnap children with arcane talent. The Hyro have learned to offer substitutes – a memory, a false name, a lock of hair – at crossroads, hoping the Hollow accepts the payment.

In the university's forbidden tiers, the Witness and the Ninth fight a proxy war via fraternal orders and occult mystery cults. The Witness wants the Astroegro Vaults remembered but sealed; the Ninth wants them opened, to trigger a Great Unlearning that would erase the concept of debt from the world. No one is sure which side the Archon secretly favors. And in the ruins of the Astroegro, something still ticks – gears of black glass, locked doors that hum, and the occasional survivor with eyes like burning tar who speaks of a pressure from below.

What you notice first: The endless chime of bells from different tiers, never quite in sync. The smell of brine, olive oil, and candle wax. The way locals glance at the sky when a child coughs – and then at the nearest crossroads. The quiet grace of the Lethai-thora archivists, who never seem to blink.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never let a bell-ringer count your breaths. The Chain-Lanterns pay well for names that ring false on the test stairs. But worse: never ask a question of a stair that has no end. The Ninth is listening, and it will answer.

Regional Mood: Stairs, Bells, and the Argument of Patrons

Here, every ascent is a plea and every descent a confession. Thepyrgos the city is a vertical labyrinth of stair-rights, rope-guilds, and synod edicts that shift with the tide. Thepyrgos the province is a haunted countryside of hidden talent and state-sanctioned abduction. The Hyro keep their arcane children in root cellars and haylofts, praying the hunters take the neighbour's instead. The Chain-Lanterns move at dawn, their brass censers swinging, their bells tuned to the frequency of latent magic. In the university's forbidden tiers, the Witness and the Ninth arm rival fraternities with citations and curses, and no one is sure which side the Archon secretly favors. The Lethai-thora maintain the great archives, but they are divided – some serve the Witness as faithful recorders, others whisper to the Ninth in darkened scriptoria. And in the ruins of the Astroegro, something still ticks – gears of black glass, locked doors that hum, and the occasional survivor with eyes like burning tar who speaks of a pressure from below.

7. Archive Hour — Library of Keys; one shelf opened to you; knowledge as power. ‘[SECRET]’ The shelf is sealed with a riddle. Solve it, or the key will break. The riddle is about the ninth step.
8. Bellmark — Lawful right to ring a tower bell (summons the watch); sound as law. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The bellmark is a brand on your palm. Show it, and the watch bleeds for you — once. The blood is a witness.
9. Watchlight Code — Today’s beacon and mirror signals; navigation as paper. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The code is written in lemon juice. Heat it to read, then hide it again. The heat is a confession.
10. Synod Indulgence — One proscribed chant or rite permitted (for you). ‘[MAGIC]’ The indulgence is a bell-note held in a jar. Break the jar to release it. The bell-note is a name.

- J Pronoia Grant — Temporary farm/tax of a terrace hamlet; land as income. ‘[TRADE]’ The grant is a wooden token. Present it to the village elder — if she is still alive. The elder is a stair.
- Q Synod Audience — Private with the Matriarch and clerks; wisdom as policy. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The audience is held in a fog hollow. What is spoken there is never written. The fog is a witness.
- K Archon’s Writ — Palikars escort you between towers; authority as escort. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The writ is a bell-rope. Tie it to your belt, and the guards will know your voice. The rope was a stair.
- A Golden Key — Open or seal any city gate once; access as power. ‘[MAGIC]’ The key is a finger bone. The lock is a gauntleted fist. It will work — once. The fist is the Ninth’s.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (keys/rites/papers) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo height and sound motifs — bells that carry, wind that remembers, stairs that echo with purpose.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Bell-Law: Bells are law made sound. Once per session, a Bellmark or tower bell summons the watch, a levy, or a decree. False rings stain a reputation; the Synod may inquire. The ninth ring is never false — it is always the Ninth.
- Stair-Rights: Every stair is owned, owed, or leased. A token bypasses barricades and tolls; climbing the wrong stair without leave sparks a riot or a duel. The Unfinished Stair has no owner — only a debtor.
- The Unfinished Stair Clock [6]: Tracks the party’s entanglement with the hidden architecture of Thepyrgos. Tick it when you use a hidden stair, ask a question the Synod cannot answer, or speak a true name of an Astroegro ruin. At 6 segments, the party discovers a new hidden stair — one that leads to an Astroegro Vault — but they are also marked. The Witness’s attention falls on them. Their reflections in mirrors begin to lag by a heartbeat. The Chain-Lanterns receive a vision of their faces. Reduce the clock by feeding a memory to the Ninth’s Coterie (lose a fact, a skill point, or a Bond) or by recording a truth in the Synod’s archives (gain Obligation to the Witness).
- The Offering at the Crossroads (Hedge Gift): Once per session, a Hyro character (or someone who has learned their customs) may leave a substitute at a crossroads — a written name, a lock of hair, a childhood memory. For the next scene, they are invisible to the Chain-Lanterns (cannot be tracked or identified by candle-smoke). The substitute becomes a Debt Token that the GM may cash in later (the Hollow accepted it; the Hollow will ask for more).
- The Candle-Smoke Test (GM Tool): When the Chain-Lanterns test a village, the GM rolls 1d6. On a 1-2, they find a gifted child (the party must intervene or witness a tragedy). On a 3-4, they find a substitute (a false name, a hidden memory) and leave. On a 5-6, the village has already paid in silence — no raid occurs. The party can influence the roll by offering their own substitute (use a Boon to shift the result by 1).

- The Astroegro Singing (Player Tool): A Hyro character can hum a fragment of an old empire song. The song has no words — only pressure. When hummed at a ruin, it may open a hidden door. When hummed at a Chain-Lantern, it may cause their lantern to flicker. Each use advances the Unfinished Stair clock by 1 (the past is waking).
- Lethai-thora Archivists: The high elf refugees have integrated into the city’s scholarly elite. They are the keepers of the deepest archives and the most secret keys. A character with Lethai-thora heritage (or who earns their trust) may gain access to the Archivists’ Mark — a brass key that opens one restricted door in the Library of Keys per session. However, the Archivists are not monolithic; some serve the Witness, others the Ninth. Choosing a side may alienate the other faction.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Unwritten Citation — The Witness. A precedent that exists only in the margin.
 - The Bell-Founder — Mykkiel. The law that rings true, even when it hurts.
 - The Abyssal Pressure — Khemesh. The weight beneath the city; the debt that the deep remembers.
 - The Silent Stair — The Ninth. The step that is never counted, the threshold that opens only once.

The Astroegro Vaults

Beneath the city, nine vaults. The Synod knows of three and has sealed them with Witness-branded wax. The Ninth’s Coterie has found a fourth. The other five are still buried, waiting for the right key — a true name, a specific death, a memory that has never been spoken.

Each vault contains:

- A weapon (a bell that rings the target’s true name, a lens that shows the death of anyone you name, a stone that erases a page from the world’s ledger).
- A guardian (a spirit of an Astroegro archivist, bound to defend the vault with its last calculation).
- A cost (to open the vault, you must sacrifice something the empire valued — a memory of salt water, a dream of drowning, a confession of hubris).

The Ninth’s Goal: Open all nine vaults simultaneously. The resulting “unlearning” would erase the concept of debt from the world. No one would owe anything to anyone. The Hollow would starve. The Witness would have nothing to record. The Ninth would become the only law: forgetting.

The Witness’s Goal: Keep the vaults sealed, but remember them perfectly. Every weapon, every secret, every crime of the Astroegro must be recorded in the Synod’s archives — not to use, but to witness. The Witness does not want to prevent the Ninth’s plan; it wants to be the one who writes down what happened.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Astroegro Remnant (Khemesh): Deep beneath the Beacon Crown, a sealed chamber contains a working Astroegro orrery. Its gears are carved from abyssal glass, and it still ticks. Those who listen too long hear a voice whispering the true names of drowned emperors. The Chain-Lanterns have posted a perpetual guard; they say the orrery is a beacon for something that should not surface.

- Saint Methodia of the Silent Stair (The Witness): A legendary archivist who climbed the Ninth Stair of the Library of Keys and never came down. Her ghost is said to appear to those who speak a truth the Synod has buried, offering a single citation that can overturn any edict. The price is a secret of equal weight, and the ghost never forgets.
- The Cog-Cults of the Clockwork Monad: Underground fraternities of gear-smiths and logicians who believe the Astroegro Empire fell because its geometry was imperfect. They meet in the basements of the Ropeyard Terrace, trying to reconstruct the lost orrery. The Chain-Lanterns tolerate them because their calculations sometimes predict talent blooms. Heretics from the Everflame call them clock-worshippers; the Cog-Cults call themselves the True Iterators.
- The Daughters of the Cord (The Bitter Root): A hospice in the lower tiers is run by grey-robed women who ask no payment, but they take names. They are tolerated because they treat the poor for free, but the Commissariat suspects they also hide gifted children. A renegade Sister hides among the bell-runners, trying to unbind her Hollowed from the Chain-Lanterns' ledger.
- The Savage Heart (Red Maw): In the highland villages west of the city, a bear cult has arisen. They believe the only way to escape the Commissariat's hunts is to become the hunter. They wear cured skins and speak in growls, and they have begun hunting Chain-Lantern patrols. The Archon has declared them outlaws, but the villagers leave offerings of raw meat at their shrines.
- Zakov's Astroegro Foundation: The pirate city of Zakov is built on top of a sunken Astroegro port. Smugglers occasionally pull up black glass artifacts from the deep channels, which find their way to Thepyrgos' black market. The Ninth's Coterie pays handsomely for such relics; the Witness's archivists try to buy them first.
- The Ninth: In any Thepyrgos scene, the ninth bell rung in an hour opens a threshold. The wise stop at eight and cover their ears. Those who ring the ninth are said to see a pale figure standing on the Beacon Crown's mirror tiles — waiting to collect a name.

Thepyrgos Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Stair: Toss a crust onto a rung before climbing. Ignore the first Tremor penalty. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Knot the Rope: Tie a single knot in a crane line. Cancel Rope Guild Interdict or take -1 die on your next lift (your choice). '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Name to the Smoke: Whisper a hunter's name into the Beacon Crown's fire. Gain +1 Effect when evading the Chain-Lanterns this scene, but mark Obligation to the Synod. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Offer the Substitute: Leave a written false name at a crossroads. The next Candle-Smoke Test against you automatically fails — but the Hollow gains a Debt Token on you. '[SUPERSTITION]'

Region-Specific SB Options

- Thepyrgos (Vertical City): Ropes fray without warning, cranes swing cargo unexpectedly, tower windows show wrong views.
- Thepyrgos (The Unfinished Stair): A hidden stair appears behind the party. The Ninth is counting. The Witness is writing. The stairs have no end.

The Magic Colleges (University Extensions)

- College of Ladders & Lines — geomancy, architecture, constraint; stairs as sigils, capstans as circles.

- College of Bells & Beacons — acoustics, omen-fire, signal calculus; law made audible, augury made measurable.
- College of Waters & Weights — alchemy, cistern rites, dyes; solutions, precipitates, and lawful flow.
- College of Names & Oaths — nomikon theurgy; citations that bind, clauses that compel.
- College of Mirrors & Haze — illusion, scrutiny; seeing, being seen, un-being seen.
- College of Quiet — ethics of death, memory rites; permitted remembrances — anything more is heresy.

The Witch-Hunter Province (Commissariat Extensions)

Thepyrgos-the-Province funds Witch-Hunter Commissariats — ministries with bounties posted per ward. Notices hang on stair-landings; bells announce hunts lawful and hunts less so. The Chain-Lantern order is the most feared, but others compete for quotas.

Hunter Hearts (faces of the persecution)

- Commissary-Exarch — Writs in triplicate; quotas in private.
- Bounty-Reader — Weighs children like coin; “verification” by bell.
- Pardoner-Chaplain — Sells absolution to informers; keeps a careful ledger.
- Stair-Runner Informant — Knows which doors open to the right knock.
- Chain-Lantern Captain — Commands the most feared order; his lantern reveals truth through flesh.

Hunter Clubs (pressures and sweeps)

- Bounty Posting — New price on “untutored talent”; crowds turn into nets.
- Candle-Smoke Test — Lines at the Blue Cistern; smoke curls toward the Gifted.
- Commissary Sweep — Ladders chained; a whole tier searched under horn.
- Quieted Child — An “accident” near the Exam Stair; evidence goes missing.
- Chain-Lantern Raid — Dawn assault on a hamlet; children taken before the rooster crows.

Hunter Diamonds (leverage and reprieve)

- Witness Pardon — Informer absolved and paid; cancels one legal fallout once.
- Archon’s Clemency — Suspends a bounty clock for one named; bell-marked and public.
- Hidden Stair Token — Through a maintenance run unseen; good for one group escape.

Detection & Denial (Fast Procedures)

Scry & Deny (evading the tests)

1. Mask the Trace: dye, salt, bell-oil; pick one (each grants +1 die to one approach).
2. Pick the Test: Smoke, Sound, Mirror. State how you spoof it (alchemical veil, bell overtones, angle games).
3. On a hit: cancel a Candle-Smoke Test or Proctors’ Gate tag for this scene. Consequence: start Bell Debt [2] or Rector’s Notice [2].

Bounty Economy (quick table, GM picks or 1d6)

1. Whisperer (faint talent): 1 purse; informers abundant.
2. Spark-Hand (cantrip): 2 purses; “rehabilitation” promised.
3. Mirror-Bent (glamour): 3 purses; seized at once.
4. Bell-Singer (acoustic): 4 purses; Synod claims jurisdiction.
5. Oath-Breaker (binding): 5 purses; Exarch insists on custody.
6. Quiet-Worker (death-ethic): 6 purses; College of Quiet petitions for trial.

Scenario Starters (Plug-and-Play)

The Bright Child on the Exam Stair Hook: A Bell-Runner begs you to get a latent child to campus before the dawn sweep. Complications: Candle-Smoke Test, Commissary Sweep, a jealous Street Thaum. Relief: Trade a Latency Seal for testimony; or ring a lawful Bellmark to create a corridor — accept Censure Murmurs [2].

The Black Ledger of Bounties Hook: The College of Quiet wants proof that a Commissary inflates prices to fill quotas. Complications: Synod Summons, Smuggler’s Ladder, Chain Jam. Relief: Publish via a Nomikon colloquy (gain Synod Indulgence); or sell it to the Archon (gain Archon’s Clemency but start Faculty Feud [4]).

The Golden Key and the Silent Stair Hook: A dying Archivist gives you a Golden Key. “It opens the stair the hunters fear.” Truth: The stair leads to the Beacon Crown’s secret basement — a prison for children who passed the smoke test. Relief: Free the children and expose the Commissariat (gain Archon’s Clemency for the whole party, but start Exarch’s Claim at full); or seal the stair forever (gain Golden Key to use elsewhere, but the children are lost to memory).

The Ninth Vault Hook: A fragment of an Astroegro weapon has been unearthed in a hill village. The Ninth’s Coterie and the Synod both want it. The village elder offers it to the party — if they can offer a substitute that satisfies the Hollow. Truth: The weapon is a bell that rings the true name of anyone you name. Its guardian is the ghost of the Astroegro archivist who sealed it. The ghost will not speak to anyone who has not climbed the Unfinished Stair. Relief: Climb the stair, speak the archivist’s true name, and take the bell — but the stair adds a segment to the Unfinished Stair Clock. Or destroy the bell with a memory of the Astroegro’s fall (lose a cherished memory permanently). Or give the bell to the Synod (gain a Synod Indulgence) or to the Ninth’s Coterie (gain a Debt Token from the Ninth).

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Stealth): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Fog Bank.
- Cut the Stair (Presence + Lore): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a stair token is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Quake (Body + Athletics): On a hit in Tremor, you pick who keeps their footing; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Bell & Inquisition)

- The Bell-Exarch (Nine Bans) — Phases: Candle-Smoke Sweep → Orchestrated Silence → Synod Coup. Cracks: ring a forgotten bell, expose a false bounty, survive a night in the Beacon Crown.
- The Astroegro Engine (Pressure from Below) — Phases: Gears Turn → Whispers Become Names → Seiche. Cracks: abyssal glass shard, survivor testimony, the Lighthouse-Patriarch's mirror turning clear.
- The Ninth's Advocate (Living Stair) — Phases: Count → Omit → Forget. Cracks: speak a true name that the Ninth does not know, offer a memory the Witness has not recorded, climb the Unfinished Stair and refuse to answer the Ninth's question.

Patronage & Power

In Thepyrgos, power flows through elevation, education, and the precise application of law — but also through the hidden architecture of the Unfinished Stair. The Archon maintains authority through a complex web of guilds, synods, and civic institutions, but the real power lies with whoever can climb the stairs that should not exist. Social mobility is literally upward mobility, with stair-rights, bellmarks, and archive access serving as both currency and status symbols. But the highest status belongs to those who have seen the top of the Unfinished Stair — and remembered how to return.

The Lethai-thora, as the city's most respected archivists, hold a special kind of power: they know which shelves are watched, which keys are false, and which doors lead to the Ninth's vaults. Some whisper that the Archon is secretly a Lethai-thora puppet; others say the real ruler is the ghost of an Astroegro emperor, still counting stairs in the deep.

For the GM: Patronage in Thepyrgos revolves around access — to towers, to knowledge, to the right to climb, and to the hidden stairs. Rewards often take the form of keys, passes, or legal exemptions that can be leveraged into greater influence. To emphasize the metaphysical war:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (tokens, keys, papers) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided.
- Let rival guilds and the two Patrons (Witness and Ninth) issue conflicting rights, forcing players to choose whose favor matters more.
- Use the synods, towers, and staircases as arenas for social contests, where knowledge of law and custom determines success — but where the Ninth's silence and the Witness's memory can tip the scales.
- Introduce the Unfinished Stair clock as a campaign tension; every time the party uses a hidden stair, they advance the clock and bring the Ninth's attention closer.

In Thepyrgos, your ascent is your standing, and your standing determines whether you rise or fall — or whether you are simply forgotten.

Part II

The Northern Reaches

“The mountain counts your breaths. The frost writes your name in ice. In the north, the dead do not wait – they walk, and they remember every promise you made to keep warm.” — Dusana of the Raven Road

Chapter 7

Aeler

Crowns & Under-Vaults.

The mountain remembers every word carved in its stone, every seal pressed into its walls. To govern here is not to command, but to harmonize with the ancient songs that still echo in the deep places.

I am an Under-Mason. I can hear stone shift a room away. When the rock starts singing a different tune, you best listen. Three knocks in the morning means all's well, but three knocks at night means something's coming through the walls that wasn't meant to walk.

My homeland. The place where we don't trust the surface, but we do trust the weight of a well-placed keystone—and oh, how the surface loves to test that trust. Our breath-bonds aren't just currency—they're the hardest thing in the peaks, forged in the sighs of miners who knew too much. We sell them to Vilikari jarls who pay in furs stained with brother's blood, to Ykrul khagans who weigh the value in warhorses and broken oaths. Once, we sold one to the Veiled Sisters. They paid in secrets—which is another way of saying they paid in future leverage.

Never count your breaths aloud in a mine. The mountain listens, and if it hears you reach the ninth, it will take one—a breath, a memory, a shadow. My grandfather reached nine once. He lived another thirty years, but he never cast a shadow again.

— Thromm Stone-Tongue, Under-Mason, who has never counted to nine

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Stone-bread and cave cheese—the bread is baked on heated stone slabs, the cheese is aged in sealed galleries where the temperature never varies. The cheese has been aging for three generations. It is an heirloom. It is also barely edible.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count their breaths. Aeler children wear breath-counters—small brass bells on leather cords. Eight breaths, ring the bell. Nine breaths, run. A child who cannot count is a child who will not survive the winter.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their bell. Every Aeler carries a bell tuned to their breath. A stranger's bell will ring at a different pitch—the mountain's lungs are calibrated to local frequencies. A mismatched bell is a warning. A silent bell is a threat.

What is the most common crime? Air theft. In the deep vaults, ventilation is shared. A sealed door, a blocked vent, a diverted shaft—these are thefts of breath, punishable by breath-debt. The guilty party must donate their own air ration to the victim. The donation is measured in days. The days are counted by bells.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The True Masons are not neutral. They are the Vault-Queen's eyes. Every "independent" repair, every "neutral" inspection, every "routine" audit—the True Masons are watching. They do not report to the Queen. They are the Queen. They have always been the Queen.

Where do people go when they die? To the Deep Vaults—the oldest galleries, where the air is thin and the stone is cold. The dead are not buried. They are sealed in niches carved into the walls, their names chiselled above their heads. The niches are reused every century. The names are never erased. The dead share walls with strangers. The strangers are patient.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a keystone—a load-bearing stone from your own holding. The stone is installed in the wronged party's wall. If it holds, you are forgiven. If it cracks, the debt stands. If it crumbles, your holding collapses. Apology is architecture. Architecture is law.

What is the most important festival? The Ringing of the Underways (deep winter). Every bell in every hold is rung at the same hour—eight times, no more. The sound travels through the stone, a heartbeat that reminds the mountain that the living are still here. The dead listen. The dead do not ring back.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Vault-Queen is a construct. She was assembled in 723 AR, after the real queen died in a cave-in. Her heart is a keystone. Her breath is a bellows. Her voice is a recording. The True Masons maintain her. They have the schematics. The schematics are missing three pages. The missing pages describe how to turn her off.

7.1 Aeler (Dwarves) — “Crowns & Under-Vaults”

Elite (Vault-Queen of a crownland)

“The mountain remembers every word carved in its stone, every seal pressed into its walls. To govern here is not to command, but to harmonize with the ancient songs that still echo in the deep places. But the deep places also sing other songs — songs that forget the living.”

Commoner (Under-Mason who can hear stone shift a room away)

“When the stone starts singing a different tune, you best listen. Three knocks in the morning means all’s well, but three knocks at night means something’s coming through the walls that wasn’t meant to walk. My grandfather called it the pressure that thinks. He walked into the deep one day and never came back. The mountain answered his knock. It always does.”

Crowns & Under-Vaults

The Aeler Kingdoms hold the mountains by breath, bell, and bargain. Dozens of sovereign holds — some sealed for centuries, others trading openly with lowland markets — share only the deep roots of stone and the supremacy of the High King Beneath the Peaks. Their halls run like arteries, their cities open in thunderous caverns where bridges leap between ribs of stone and cisterns shine like night skies turned inward. Survival is the first law: air is counted, water is bartered, light is rationed by wick and prayer. Tradition is the second: seals are kept, measures remain true, and the dead keep their offices as carefully as the living. Between the two, a people learn to argue quietly and build loudly.

Collectives (clans, guild-kin, lamp-companies) own what the mountain allows; individuals are custodians by oath. Trade runs under and over the range through under-ways and pass-forts, stitching protectorates and lowland markets to vaultmouth gates. When tunnels whisper or the air tastes wrong, the Aeler move as one animal; when the Kingsmoot calls, crowns and abbesses argue in bell-code and sealed writs until the stone itself seems to lean in.

But beneath the order, beneath the breath-counters and the ledger-stones, something older stirs. The Aeler do not speak of it directly. They call it the pressure that thinks — a presence that lives in the deepest galleries, in the spaces between sealed holds, in the darkness where bells have not rung for centuries. It does not attack. It invites. Miners who wander too deep return with no memory of why they went. Others do not return at all. The pressure does not hate. It is patient. And it is always, always listening.

The Pressure That Thinks — The Deep Drake

Deep beneath the oldest mountains, beyond the Ninth Seal and past the last lamplighter’s mile, there is a presence. The Aeler do not name it a dragon or a wyrm; they have no word for what it is. They call it the pressure that thinks — a weight in the stone that feels like curiosity, a whisper in the dark that sounds like your own name spoken with concern. It has no lair that any living Aeler has seen, but the rumour persists: a vast chamber of black glass and fossilised bone, where the heat of the earth meets the cold of the void. In that chamber lies the Deep Drake — an ancient wyrm of psychic hunger that feeds not on flesh but on attention. It draws the living toward it not through force, but through a gentle, irresistible lure: a half-remembered tune, a forgotten oath, a face you thought you had left behind. You walk toward it because you believe you have business there. You have no business there.

The Deep Drake does not kill. It collects. Its victims become part of its hoard — not corpses, but still, silent figures that sit in the dark, their eyes open, their mouths moving silently as they repeat the last promise they ever made. The Aeler have learned to live with the pressure. They seal off tunnels that grow too warm. They never answer a knock that comes in three. They count their breaths not out of habit, but out of a deep, unspoken fear that the ninth breath might be the one the pressure answers.

Hooks for the GM:

- A sealed hold has not answered the Kingsmoot in nine years. The pressure is whispering through the stone. The party is sent to investigate — or to seal the hold permanently.
- A miner returns from the deep with no memory of the past week, but their shadow now moves independently. The pressure is using them as a messenger.
- The Deep Drake does not attack. It negotiates. It offers forgotten secrets, lost treasures, or safe passage through its territory — in exchange for a single memory of sunlight. The party must decide what to trade.

The Fractured Crowns: Aeler Faction Spectrum

Aeler society is not monolithic. Beneath the High King’s nominal authority, each crownland follows its own star. Attitudes toward the surface range from open partnership to militant isolation, and even the most reclusive holds maintain Edgewalker contacts to monitor the world above.

- Traditionalist / “The Old Ways” – These holds idealize the ancient mountain-empire: closed gates, iron tariffs, and the certain knowledge that surface-dwellers cannot be trusted. They resemble the dwarves of fireside tales: stubborn, insular, and quick to reach for an axe when a human mentions “progress.” Their kings speak of the days when no foreigner stepped past the vaultmouth. They also speak of the pressure in whispers, and they seal any tunnel that shows signs of warmth. Clocks: FOREIGNER SUSPICION [4], HOLD SEALED [6].
- Cooperative / “Open Hand” – These holds trade freely with Aelaerem, Kahfagia, and even the Vilikari. They staff the under-markets, send engineers to repair bridges in Viterra, and treat the surface as a resource to be managed, not a threat to be shunned. They prefer soft power: standardised measures, certified weights, and bell-code protocols that make others want to trade on Aeler terms. They are also the most likely to send expeditions into the deep, seeking lost holds — and the most likely to lose miners to the pressure. Clocks: TRADE ROUTE PROSPERITY [6], CULTURAL FRICTION [4].
- Isolationist / “Silent Stone” – Deep holds that have not answered a Kingsmoot call in living memory. Their gates are lost, their peoples rumoured to have turned inward, worshiping forgotten depths — or to have become part of the pressure’s hoard. They neither help nor harm the surface — but when a White Flood or a gas flare occurs, their silence becomes a hazard of its own. The Deep Drake is said to lair somewhere beneath the Silent Stone holds. Clocks: SILENT HOLD AWAKENS [8], ANCIENT GRUDGE [6].

Most Aeler characters and settlements fall somewhere between these poles, and the same hold might shift its stance over a season, depending on grain prices, a new Vault-Queen, or a disaster that forces its hand.

The Breath Count — Habit, Not Function

Among the Aeler, counting breaths is not merely a safety measure — it is a cultural reflex, as automatic as a human’s heartbeat. Aeler children learn to count in eights before they learn to speak.

They tap their fingers, their bells, their spoons in rhythms of eight. They never, ever count to nine aloud. The ninth breath is not a number; it is a gap — the space where the pressure listens. Aeler who forget to count in eights are considered unreliable, possibly touched by the deep. Those who deliberately count to nine are shunned; they are thought to have invited the pressure to notice them.

Mechanical note: Breath-counting is not a skill roll or a resource to track. It is a narrative and cultural tic. The GM may use a character’s failure to observe the count as a trigger for a complication (e.g., the mountain shifts, a bell rings falsely, a character feels watched). Conversely, an Aeler who scrupulously counts their breaths in eights may gain a small boon (e.g., +1 die to resist fear in confined spaces) as the mountain’s attention slides past them.

Prominent NPCs of Aeler

Name	Role/Title	Motivation	Rumoured Quirk
Valthor Aezelbron	High King Beneath the Peaks	Preserve the ancient concord and balance the crownlands	He has not spoken above a whisper in seven years. The court reads his will by bell-code.
Grunhelda Thrainsdottir	Vault-Queen of Irondeep	Expand trade routes while keeping the Old Ways satisfied	She keeps a pet geode that hums when a contract is fair — and goes silent when the pressure is near.
Maeva Kaelen	Legate of the Under-Seal	Negotiate passage rights and standard measures with low-land realms	Her seal-rod is carved from a fossilised root. She has never lost a tariff dispute.
Thromm Stone-Tongue	Under-Mason (Commoner exemplar)	Hear the mountain’s warnings and keep the tunnels safe	He can identify a false weight by tapping it once with his hammer. He has never counted to nine.

Orthen White-Ribbon	Tunnel Courier	Deliver sealed writs across hostile jurisdictions	He has run the Spine Underway in darkness without a lamp. Twice. He says the dark has a voice, but it only asks questions.
Lumenor Saela	Keeper of the Under-Altars	Maintain the breath-rites and the old flame	She speaks only in bell tones during services. Her mundane voice is never heard.

Names of Aeler

Aeler names blend flowing vowels and soft diphthongs (ae, ei, ou, ui) with harsh consonants (k, th, z, r, g). Surnames are carved from mountain-roots: a hold, a forge, a seam, or a trade.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5→4, 6–10→6, J/Q/K→8, A→10).
- Treat Diamonds as codified outcomes (keys/passes/rights) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo stone & breath motifs — keys click, bells answer, and the mountain listens (and remembers). Also, the pressure that thinks may manifest as a whisper, a warmth, or a knock in the dark.

Additional Features

- Count the Air: When a scene establishes scarce air, a character who actively paces their breathing (counted steps, measured rests) may shift Position one step safer on their next physical action in a confined space. This is habit, not a resource; Aeler characters may do this reflexively.
- Bell-Code Courtesy: If the party adopts local bell etiquette (asking a warden which chime applies and heeding it), gain +1 assist die on negotiations or passage requests within a vault or under-market. Ignoring the bells invites the mountain’s attention.
- Measure is Mercy: Presenting a certified measure (rod, weight, sealed tally) calms a dispute: cancel the first SB generated by commerce or jurisdictional friction in the scene. A false measure, however, may draw the pressure’s curiosity.
- The Ninth Breath (Cultural Tic): An Aeler character never counts to nine aloud. If forced to do so (or if they deliberately break the taboo), they must test Resolve (DV 3) or gain the Marked by the Pressure condition (the next environmental hazard automatically triggers a complication). This is not a mechanical resource; it is a narrative and cultural constraint.

Stone & Sovereignty

In the deep places, survival depends on precision and tradition. The Aeler understand that stone does not forgive error — a misread seal can mean death, a miscalculated air measure can doom an expedition, and a broken bell-code can spark jurisdictional war. But beneath the law, beneath the ledgers, there is the pressure. It does not hate. It does not judge. It simply thinks. And when it thinks of you, you will feel a warmth in the stone, a whisper in the dark, a knock that comes in threes. The wise pretend not to notice. The foolish walk toward it.

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from vault wardens or lamplighter companies.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby under-guards or echo bats.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for trackers or assessors.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favorable air.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Breath warden or vault warden becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to air shift or seal change.
- Foe Appears: A rival crown’s guard or gas wraith arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional crown guards, true masons, or lamp companies arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.
- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes - seal misread/cave-in/flare ignites.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.
- Pressure Whispers: A character hears their name spoken from a crack in the stone. They must test Resolve (DV 3) or be compelled to move toward the sound.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: Vault-Queen, High King’s Legate, or Lumenor intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically - gas floods/water breaks/floor collapses.

- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice - omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.
- The Deep Drake's Attention: The pressure that thinks focuses on a character. They gain a Marked by the Deep condition. The GM gains 2 SB to spend on environmental or psychic complications in future scenes.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Aeler (Stone & Breath): Keys click in the wrong locks, bells answer without being rung, mountain air grows thin without warning.
- Aeler (Authority & Tradition): A seal is misread, bell-codes conflict between jurisdictions, a vault warden demands proper credentials.
- Aeler (Underground Hazards): Bad air pockets form, settling cracks warn of collapse, gas flares ignite unexpectedly.
- Aeler (The Pressure That Thinks): A distant knock in threes, a warmth from a cold wall, a whisper that sounds like a dead relative, a shadow that moves independently.

Aeler — Under-Vault Tensions

Starting Location: An Underway junction lit by guttering brass lanterns, its stone walls scored with tally-marks from a dozen forgotten crowns.

“Among the Aeler, stone remembers the weight of oaths, and every echo calls a reckoning. But some echoes call from the deep, where the pressure thinks. Do not answer.”

In... An Underway junction, a Geometer halts the party with a tally-rod. “The Spine shifts,” he says, stone-dust in his beard. “Choose a crown — or be buried by one. And if you hear a knock in threes, pretend you did not. The pressure is listening tonight.”

Regional Motifs Load-bearing oaths, fault-prayers, crown-rights, catacomb guilds.

Whispers to Offer “Cut a supporting tie,” “Sign for another’s debt,” “Take a shortcut through the sealed tunnel,” “Answer the knock — it might be a friend.”

External Clocks Threat: “The Spine Slips”; Fracture: “Maps Reorder”; Community: “Surface Panic”; Deep: “The Pressure Wakes [8]”.

Complications Load-lights dim; echoes reply in politics; crown agents arrive early; a miner goes missing in the deep.

Anchors at Risk A PC’s workshop; a shared refuge tunnel; a relative who works in the deep galleries.

Escalation Beat The tally-rod points to the most guilty PC. Then a knock sounds from the darkness — three times.

Relief Shore a vault with sacrifice (1 anchor), or complete a truce between crowns; Spirit + Resolve (5) to hold a cave-in long enough to evacuate. Or offer a memory to the pressure — it will accept, but it will remember.

Faction Entanglements

- Edgewalkers (Prospectors): If you accept their escort or intel, start a 4-segment Opportunity clock you can cash for +1 Effect on one venture. If you refuse a posted hazard, they post your route as “open” (first stealth or smuggling roll this leg suffers –1 die). Edgewalkers are the most likely to have heard the pressure’s whisper and survived.
- True Masons (Infrastructure Orders): Pledge tools or labor to earn a Mason’s Stamp (treat as papers to traverse construction zones). Cross a marked barrier without their leave and gain the Tampered Work tag—first structural mishap SB against you is free. True Masons are the ones who seal the tunnels that grow warm.
- Lamplighter Companies: Donate wick, oil, or time on the Mile to bank a Lamp Credit; spend to ignore darkness penalties once on the Under-Road. Skip a service bell and all under-market buys that scene cost +1 clock tick (queues & suspicion). Lamplighters are the first to notice when a light goes out for no reason.
- Under-Market Assessors: Submit to measure/weigh and reduce Commerce DV by 1 this scene. Try to pass unassayed goods—on a Miss, lose the load or accept a Caveat Stamp that poisons your price two markets downstream. Assessors have a sixth sense for false weights; they claim the pressure tells them.
- Breath Wardens: Register bodies & flames before sealed work; compliance cancels the first air-hazard SB. Skipping registry adds a Thin Air tick to the leg (applies –1 die to the first exertion test in confinement). Breath Wardens are the ones who count every exhalation. They never speak of what they hear in the silence between breaths.

Cross-Regional Ties & Soft Power

- Agrarian Reliance (Human Breadbelts): Grain, timber, tallow, and fleece convoys from Acasia/Vhasia/Viterra sustain vault populations. Famine or levy spikes uprange impose night rationing: Under-Road checks +1 DV and food trades add +1 SB pressure until relief.
- Standards Diplomacy: Aeler Measure Vault rods adopted abroad grant +1 die to settle disputes in foreign markets; rejecting Aeler standards increases toll and inspection frequency (first border scene gains a free “Lock/Barrier” SB).
- True Mason Missions Abroad: Accept a Mason cadre to “stabilize” bridges, ports, or sluices: reduce Travel DV by 1 on that route for the arc, but the route now respects Aeler closure bells (authorities can halt traffic with one writ).
- Edgewalker Concessions: Prospect notes traded to frontier lords exchange for wayleaves and salvage rights; cash once for an Under-Seal Clause (local) or accept a rival claimant clock that will mature if you delay.
- Kahfagian Interface (Sea Monopoly): Aeler export hard-goods via Kahfagian factors; storm seasons or privateer scares add a Harbor Quarantine tick to any surface leg feeding those ports (customs DV +1).
- Aelerem/Aelinnel Fallout: When Valewood Weather is signaled, Aeler works creak; all bell-codes in mixed settlements (Aelerem/Aelinnel) are one step easier to misread (first bell-etiquette scene: add a free “Error/Security” SB unless you consult a local).

Trade Goods & Consequences

- Airworks & Wick (Oil, Char, Filters): Donate to a vault—bank a Breath Favor to cancel the next bad-air complication. Hoard in a shortage and your lot is flagged; all purchases beneath that crown suffer −1 die until you settle a fine or tithe.
- Stonework & Ironwork (Beams, Keys, Rods): Selling to foreign keeps spreads Aeler codes: once per arc, treat a foreign gate as if it used Aeler warding (gain +1 die with Key-Sisters/warders there). Counterfeit measure rods trigger a cross-border inquest clock.
- Foodflows (Grain, Fleece, Tallow): Move relief trains to clear one Rationing tag for a settlement (DV −1 for social checks there). Divert a relief train and gain an Audit clock that follows you three markets hence.
- Cistern-Right & Water Engineering: Fund a sluice or cistern abroad to gain Water Priority (skip one queue during drought). Neglect maintenance and the keeper may invoke Aeler Liability—pay or lose access to the route for a season.

Patron Networks (Below and Beyond)

- The Sealed Gate: Consecrated door-nails from True Mason kits act as single-use stay writs (negate one forced entry this scene).
- The Traveler: Spine milestones double as wayshrines; leave a brass chit to reroll one failed travel test on that segment this arc.
- Inquisitor Prime: Breath-pure censers sanction “clean rooms”; once per delve, dispel one ambient miasma or ward-rot effect at cost of +1 Obligation to local abbey-knights.
- Maelstraeus: Under-Market stalls tithe to the Great Ledger; cash a Market Dominance tick to flip one price band in your favor for a scene, then mark a 4-segment Karmic Debt with assessors.

Survival-Horror Procedures (Use Often)

- Headcount & Flamecount: At scene start in confinement, ask “Who breathes, what burns?” If headcount+flamecount exceeds posted limit, add a free “Thin Air” SB and start a 4-segment Stale Air clock.
- Two Bells to Safety: Any time the fiction stalls underground, ring two nearby bells (authority vs. sanctum). PCs must pick one to heed; ignoring both increases the next hazard’s Cap by +1 (stone holds grudges).
- Measure or Mistrust: Producing a certified rod/weight cancels the first commerce/jurisdiction SB this scene; failing to present one imposes −1 die on haggling or passage until appeased.
- The Knock in Threes: If a character hears three knocks from the darkness, they must test Resolve (DV 3) or be compelled to walk toward the sound. The knock may be the pressure — or it may be a lost miner. The difference is not always clear.

Diplomatic Favor & Reputation Echoes

- Breath Favor (minor resource): Earned by donating wick/oil or assisting air wardens. Spend to downgrade one underground hazard outcome or to bypass a lamplighter queue.
- Stamps & Seals:

- Mason-Marked: Doors to worksites open; smugglers avoid you (harder to buy contraband, easier to cross safely).
- Edge-Trusted: Prospectors share fresh maps—first detour per leg is free; officials eye you as opportunists (first civic audience DV +1).
- Assessor-Clean: Under-markets honor your assay; rivals spread rumors—add a trailing Audit clock if you score a windfall.

Boss Archetypes in Aeler

Systemic / Economic / Conspiracy

- Under-Market Syndic (Cartel/Measure Fraud): Price-fixes breath, wick, and water; wields corrupt assay marks to starve rivals. Win by exposing forged measures or seizing the Assay Chain.

- Edgewalker Concessionaire (Route Monopolist): Controls salvage and short-cuts, posts hazards to strangle traffic. Win by proving route tampering or opening a sanctioned bypass.

- Bad Air (Miasma/Invisible): Candles gutter blue; thoughts slow; corridors choose the slowest. Win by air discipline, filter rites, or opening a lung-shaft.
- Hungry Stone (Creep/Collapse): Settling cracks hunt noise and heat; shudders on every miss. Win by shoring, silence, and rerouting stress through old ribs.
- Lamp Famine (Darkness/Isolation): Wicks fail in sequence; last lights lure you deeper. Win by restoring the Lamplighter’s Mile or kindling a saint-wick.

Undead / Fallen Kingdom / Eldritch / Demonic

- Crown-Lich of the Crypt (Undead Sovereign): Keeps ancient offices; binds petitioners with oaths to the dead. Win by repealing a mortmain writ or severing the Oath-Chain.

- Seal-Devil (Demonic Contract): Lives in locks and signatures; eats exceptions. Win by offering a flawless counter-seal or starving it of loopholes.
- The Hollow Architect (Fallen Works): A ghost-guilder rebuilding the empire wrong on purpose. Win by unkeying the master plan or collapsing the false load paths.
- The Deep Drake (The Pressure That Thinks): Not a boss to be fought, but a presence to be negotiated with — or escaped. Phases: Whisper → Knock → Invitation → Collection. Cracks: offer a memory of sunlight, speak a true regret, or allow a willing sacrifice to walk into the deep in your place.

Boss Mechanics Notes

- Air & Light Tracks: In confined scenes, track Headcount, Flamecount. If Headcount + Flamecount exceeds posted limit, add a free “Thin Air” SB and start Stale Air [4]. Each tick imposes −1 die to exertion until vented.
- Jurisdiction Clocks: Many bosses run a Bell-Code Conflict [4] or Seal Dispute [6]. On fill, the boss gains Authority Surge: increase their social DV by +1 and seize initiative once.
- Lair Actions (choose 2–3):
 - Collapse Probe: Mark “Settling Crack”; nearest noisy PC tests PROWESS or risk Pin/Separate.
 - Breath Tax: Reduce Flamecount by 1; next exertion in zone costs Fatigue 1 on a miss.
 - Blackout/Glare: Snuff or flare lamps; impose Disorient (−1 die) until a Lamplighter Action restores balance.
 - Bell Override: Swap which faction’s law applies; social actions vs. boss gain +1 DV this round.
 - White Flood Surge: Advance environment clock; force MOVE/WRECK or be Separated.
 - Pressure’s Knock (Deep Drake only): A character hears three knocks. They must test Resolve (DV 4) or be compelled to move one range band toward the sound.
- Phase Triggers: Environment bosses phase when Air hits 2/4, Water hits 3/6, or Light hits 0; Conspiracy bosses phase when Audit or Permit clocks fill.
- Truth & Measure: Producing a certified rod/weight cancels the first commerce/jurisdiction SB each phase; forging one gives the boss 1 SB and a free Expose Fraud reaction.
- Crowd Pressure: In under-markets, add Panic Crowd [4]; each tick adds +1 DV to precise actions (shoot, pick, ritual) unless calmed with bell-code or coin.
- Fear Hooks (optional): Bad Air inflicts FEAR vs. suffocation; Echo-King inflicts FEAR vs. isolation; Seal-Devil inflicts FEAR vs. helplessness; Pressure’s Knock inflicts FEAR vs. the unknown. On Fail: mark Shaken; on Critical Fail: drop a resource (lamp, key, breath).

Chapter 8

The Mistlands

Bells, Salt, and Breath.

The bells here do more than mark time—they weave the very fabric of reality, keeping the mist at bay and the dead in their proper places. Each chime is a thread in the pattern that holds the world together.

I am a Bell-Warden. I refuse to write down the ninth note. It lives only in my memory—and that memory is fading.

The Mistlands are a protectorate of the Aeler in name only. The fog here doesn't just hide the land; it hides the law, and oh, how the wraiths love that ambiguity. The bell-lines aren't just defences—they're the only thing keeping the wraiths from dragging whole villages into the mist. The Aeler built them. The Aeler charge for them. The Aeler will leave when the money runs out. And when that happens, the fog will remember every single soul they abandoned.

Never answer a voice that calls your name from the fog. The mist collects names, and once it has yours, the ferryman will always know where to find you. I've seen men answer. I've watched them walk into the white, still talking, still smiling, until their voices came back from a direction they hadn't gone.

— Warden Kael, who has seen the ninth bell rung once and will not speak of it

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Salt fish and sour bread—the fish is smoked over peat fires, the bread is leavened with fog-damp yeast. The yeast is caught in cloth traps hung from the bell-towers. The traps are emptied at dawn. The yeast is not alive. It is not dead either.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To ring a bell. Every Mistlands child is given a small bronze bell at birth. By age three, they can ring the eight notes of the ward-chime in their sleep. The ninth note is never taught. The ninth note is discovered. Discovery is fatal.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their salt-pouch. Every Mistlander carries a leather pouch of consecrated salt. A stranger without a pouch is either a fool or a wraith. A stranger whose pouch is empty is a fool who is about to become a wraith.

What is the most common crime? Ward-salt theft. The Aeler control the salt pans, and the salt is the only thing that keeps the dead from rising. A stolen pouch can buy a week's protection. The price is a year's debt to the Aeler. The debt is collected in labour. The labour is collecting salt. The salt is stolen. The cycle is perpetual.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Bell-Wardens are not chosen—they are volunteered. A village that loses a warden must send a replacement to the Aeler training holds. The holds are in the mountains. The mountains are cold. The trainees do not always return. The ones who do return do not speak of what they learned. Their bells ring at a different pitch.

Where do people go when they die? To the fog. Bodies are not buried in the Mistlands—the ground rejects them. Corpses are carried to the edge of the bell-line and left for the mist. The mist takes them. Sometimes, at dusk, you can see them walking the lanes. They do not speak. They do not need to. Their presence is a question.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You ring the Bell of Atonement—a cracked bronze bell that hangs in every village square. The bell rings once for each wrong confessed. If the bell rings true, you are forgiven. If it cracks further, you are not. If it shatters, you are banished to the fog. The banished never return. Their voices still answer from the white.

What is the most important festival? The Rehanging of the Lines (autumn). Every bell-line is taken down, cleaned, and rehung. The work takes three days. The villages are silent for three nights. The dead listen. The dead wait. The dead do not ring.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Legate of the Mists is a wraith. She died in 803 AR, during a bell-line failure. The Aeler rebuilt her from fog and memory. She does not know she is dead. She attends council meetings. She signs documents. Her signature fades after sunset. The documents are refiled every morning.

8.1 Mistlands — “Bells, Salt, and Breath”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The mist counts your breaths. The bells remember your name.

Legate of Mists (Elite): “The bells here do more than mark time — they weave the very fabric of reality, keeping the mist at bay and the dead in their proper places. Each chime is a thread in the pattern that holds the world together. The Aeler gave us bells. The fog taught us to ring them.”

Salt-Monk (Commoner): “Salt don’t just preserve the fish — it holds back the things that shouldn’t walk. Every grain blessed is a prayer, and every prayer keeps the mist from remembering your name. The Aeler tax our salt. We pay in silence.”

Genre / Mood: Folk horror, coastal gothic, supernatural debt-collection.

Starting Location: A Bell-Line levee veiled in fog, where bell-ropes sway though no wind stirs, and each ring tastes like a heartbeat. A Ferryman demands a name as toll. When the party hesitates, a Bell-Warden steps forward. “The Ninth Bell rings tonight. Will you answer — or flee? The Aeler won’t save you. The fog doesn’t care. Only the bells keep the line.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Mistlands lie north of the Aelerian mountains, where the Aberderrin Sea laps against reed-fens and drowned shores. To the west, the Direwood breathes; to the east, the salt tides of the Aberderrin. It is a Protectorate of the Aeler, but their iron passes only hold the southern roads — the land itself belongs to fog and bells. Every levee hums with ward-notes, every ferry takes salt as tithe, and every shadow is measured against the Direwood’s endless breath. The people here live by the weight of salt, the echo of bells, and the hope that their names will not be spoken by the mists.

The Aeler Protectorate maintains order with ledgers, patrols, and breath-bonds, but the real law is older: salt lines drawn at dusk, iron nails hammered into threshold posts, and the unspoken knowledge that the ninth bell must never ring. The Mistlands do not forgive forgetfulness. The mist has a long memory, and it shares its grudges freely.

What you notice first: The constant, distant chime of bells — never quite in sync. The taste of salt on your lips even inland. The way everyone holds their breath when crossing a bridge. The silence when a bell fails to ring.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never answer a voice that calls your name from the fog. The mist collects names, and once it has yours, the ferryman will always know where to find you.

Regional Mood: Bells and Breath

Here, breath is currency and silence a sin. Every exhalation is counted by the ward-bells, and every stolen inhalation feeds something that should not be. The Aeler Protectorate maintains order with ledgers and patrols, but the real law is older: salt lines drawn at dusk, iron nails hammered into threshold posts, and the unspoken knowledge that the ninth bell must never ring. The Mistlands do not forgive forgetfulness. The mist has a long memory, and it shares its grudges freely.

The tension between the Aeler governor (Legate Halvar) and the local bell-wardens is constant. The Aeler want standardized bell-codes, efficient salt taxes, and compliant villages. The wardens want the old ways: counting in eights, never the ninth, and the right to refuse a name to the fog. Payden's Port, the only true city, is a battleground of ledgers and lanterns. Grain ships leave each autumn, carrying the Protectorate's tithe east and returning with iron, engineers, and the occasional missionary — who rarely stay.

Spades — Places

- Reed-Fen Causey — Chalked ward-runes on every milestone; safe path through the mist. ‘[TRAVEL]’ Step only on the chalked stones. The mud between has no bottom.
- Bell-Line Levee — Iron posts, eight bells per span; one bracket empty, one note forbidden. ‘[WARD]’ The empty bracket is for the bell that never rings. The rope is still there.
- Ghost-Ferry Slip — Rope crosses black water; fares paid in salt and whispered names. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[TRAVEL]’ The ferryman never blinks. Some say he traded his eyelids for the right to collect.
- Pall Watch-Tower — Piles above mire; mirrors face west to the Direwood’s breath. ‘[WARD]’ The mirrors are silvered on both sides. The wardens watch their own reflections as much as the trees.
- Mist-Chapel — Stilted planks; votive lanterns gutter under damp rafters. ‘[RITUAL]’ The icon has no face. Worshippers say it lost its features to the fog, one by one.
- Dead-Cut Canal — Old imperial ditch; patrolled by eel boats and law. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The eels have eyes like men. Fishermen throw back any that blink.
- Drowned Copse — Root-tangles clutch tide like old hands; bones in the bark. ‘[DEATH]’ The trees were planted on a mass grave. They grew twisted, hungry.
- Fogmill Ridge — Wind vanes vanish into cloud; gears hiss like prayers to fog. ‘[WEATHER]’ The miller grinds salt, not grain. His customers pay in breath, not coin.

10. Salt-Pan Terraces — Patched with peat; ward-salt dries under nets, watched by monks. ‘[RESOURCE]’ The monks chant without ceasing. If they stop, the salt spoils — and so does the warding.
- J Fort-Stair — Stacked timber and stone; flags swallowed by mist, guards by routine. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The flags are changed daily. The ones that vanish are never spoken of again.
- Q Witchlight Bridge — Over black runnel; ninth plank “counted” but unseen. ‘[THRESHOLD]’ The missing plank is there — you just can’t see it. Step where it should be, or don’t step at all.
- K High-Mist Pass — Through Aelerians; cairns ringed in iron nails, bells in the stones. ‘[TRAVEL]’ Each cairn holds a bell that rang once at the death of a warden. They ring again when mist takes another.
- A Weeping Gate — Western palisade facing Direwood; bells wired to bones of trees. ‘[WARD]’ ‘[DEATH]’ The gate weeps sap that smells of iron and old grief. Wardens collect it in silver cups.

(Warden/Ferryman/Aeler) Bell-warden whose ringbook decides which notes keep which ghosts; oath-ferryman collecting fares in salt and names.

7. Mist-Pilot — Linn refugee; ghosts ships through reed-lace — if paid in breath. ‘[TRAVEL]’ She never speaks above a whisper. Her voice is currency, and she spends it carefully.
8. Protectorate Clerk — Aeler oilskin ledgers, narrow smile; law in triplicate. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ His stamp is a bell. He presses it twice — once for the crown, once for the Hollow.
9. Shroud-Diver — Harvests tokens from drowned fields before dawn’s false light. ‘[STEALTH]’ ‘[DEATH]’ He wears a bell around his ankle. If it rings, he’s stayed too long.
10. Direwood Refugee — Cold breath, colder stories; knows what the trees whisper. ‘[FEAR]’ She carved out her own tongue. The trees still speak through her — in a voice not her own.
- J Fog-Knight — Cavalry rides levee crowns by bellcode; mist as their steed. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ Their horses have no shadows. Some say they traded them for fog-sight.

K Lord Warden — Local strong hand sworn to Legate’s seal; law walks the fens. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
He lost an eye to a wight. He wears a bell in the socket.

A Mist-Seer — Bargains breath for answers; candles shorten when she speaks. ‘[MAGIC]’ ‘[FEAR]’ She has no shadow. The mist took it as a down payment.

(Undead/Weather/Law) Ground-mist lifts off fen and eats tracks by the yard; witchlights try to count you; step wrong and bridge forgets you.

2. Ground-Mist — Lifts from fen; eats tracks by the yard, names by the breath. ‘[WEATHER]’ ‘[DEATH]’ Your footfalls vanish behind you. The mist is following, not rising.
 3. Witchlight Count — Trying to count you; step wrong and bridge forgets your path.
 ‘[MAGIC]’ ‘[FEAR]’ The lights flicker in a pattern — two short, two long. They’re signaling someone.
 4. Ward-Salt Short — Pans go green; bells ring, nothing answers from the other side. ‘[RESOURCE]’ ‘[WARD]’
The salt is grey, not white. Someone cut it with grave dust.
 5. Wrong Bell — Cracked note opens a door the Legate can’t close; mist takes the gap.
 6. Linn Raid — Slips reed-maze; hearths douse, horns travel on the fog. ‘[COMBAT]’ The raiders wear bells on their belts — stolen from the last village.
 7. Direwood Moan — At dusk; Weeping Gate ropes go taut by themselves. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[FEAR]’
The moan has words. You don’t want to understand them.

 ‘[MAGIC]’ The wind smells of honey and rot. Do not follow it.

 ‘[DEATH]’ The wraith carries a lantern. The light is blue — the colour of drowned breath.
 10. Marsh-Quake — Sod heaves, dyke slumps; proofs and bodies sink together. ‘[DISASTER]’
The ground exhales. Your name rises from it like smoke.
- J Protectorate Interdiction — All ferries sealed “until review”; routes dry up. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[TRAVEL]’ The seals are stamped with a bell. The wax is mixed with bone ash.
- Q Rite-Purge — Inspectors call local customs heresy; tempers at a boil. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[SOCIAL]’ The inspectors carry blank ledgers. They fill them with names of the accused.

 ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[FEAR]’ The horns are made from the tusks of a sea beast. The beast’s ghost is angry.
- A Tide-Mist — Rolls from Aberderrin; spirits ride the white and won’t be named. ‘[WEATHER]’ ‘[DEATH]’ The spirits have no faces — only the faces of the drowned.

(Pass/Seal/Token) Ward-salt allotment draws safe circle once; ferry token crosses named black runnel regardless of curfew.

5. Lantern Writ — Lawful travel at night along levee crown with escort. ‘[TRAVEL]’ ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The writ is written on dried bladder. It crinkles when you lie.
6. Exorcist’s Seal — Stamped clause downgrades “haunt” to “nuisance.” ‘[MAGIC]’ The seal is a bell without a clapper. It’s silent, like the wraiths it binds.
7. Codeleaf — Today’s mirror and horn sequences; fog cannot hide what you know. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The leaf is soaked in brine. Read it before it dries.
8. Protectorate Mark — Priority rations and rope from Fort-Stair stores. ‘[RESOURCE]’ The mark is a brand. It smokes when you show it.
9. Wraith-Indemnity — Legal immunity for actions taken under apparition threat. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The indemnity is signed in salt water. It will dissolve if you misuse it.
10. Bone-Field License — Salvage rights at drowned hamlet (with witnesses). ‘[RESOURCE]’ The license is a map drawn on a shroud. Follow the stitch marks.
- J Refuge-Right — Move a named household through Gate unchallenged; breath as passport. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The right is a bell-rope. Tie it to your belt. Nonna will ask.
- Q Legate’s Audience — One whisper exits as policy; bells ring your decree. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The Legate’s ear is a silver bell. Speak into it once.
- K Warden’s Commission — Raise levee guards; local doors open, purses too. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The commission is a whistle. Blow it, and the fens answer.
- A Pall Indulgence — Temporary exception to ward law, spoken and sealed by bell. ‘[MAGIC]’ ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The indulgence is a single bell-note, held in a jar. Break the jar to release it.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (passes/seals/tokens) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo breath and boundary — bells answering across water, salt that won’t dry, voices returning late.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Breath-Toll: Many claim the mist remembers every breath. Travelers hold breath crossing bridges, fearing the mist will count them wrong. Mechanically, when you cross a threshold without a ward-salt or bell, roll Spirit + Resolve (DV 3). On a failure, the mist learns your name — gain the MARKED condition (the next spirit encounter starts at Desperate Position).

- Salt as Promise: A handful of salt is more than warding — it is a vow. Spill it on plank or stone to swear safety. Once per session, a character may spend a handful of ward-salt to create a Salt Oath [4] clock. While the clock has segments, the oath-taker gains +1 die to resist fear or possession. If the oath is broken, the clock fills and the breaker takes Harm 1 (spiritual backlash).
- The Ninth Bell: Legends say a ninth bell once rang on the Line. The note is not in any ringbook; no warden speaks of it. Some nights, though, it rings — and gates open where none should be. When the GM spends 3+ SB in a scene, they may declare that the Ninth Bell rings. All characters must test Spirit + Resolve (DV 4) or lose 1 Fatigue (the sound steals breath).
- Payden’s Port: The only true city in the Mistlands, huddled on the western coast of the Aberderrin. Its wharves are built from salvaged longship timber, and its law is split between the Aeler Legate’s seal and the old bell-wardens’ traditions. Grain ships leave from its harbour each autumn, carrying the Protectorate’s tithe east — and returning with iron, engineers, and the occasional missionary. The port’s inn, the Drowned Rat, has a bell that rings once for every sailor lost at sea. It rings often.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Bell-Keeper — The Sealed Gate. A bell that never rings, yet holds the threshold closed.
 - The Salted One — Oath of Mercy and Grace. A prayer that preserves body and soul, but demands a name in return.
 - The Mist-Father — Khemesh. The pressure beneath the fog; the hunger that waits in still air.
 - The Lantern Bearer — The Traveler. The light that guides lost ships — and lost souls.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Saint Kael of the Iron Bell (The Sealed Gate): The bell-wardens venerate a legendary warden who hammered a ninth bell into the Weeping Gate to seal a Direwood breach. The bell cracked, but the breach closed. His chisel is kept at Payden’s Port; it is said to quench the mist for an hour if struck against an iron post. The Aeler Protectorate has tried to confiscate it twice; both attempts ended with the confiscators lost in fog.
- Saint Anja of the White Pans (Oath of Mercy and Grace): A salt-monk who died blessing the pans during a tide-mist. Her body never decayed, and her chapel now serves as a hospice for fog-sick sailors. The Temple of Light sends offerings of fresh water each spring; the Everflame considers her a heretic. Pilgrims who pray at her shrine may ask one question of a drowned ancestor — but the answer is always a single word, and that word is a tithe.
- The Grey Hospice of the Unnamed: Sister Darya runs a hospice near Payden’s Port. She asks no payment, but she records every patient’s name in a ledger that never dries. The Aeler clerks suspect she is erasing records, not healing wounds. She has been investigated three times; each time, the investigator vanished into the fog and returned with no memory of why they came.
- The Bell-Ringer’s Covenant (The Keeper of the Silent Seal): Notary Voss is the Protectorate’s appointed judge, charged with imposing Aeler law on local customs. He carries a water-clock to measure the shifting of legal moods, but the mist ignores it. His rulings are always delivered in triplicate, and the bell-wardens obey them — slowly. Those who lie before him find that their next passage through the Ghost-Ferry Slip is denied; the ferryman refuses to name them.

- The Ninth: In any Mistlands scene, the ninth person to speak in a room draws the mist's attention. The wise hold their tongues until someone else breaks the count. Those who speak ninth are said to see a pale figure standing at the foot of the bed that night — waiting to collect a breath.
- The Black Barrow Keep (Aelinnel Ruin): Looming over Payden's Port, this ancient workshop of bell-automata and ward-forges is sealed by the Protectorate — but smugglers and treasure-hunters still enter. Locals whisper that the lowest catacombs connect to the Ways Between. The Aeler have tried to collapse the upper levels three times; each time, the rubble was found cleared by morning, with no tracks in the fog.

Mistlands Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Fog: Toss a crust into the mist before crossing a bridge. Ignore the first Ground-Mist penalty. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Hold the Ninth Breath: Cross a threshold while holding your breath. Cancel Witchlight Count or take -1 die on your next action (your choice). '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Name to the Salt: Whisper a dead enemy's name into a salt pan. Gain +1 Effect against undead for the scene, but mark Obligation to the Legate. '[SUPERSTITION]'

Region-Specific SB Options

- Mistlands (Bells & Breath): Bells ring without cause, breath forms visible words, mirrors reflect wrong faces.
- Mistlands (Salt & Warding): Salt refuses to dry, ward-runes bleed colour, protection tokens crack.
- Mistlands (Direwood Threat): Trees whisper your name, roots shift position, forest breath grows stronger.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Navigation): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Fog Bank.
- Silence the Bell (Presence + Stealth): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a ward-salt pouch is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Tide (Resolve + Survival): On a hit in Tide-Mist, you pick who keeps their bearings; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Bell & Breath)

- The Ninth Bell Ringer (Direwood herald) — Phases: Lost Names → Broken Lines → Open Gate. Cracks: restore a ringbook; trade a breath; rehang a forbidden bell with copper nails.
- Queen of Counting Lights (fae arbiter) — Phases: Courteous Tithes → Geas-Market → Ledger of Leaves. Cracks: return stolen way-marks; speak said and meant; gild the iron.
- Reed-Wolf Captain (Linn raider) — Phases: Smoke Signals → Night Oars → Thing Verdict. Cracks: name a feud-token; win a skald-duel; force harbour-truce under bell and banner.

Patronage & Power

In the Mistlands, power flows through ritual, warding, and the careful balance between the living and the dead. The Aeler Protectorate maintains nominal control through military presence and legal frameworks, but true authority lies with those who understand the bells, the salt, and the breath of the land itself. Local wardens, salt-monks, and bell-keepers hold sway over daily life, while the Legate of the Mists mediates between imperial law and ancient custom.

For the GM: Patronage in the Mistlands revolves around protection — from mist, from spirits, from the encroaching forest. Rewards often take the form of tokens, seals, or safe passage that can be leveraged into greater security. To emphasise the folk-horror feel:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (salt, bells, lanterns) that can be challenged, depleted, or voided by the mist itself.
- Let rival factions (Protectorate vs. bell-wardens vs. Direwood refugees) issue conflicting protections, forcing players to choose whose favour matters more.
- Use the levees, ferries, and watchtowers as arenas for social contests, where knowledge of the old ways (counting breaths, naming spirits, offering salt) determines success.

In the Mistlands, your safety is your standing, and your standing depends on who remembers your name.

Black Barrow Keep — The Ruin Above Payden's Port

Looming over the eastern edge of Payden's Port, Black Barrow Keep is a jagged wound in the skyline. Its basalt walls weep salt, and its broken towers lean into the fog like old men listening for a bell that never rings. The Aelinnel built it in a forgotten age—not as a fortress, but as a workshop. Here, they forged bell-automata, copper sentinels, and the first ward-lines that still keep the Direwood at bay. When the Mistlands became a Protectorate, the Aelinnel sealed the deep forges and retreated. The locals say the keep is haunted. The truth is worse: it is not haunted—it is occupied.

Below the keep, the catacombs stretch down through nine known levels. Each level was sealed by a different generation of wrights: Aeler engineers, Aelinnel bell-smiths, Linn shipwrights, and older crafts whose names are scrubbed from the records. The lowest level is said to contain a working that has been ticking since before the Hollow learned to count.

Accessing the Keep: The main gate is chained with a bell-lock that requires a copper key and the correct sequence of rings (eight, never nine). Side entrances include a collapsed ropeway from the salt pans, a flooded stair from the Ghost-Ferry Slip, and a smugglers' tunnel that exits near the Grey Hospice. The Protectorate has officially sealed the keep, but wardens look the other way for a share of salvage—or a story about what moves in the deep.

Generator — Black Barrow Keep: Rooms & Encounters

d12	Area / Encounter
1	The Hanging Bell-Garden. A collapsed floor reveals a chamber where bells grow from the ceiling like stalactites. Each bell has a clapper shaped like a finger bone. Effect: A bell that rings once for each secret spoken beneath it. The ringing can be heard throughout the keep.
2	The Copper Forge. Still warm, though the fire went out centuries ago. A half-completed automaton sits on the anvil. Its brass skull is hinged open; inside, a nest of salt-eels writhes. Effect: The forge can be reactivated with a bell-key, producing a single ward-salt token per scene.

3	The Oubliette of the Unnamed. A pit lined with counting marks — eight scratches, a gap, eight scratches. At the bottom, a wright’s skeleton still holds a hammer. The hammer rings when you touch it. Effect: The hammer can drive a copper nail into any surface, sealing a threshold for one scene.
4	The Echo Scriptorium. Shelves of slate tablets, each inscribed with a single number. The numbers are not in sequence. A ghost wright sits at a desk, writing the same number over and over. Effect: The ghost will answer one question about the keep’s history, but will then ask for a number you have never written.
5	The Drowned Armoury. Sealed by a slow leak from the salt pans. Weapons float in brine. One of them — a bell-hilted sword — hums when you near it. Effect: The sword counts your heartbeats. If you draw it in combat, you gain+1 die, but the sword will demand a name at the end of the scene.
6	The Weeping Cistern. A stone basin filled with black water. The water rises when you speak. A voice from below asks, “What is the ninth number?” Effect: Answer with silence, and the water recedes, revealing a sealed door. Answer incorrectly, and the cistern floods the room.
7	The Cogwheel Choir. A chamber of interlocking copper gears, each tooth stamped with a rune. When the wind blows through the broken wall, the gears turn and the runes sing a cracked hymn. Effect: A character who learns the tune may reroll one failed navigation test while in the Mistlands (once).
8	The Salt-Liche’s Studio. A wright who refused to die. Its flesh is replaced by salt-cured leather and copper wire. It still tries to finish a bell that has no clapper. Effect: The salt-liche is not hostile, but will trade a bell-key for a memory of fresh water.
9	The Unstable Lift. A chain-hoist that descends into darkness. The chains are warm. The lift stops at every eighth floor, never the ninth. Effect: Riding the lift skips two levels of the catacombs, but ticks the FOG ATTENTION clock by1.
10	The Bone Gallery. A corridor lined with the remains of wrights from every generation. Each skeleton wears a different style of bell-maker’s apron. The newest apron is still damp. Effect: A PC may spend a scene searching; on a Wits+Lore roll (DV4), they find a key, a token, or a warning.
11	The Ticking Heart. A sealed chamber behind a copper door. Something inside ticks at a steady rhythm. The rhythm changes when you lie. Effect: The door requires a blood offering and a true confession to open. Inside is a working that can reset one broken bell-line — but it will ask for a year of your life.

12	The Ninth Gate. A door that appears only when the keep's bells have rung eight times in sequence. Beyond it, a spiral stair descends into absolute silence. No echo returns. Effect: This leads to the lowest catacomb, where the first wright's original bell-line generator still turns. Activating it would drive the Direwood back a mile — but the noise would wake the Ninth Bell Ringer.
----	---

To use: Roll once for the room, then optionally roll again for a resident, hazard, or treasure from the appropriate tables in §8.1, §8.1, or §8.1. For the deeper catacombs, increase the DV of all spirit-related rolls by1 and add a STALE AIR clock[4] at the start of each scene.

Factions in the Keep

- The Bell-Wrights' Ghosts: Ancient Aelinnel spirits who still maintain the lower forges. They ignore the living unless the forges are disturbed. Offerings of copper nails or a correctly rung bell will buy safe passage.
- The Protectorate Salvage Team: Aeler engineers and a squad of fog-knights, ostensibly "surveying" the keep for hazards. They will confiscate any working bell they find and arrest anyone without a Protectorate writ. Their captain has a brass hand that is also a tuning fork.
- The Hollow's Anticipators: A cult that believes the keep was built to contain the Hollow's attention. They leave offerings of salt and silence. They are not dangerous — but they will follow you, writing down every bell you ring and every name you speak.

Catacombs Depth Clock For expeditions that descend below the first sub-level, track a Depth Clock [6]. Each time the party descends a stair, uses the unstable lift, or passes a sealed door, tick the clock. At 3 segments: all navigation rolls gain +1 DV (the walls shift). At 6 segments: the party reaches a sealed level that requires a bell-key, a blood offering, or a true name to open. The deepest level (Depth 6 or more) connects to the Ways Between — a mistake may drop the party into the Hollow's own threshold.

Ykrul

Wolf Standards, Winter Camps.

The steppe remembers every oath sworn beneath its endless sky, and the wolf-standards carry the honour of clans that have outlasted empires. To lead here is to keep the old ways sharp as winter steel.

I am a Herd-Scout. I can read a trail by the way the grass bends—and a lie by the way a rider sits. The Ykrul don't measure wealth in silver; we measure it in hoofbeats, in the snort of a warhorse at dawn, in the weight of a promise kept through winter.

We do not build monuments. We build relationships, each one a stone in an invisible cairn that stretches from the Dolmis to the Aberderrin. A camp is a weave of favours owed and honour satisfied. A feud is a slow equation: blood in, blood out, with interest compounded by winter.

The Khagan's Court doesn't rule from a throne—it rules from a saddle. Our "laws" are the Thirty-Six Sayings of the Road, and the thirty-seventh is the one you learn alone, on a night when the stars blink out and the wolf does not howl.

Never ride between two wolves at dusk. The space between them is a blind angle—a route with no exit, a debt with no payment. The wolves know this. They choose the gap deliberately.

— Sogata, Herd-Scout, who has never been lost but has been found many times

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Fermented mare's milk and dried meat—the milk is drunk warm from the skin, the meat is sliced thin and dried on saddle-pommels. The meat carries the taste of horse sweat. The milk carries the taste of the steppe. Both are acquired. Both are necessary.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To sit a horse. Ykrul children are placed on a horse before they can stand. The horse is old, patient, and knows the child's weight. A child who falls is a child who learns to hold tighter. A child who cannot ride is a child who cannot eat.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their braids. Ykrul warriors braid their hair with clan colours—red for the Wolf Clan, black for the Iron Horse, grey for the Salt Steppe. A stranger whose braids are cut has been shamed. A stranger whose braids are dyed black has killed a clan-mate. A stranger with no braids has no clan. A stranger with no clan is prey.

What is the most common crime? Horse theft. A stolen horse is a stolen relative. The price is blood—the thief's or the owner's. The courts are the council fires. The evidence is the horse's memory. Horses remember faces. Horses remember smells. Horses do not lie.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Khagan is not chosen by blood. He is chosen by the horse. Every five years, the clan chiefs lead their best stallions to the sacred ring. The horse that steps forward first chooses the next Khagan. The horse has not stepped forward in twenty years. The council chooses by silence. The silence is growing loud.

Where do people go when they die? To the sky. Ykrul dead are placed on open platforms, wrapped in felt, and left for the wind and the birds. The bones are collected after a year and ground into powder. The powder is mixed with clay and fired into beads. The beads are worn by the dead's descendants. The beads are warm. The warmth is memory.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a hostage string—a braided cord that ties your wrist to the wronged party's. The cord is cut when the apology is accepted. If the cord is cut before the apology is finished, you are not forgiven. If the cord is never cut, you are bound. The binding is lifelong. The binding is called "friend."

What is the most important festival? The First Grass (spring equinox). The herds are released onto the new pasture. The riders race to the horizon and back. The winner names the summer camps. The loser tends the sick animals. The sick animals are always the loser's. The loser always wins next year.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Sky-Speaker is a fraud. She cannot call storms. She cannot read omens. She cannot speak to the dead. She is a horse-witch who learned to read the clouds. The clouds are reliable. The Khagan does not know. The Khagan does not want to know.

9.1 Ykrul — “Wolf Standards, Winter Camps”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The steppe remembers every oath. The wolf counts your breaths.

Genre / Mood: Nomadic epic, honour-bound geometry, wind-whispered law.

Starting Location: A winter camp on the steppe edge, banners snapping in frost-bright wind as the Khagan’s fires burn in the east. A Khatun of the Ring offers a clay cup of salted tea. “The Khagan’s kin ride from the salt pan. The old sayings say the straight road is a lie. You came by the bent path — the wolf knows you. Speak your errand before the wind changes.”

Khatun of the Ring (Elite): “The steppe remembers every oath sworn beneath its endless sky, and the wolf-standards carry the honour of clans that have outlasted empires. To lead here is to keep the old ways sharp as winter steel.”

Herd-Scout (Commoner): “The horses know the weather before it comes, and the wolves know the thoughts in a man’s heart. Best speak true and ride steady – the steppe doesn’t forgive lies or clumsy hands on the reins. An old saying: the straight road is a lie. The wise follow the bent twig.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Ykrul ride the endless Violet Steppe, where the horizon drinks the sky and law lives in saddlebags. Their sacred patterns are called Kon’reh — not a written code but a living way of reading routes, debts, and exits. Every crossing has its price, every ford its weight, every feud an angle measured in horse-lengths and heartbeats. Hosts gather by the thousand, then scatter at a word; one night you share their fires, the next they test your bonds. Their banners are wolves’ teeth, their treaties braided cords, their memory longer than the rivers that cut the grass. The old folk still recite the Thirty-Six Sayings of the Road, but the wisest know the thirty-seventh is the one you learn alone, on a night when the stars blink out and the wolf does not howl.

What you notice first: The smell of horse sweat and woodsmoke. The way every rider counts hoofbeats under their breath. The silence when a stranger approaches the fire.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never ride between two wolves at dusk. The space between them is a blind angle — a route with no exit, a debt with no payment.

Regional Mood: The Geometry of the Steppe

Here, the horizon is not a line — it is a question. The Ykrul measure distance in oaths, not miles. A camp is a weave of favours owed and honour satisfied. A feud is a slow equation: blood in, blood out, with interest compounded by winter. The Khagan rules not by force alone but by keeping the old patterns — the unwritten rules that govern every crossing, every treaty, every duel. Break the pattern, and the steppe itself may turn against you. Keep it, and even enemies will share their salt. The Ykrul build no monuments. They build relationships, each one a stone in an invisible cairn that stretches from the Dolmis to the Aberderrin.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (passes/remounts/truces) that change position rather than call for a roll.

- If any A appears, echo steppe and sky motifs—wind that speaks, horses that remember, treaties that bind across generations.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Hostage Strings. Every oath is secured with a hostage string—a token kin, retainer, or sworn ally left in the other camp. If the deal is broken, the hostage’s fate becomes the story’s next beat. (Mechanically: create a 4-segment Hostage clock; on breach, the clock becomes a countdown to vengeance.)
- Steppe Law. Travelers are bound by steppe law: hospitality lasts three nights, insults last three generations. The Keeper may demand 1 SB when either law is broken.
- Sky Omens. When the sky shows strange signs—mock-suns, green fire, thunder without storm—the steppe itself speaks. Once per scene, players may treat an omen as a Diamond, shifting Position without a roll. The GM may bank 1 SB for future weather complications.
- Bowl and Board. Ykrul elders settle disputes not by shouting but by drawing two circles in the dirt: the Bowl for fairness, then the Board for routes and concessions. A successful Wits + Lore (or a relevant skill) roll creates a Seasonal Concession String at a ford, harbor, or pass. On a miss, the Market Moot [4] clock advances as factions argue.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Hoof — The Traveler. The path that never ends, the remount that never tires.
 - The Wolf’s Tooth — The Witness. Every oath is counted. Every broken promise is a scar.
 - The Salt Throat — Maelstraeus. The debt that salts your tongue; the interest that blinds your horses.
 - The Sky Father — Kuva. The wind that carries names; the storm that erases them.

The Thirty-Seven Sayings of the Road (Excerpts)

The Ykrul teach strategy not in manuals but in proverbs—each a line of play. A few of the most quoted:

Let the river freeze before you cross. — Do not rush. Let the opponent make the first move; your opening will be built on their impatience.

Borrow a corridor to trap a king. — When the enemy carves a path toward you, let it deepen. Then seal the mouth behind them.

Loot a burning house. — Strike only when the enemy is committed elsewhere.

Hide your dagger behind a smile. — Threaten one flank; strike the other.

The reed bends, the oak breaks. — Yield to overwhelming force, but do not break; preserve your core.

A distant banner casts no shadow. — A threat far away is no threat at all; control the centre.

The guest who outstays his welcome steals the host’s peace. — Allow no force, however small, to remain within your lines uncontrolled.

Count exits, not victims. — Before you move, count the ways your foe can flee. If the number is greater than zero, you have not yet won.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Bitter Root: Daughters of the Cord run a hospice near the salt pans. They ask no payment—but they cut threads. A renegade Sister hides among the herders, trying to untie her cord from a Ykrul blood-debt.
- The Threshold Compendium: The kurgans are Class II Anchor sites—the spirits of old Khagans bound by unfinished wergild. Saikou Ira would carry a bag of salt in each hand here.
- Malachai, the Chained Angel: A silver coin that never spends circulates among the salt-brokers. Take it, and your store never runs dry—but the coin will reappear in the salt pan at every new moon.
- The Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire: Ykrul psions are called “Weather-Readers.” They taste the future in the wind. Road-judges employ two—and have never trusted a verdict they didn’t hear from the sky.
- The Ninth: In any Ykrul camp, the ninth cup poured at a feast is for the ancestors. The wise pour eight and leave the ninth as a pause.

Ykrul Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Salt to the Wind: Toss a pinch into the air before a long ride. Ignore the first White Squall penalty.
- Knot the String: Tie a single knot in a hostage cord. Cancel Feud Spark or take –1 die on your next oath (your choice).
- Name to the Kurgan: Whisper a dead enemy’s name into a horse’s ear. Gain +1 Effect when raiding their clan this scene, but mark Obligation to the Bone-Singer.

- Scene Shift: A sky omen rewrites the terrain; paths appear or vanish.
- Patron Omen: A wolf watches, a horse speaks, the wind carries a name.
- Narrative Pivot: The feud is not what it seemed; the hostage was a willing sacrifice.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Steppe Law: Hospitality fails, insults echo, treaties shift mid-parley.
- Horse Culture: Mounts refuse to move, remount posts are empty, riding rolls suffer –1 die.
- Sky Omens: Weather changes instantly, stars point the wrong way, a raven shadows the party.

Extensions (Plug-in)

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Ride): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Dust Cloud.
- Cut the Herd (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a remount chit is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Squall (Resolve + Survival): On a hit in White Squall, you pick who keeps their bearings; on a miss, the GM does.

Patronage & Power

In Ykrul society, power flows through the careful management of hospitality, the binding of oaths with hostages, and the ability to navigate the complex web of tribal relationships. The Khagan maintains authority through the loyalty of noyans and the respect of khatuns, while local leaders wield influence through their control of resources like salt, remounts, and safe passage. The true power lies with those who understand the ancient customs and can maintain the delicate balance between hospitality and honour.

For the GM: Patronage in Ykrul society revolves around hospitality, hostage exchanges, and the ability to command respect from hosts and courts. Rewards often take the form of tokens, treaties, and official positions that can be leveraged into greater influence. To emphasize the old ways:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (tokens, braids, standards) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided.

- Use the Bowl and Board procedure for disputes—first fairness (Bowl), then routes and concessions (Board), then a seasonal right.
- Let rival hosts issue conflicting protections, forcing players to choose whose favour matters more.

In Ykrul society, your word is your bond, and your bond determines whether you ride as guest or ghost.

Ykrul of the Eastern Steppe — The Iron Grass Clans

The wind is colder here, and so are the hearts. We do not forget an insult because we cannot afford to. The grass is thinner, the wolves are bolder, and the sky speaks only in threats. The western Ykrul trade in stories. We trade in teeth.

Eastern Khatun (Elite): “The westerners count their debts in silk and verses. We count ours in frost and iron. A broken oath here is not a story for the skald — it is a hole in the winter larder. We do not forgive because we cannot. The Hollow rides with us every night. We have no room for mercy.”

The Eastern Ykrul share blood with their Violet Steppe cousins, but generations on the harsher eastern ranges — where the Kuvani horse clans also roam — have carved them into a different shape. They are more isolationist, more pragmatic, and their honour code has less room for poetry. They live among the Kuvani but do not intermarry; they trade when the snows allow, raid when the grass is thin, and speak a dialect that grinds like stones in a riverbed. Outsiders call them the Iron Grass Clans. They call themselves Those Who Remember Winter.

Eastern Variations (Use with Ykrul Core)

When generating an Eastern Ykrul camp, clan, or encounter, roll on the tables below instead of (or in addition to) the standard Ykrul generators. Use dice rather than cards.

Eastern Clan Trait (d6) Roll to determine a clan’s defining characteristic.

1. Frost-Bitten: The clan survives on the edge of the permafrost. +1 die to Survival in cold weather, but –1 die to all social rolls with lowlanders (they stink of frozen horse).
2. Kuvani-Kin: This clan has traded with the Kuvani for generations. They speak the Kuvani tongue and may call on one Kuvani remount station per journey. Rivals whisper they have forgotten the old ways.
3. Wolf-Pacted: The clan has a standing truce with a local wolf pack. Wolves do not attack their herds. In exchange, the clan leaves every ninth calf unbranded — for the wolves. The pack sometimes fights beside them in battle (Cap 2, appears once per arc).
4. Salt-Misers: This clan controls a small, bitter salt pan. They trade salt for iron with the Kuvani. They are wealthy but paranoid; any visitor is assumed to be a spy. +1 die to detect deception, but starting Position in parley is Desperate.
5. Curse-Bearers: A broken oath from three generations ago still hangs over the clan. Their horses are prone to sickness, and their children are born with grey eyes. They seek a way to lift the curse — and will do almost anything to find it.

6. Road-Breakers: This clan claims the right to open or close the high passes east. They carry a brass key (actually a bronze paiza) that Kuvani caravans recognise. They are isolationist, proud, and quick to draw steel over matters of passage.

Eastern Steppe Hazards (d6) When travelling through Eastern Ykrul territory, roll for a hazard (or replace a standard Clubs draw).

1. Frost-Rime Grass: The grass is coated in a crystalline frost that cuts horse legs. Travel speed halved for one leg. On a failed Survival roll, one mount goes lame (mark 1 Fatigue or lose 1 Supply).
2. Wolf Howl at Dusk: A pack shadows the party for a day and a night. They will not attack unless the party is weak or separated. If a character sleeps alone, roll Spirit+Resolve (DV 3) or be found by wolves at midnight.
3. Ice Lens Mirage: The flat steppe plays tricks. Navigation rolls suffer -1 die for the leg. On a miss, the party wanders into a kurgan field — the dead are restless. Start a Spirit Attention [4] clock.
4. Salt Pan Crack: A dried salt pan has a hidden fissure. A horse or wagon breaks through. Lose 1 Supply (salt pork ruined) and mark 1 Fatigue for the party as they pull the animal free.
5. Kuvani Border Markers: The party has crossed into a Kuvani grazing ground without permission. Kuvani riders appear (Cap 2, non-hostile unless provoked). They demand a story or a small offering of salt. Refusal starts a Border Dispute [4] clock.
6. Silent Sky: No birds, no wind, no insect sounds. The Hollow is near. For the next scene, any roll that shows a 1 also summons a Oath-Keeper — it will appear at the end of the scene to ask one question. Answer poorly, and it takes a memory.

Eastern Ykrul Encounter (d8) When meeting an Eastern Ykrul camp or patrol, roll for their initial disposition and a twist.

1. Hungry Hosts: The camp is low on supplies. They will trade — at ruinous prices. But they will also remember a fair deal. If you overpay (give 1 extra Supply), gain a String (Eastern Ykrul favour).
2. Grieving Clan: A child died last night. The camp is in mourning. They will not trade or talk. If you offer a story about a lost loved one, they will share a meal. The story must be true.
3. Feud-Watch: The clan is on alert for raiders from a rival banner. They mistake the party for scouts. The first social roll is at Desperate Position. A successful Deception or Bribe (cost 1 Boon or 1 Supply) clears the misunderstanding.
4. Salt-Broker's Caravan: A small caravan of salt traders, heavily armed. They are willing to trade salt for news of the west. They ask pointed questions about the Violet Steppe — they are planning a raid.
5. Kurgan Pilgrims: A group of bone-singers and their guards are travelling to a sacred kurgan. They will allow the party to accompany them if the party helps perform a ritual: each member must whisper a forgotten name into a horse skull. Afterwards, the party gains +1 die to resist fear for one day, but the Hollow knows one of your names.
6. Storm-Singer's Challenge: A sky-speaker challenges the party to a weather-calling contest. Roll Spirit+Lore vs. DV 4. On a success, the storm-singer is impressed and grants a Sky's Exception (ignore one weather hazard). On a failure, the party is drenched and loses 1

Fatigue.

7. Hollow-Touched Camp: The camp is silent. Everyone is sitting still, staring at a single point. A Oath-Keeper has passed through. If the party can speak the name of the broken oath, the camp will wake. Otherwise, they must leave an offering of salt and retreat.
8. Iron Grass Market: A rare gathering of three clans at a neutral ford. The market lasts only one day. Goods for sale: remounts (cost 1 Supply each), salt (1 Supply per 2 portions), iron arrowheads (1 Boon for 1 die bonus on next ranged attack), and one cursed paiza (half price, but the previous owner’s ghost follows).

Eastern Ykrul Customs (d6) When interacting with an Eastern Ykrul camp, roll for a local custom that may affect social rolls.

1. No Left Hand: Offering anything with the left hand is an insult. All social rolls using Presence+Sway suffer –1 die unless you explicitly use your right hand.
2. Fire First, Talk Later: Guests must warm their hands at the central fire before speaking. If you refuse, the host will be offended — the first request you make is automatically refused.
3. The Empty Saddle: One saddle in the camp is always empty. It belongs to a rider who died last winter. If you sit in it, you must tell a story about a death you witnessed. If the story is true, the ghost may give you a warning (GM reveals one future hazard). If false, the ghost haunts you for a day (you gain the Haunted condition).
4. No Naming the Dead: Eastern Ykrul do not speak the names of the deceased for one year after death. If you accidentally name a dead person, the clan demands a blood-price: 1 Supply or a lock of your hair.
5. Salt Before Meat: A meal is not blessed until the host throws a pinch of salt into the fire. If you eat before the salt, you are considered an oath-breaker. The meal will not nourish you (you do not recover Fatigue from that rest).
6. The Ninth Breath: When drinking fermented mare’s milk, you must pause after the eighth sip. If you take a ninth, you must immediately name an enemy. The clan will consider that enemy as their own for one season. The enemy may not appreciate this.

Eastern Ykrul Superstitions (burn for +1 die once) Add these to the standard Ykrul superstitions when in the eastern steppe.

- Iron to the Frost: Press a cold iron nail into the ground before a white squall. Ignore the first Frost-Rime Grass penalty.
- Braid the Tail: Tie a single knot in a horse’s tail hair. Cancel Wolf Howl at Dusk or take –1 die on your next survival roll (your choice).
- Name to the Hollow: Whisper a dead enemy’s name into a salt pan at midnight. Gain +1 Effect when evading Oath-Keepers this scene, but mark Obligation to the Eastern Khatun.

Eastern Ykrul Boss Seed (d6) When the party faces a major antagonist from the Eastern Ykrul, roll for a unique foe.

1. The Frost-Khagan (Undying): A chieftain who froze to death but did not stop riding. Phases: Blizzard’s Call → Frozen Host → The Long Night. Cracks: burn a horse tooth in a fire, speak his true name (carved on his saddle), or offer a living rider to take his place.
2. The Salt-Throat (Cursed Broker): A salt merchant who sold his clan’s future for wealth. Phases: Weigh the Debt → Salt Tithe → The Scales Close. Cracks: pay a wergild in untainted salt, expose his false paiza, or cut his hostage string with a silver knife.

3. The Hollow's Rider (Oath-Keeper in Flesh): A warrior who made a pact with the Hollow to survive a winter famine. Phases: Count the Breath → Ride the White → Claim the Ninth. Cracks: feed him a memory of warmth, show him a red thread tied in eight knots, or outride him to the horizon — the Hollow cannot cross moving water.
4. The Iron Grandmother (Bone-Singer Revenant): A ancient bone-singer who refused to die. Phases: Song of Names → Kurgan Rising → The Dead Vote. Cracks: sing a true name she does not know, return a stolen kurgan stone, or answer her riddle: “What debt is never paid?”
5. The Wolf-Banner (Pack-Leader): A clan chief who has fused with a wolf spirit. Phases: Stalk → Circle → Feast. Cracks: break his banner, offer a raw heart to his pack, or survive a night without fire.
6. The Sky-Weeping Child (Curse Bearer): A child born during a white squall, marked by the Hollow. Phases: Winter Dreams → Frost-Fever → The Ninth Day. Cracks: warm her hands with your own breath, speak her true name (her mother is still alive — she will tell you), or find the horse that was born at the same moment — it carries the other half of the curse.

Eastern Steppe Names (d8 each) For quick NPC generation, roll or choose:

Male first names (d8): 1. Bortei, 2. Temurjin, 3. Khorchi, 4. Edil, 5. Sogata, 6. Toghrul, 7. Ogedei, 8. Chagatai.

Female first names (d8): 1. Orghana, 2. Borte, 3. Altan, 4. Saruul, 5. Checheg, 6. Nergui, 7. Tolui, 8. Hulan.

Clan epithets (d8): 1. Iron-Heart, 2. Frost-Mane, 3. Salt-Tongue, 4. Wolf-Brood, 5. Hollow-Sight, 6. Curse-Bearer, 7. Red-Hoof, 8. Silent-Banner.

Eastern Ykrul at a Glance

Core Traits: Isolationist, pragmatic, harsher honour code, live among Kuvani but do not intermarry. Key Resources: Salt, iron, remounts, wolf truces, kurgan spirits. Common Conflicts: Feuds over salt pans, disputes with Kuvani over grazing, Hollow incursions in winter, curse-lifting quests. Tone: Bleaker than western Ykrul. Fewer stories, more teeth. Hospitality is still sacred — but the guest is expected to earn it. Ritual Objects: Frost-bitten stirrups, bronze paizas, horse-tooth chits, salt-cakes, wolf skull standards.

Chapter 10

Vilikari

Laurels & Longhouses.

We are the bridge between empire and wilderness, the marriage of law and custom. Our strength lies not in choosing one path but in walking both with equal surety.

I am a Hearth-Mother. I have never lost a quarrel. My voice is soft, my memory longer than the Foedus Stone.

The Vilikari straddle the border like a drunkard on a fence—half empire, half steppe, all headache. Their foedus treaties aren't just agreements—they're a tragicomic mess, half carved in marble by emperors who forgot to pay the sculptors, half braided in string by chieftains who forgot which knot meant "peace." And yet, somehow, the treaties hold. Not because of the marble. Not because of the string. Because both sides are too exhausted to start the argument over again.

Never invoke only one law. The mallus (oak-ring) and the basilica (marble bench) must both be honoured. Choose one, and the other will find you—usually at midnight, usually with a writ, usually with a sword.

— Hearth-Mother Vesna, who has fed three kings and forgotten none of their debts

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Oatmeal with dried berries—the berries are harvested from the border scrub, where the empire's orchards meet the steppe's wild brambles. The berries taste of both. The oatmeal tastes of neither. The oatmeal is filler. The berries are the point.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To speak both languages—Imperial Utaran and the steppe cant. A child who speaks only one is a child who will never cross the border. A child who crosses the border is a child who will come back with stories. A child with stories is a child who will be listened to. Listening is power.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Which side of the road they ride on. The empire's roads are measured from the centre. The steppe's paths are measured from the edge. A stranger who rides in the centre is an imperial. A stranger who rides at the edge is a nomad. A stranger who rides in the ditch is a spy. The ditch is not a road. The ditch is a message.

What is the most common crime? Treaty-splitting—selling the same rights to both sides. A Vilikari factor will promise river access to an imperial merchant and grazing rights to a Ykrul clan, then collect from both and disappear before the paperwork collides. The crime is not in the selling. The crime is in getting caught before you cross the border.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Foedus Stone is a copy. The original was stolen in 712 AR by a Vilikari trader who owed debts on both sides. She melted it down and sold the marble dust as "treaty-strengthening powder." The powder was mostly chalk. The treaties are still holding. The traders are still selling.

Where do people go when they die? To the border. The Vilikari bury their dead at the edge—close enough to the empire for the priests to pray, close enough to the steppe for the shamans to chant. The dead are planted face-up, so they can see both skies. The skies are different colours. The dead do not complain.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You invoke the mallus—the oak-ring court. The wronged party sits inside the ring. The wrongdoer circles it three times, speaking their apology. On the third circuit, the elders judge. If the apology is accepted, the wrongdoer is admitted into the ring. If it is rejected, the ring closes. The wrongdoer is outside. Outside is the lawless land. The lawless land is where the wolves are.

What is the most important festival? The Renewal of the Foedus (summer solstice). The stone is washed with milk and honey. The milk is from a Ykrul mare. The honey is from an imperial apiary. The mixture is drunk by the elders. The elders speak the treaty aloud. The treaty is long. The elders are old. The ceremony takes all day.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Foedus Stone has a crack. The crack was caused by a hammer in 799 AR, during a dispute over horse tariffs. The stone was repaired with clay and prayer. The clay is drying. The prayer is fading. The crack is spreading. When the stone splits, the treaty splits with it. No one knows what happens then. No one wants to find out.

10.1 Vilikari — “Laurels & Longhouses”

Quick Reference

Tagline: Two laws, one people. The oak remembers; the marble writes. The stone is cracking.

Federate King (Elite): “We are the bridge between empire and wilderness, the marriage of law and custom. Our strength lies not in choosing one path but in walking both with equal surety. But the bridge is rotting, and no one sends hostages anymore.”

Hearth-Mother (Commoner): “The old ways and new laws both have their place at our table. Serve the right mead to the right guest, honor the proper customs, and you’ll find we’re better hosts than most kings. The trouble is, the guests are forgetting why they came.”

Genre / Mood: Early Holy Roman Empire on the steppe — legal dualism, hybrid identity, frontier pragmatism, forgotten treaties.

Starting Location: A longhouse quarter tucked into an old forum. Laurel garlands hang from broken columns. Smoke from a dozen hearths curls under cracked marble arches. A Hearth-Mother offers a cup of small beer and a piece of oatcake. “The Foedus Stone cracks,” she says. “The steppe listens. Which law will you speak when the Ykrul envoy arrives — oak or marble? The stone has a new crack. No one knows which promise it represents.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Vilikari are not caught between empire and steppe — they are forgotten. The Foedus Stone, the ancient treaty that guaranteed their autonomy, is cracking. Every season, another shard falls. The Ecktorian clerks have stopped renewing the oath; the Ykrul no longer send hostages. The Vilikari are becoming invisible to both sides. Their law still holds, but the witnesses are dying. The Elder of Elders speaks once a year, but fewer and fewer listen. Their halls are longhouses raised over ruined forums; their laws carved on both oak and marble; their loyalties braided like the braids of their war-maidens’ hair. Unlike the Ykrul, who read the geometry of the steppe, the Vilikari read the geometry of jurisdiction. They are the bulk of the non-elite population in Ecktoria — the legionaries’ descendants who never went home. A Vilikari blacksmith in Ecktoria might swear by the marble bench; his cousin two valleys over in Acasia still ties knots for the oak. This is not contradiction. It is survival. But survival requires witnesses. And the witnesses are fading.

What you notice first: The smell of woodsmoke and old parchment. The way everyone speaks two languages at once — switching mid-sentence. The longhouse roofs that use broken imperial tiles as shingles. The silence where there used to be oaths.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never invoke only one law. The mallus (oak-ring) and the basilica (marble bench) must both be honored. Choose one, and the other will find you. But now, neither may answer.

Regional Mood: Laurels and Longhouses

Here, the past is not a ruin — it is a creditor. The old Utaran forums still echo with the footsteps of legionaries, but now those columns hold longhouse roofs. The Vilikari do not choose between empire and tribe; they marry them, awkwardly, imperfectly, and with frequent arguments. Their kings wear both a laurel wreath and a wolf-tail cloak. Their courts meet twice: once under the oak for blood-price, once on the marble bench for statute. No verdict is final until both have spoken.

But the witnesses are dying. The Foedus Stone has a crack for every forgotten promise. The newest crack has no date. It appeared last winter. No one knows which promise it represents.

On the coast, Vilikari fishing villages double as smugglers' coves, running fugitives, forbidden goods, and whispered messages. Their boats are fast, their pilots know every reef and patrol route, and their loyalty is to the cargo's survival. They are the last people in the Amaranthine who still remember the old treaty's third clause. They are not sure why it matters. They keep it anyway.

Prominent NPCs of the Vilikari

Name	Role/Title	Motivation	Rumoured Quirk
Federate King Aldric	Rex-Dux of the Vilikari	Keep the two-law balance and the Foedus Stone intact	He has three thrones — oak, marble, and saddle. He uses whichever is not being argued over. Lately, all three are dusty.
Hearth-Mother Vesna	Keeper of guest-right (commoner exemplar)	Protect her village from raiders and tax men alike	She has never lost a quarrel; her voice is soft, her memory longer than the Foedus Stone. But the stone is shrinking.
Shield-Brother Rurik	Comitatus oath-bearer	Enforce the mallus code in the marches	His braids are his ledger; each knot is a debt paid — or owed. He has started tying knots in his sleep.

March Theodora	Notary	Utaran-trained legalist	Draft treaties that neither side can break	She writes in three scripts; her left hand writes Latin, her right writes runes. Her third hand writes in ink that no one can read — not even her.
Smuggler Drago	Captain	Vilikari fisherman and trafficker	Run contraband and refugees past the Kahfagian patrols	He knows every reef and every lantern shift; the harbormasters cannot catch him. He says the Foedus Stone’s cracks are good for business — no one checks the old treaties anymore.
Elder of Elders		Thing-council speaker	Preserve the old customs against imperial erosion	He speaks once a year; the rest of the time he listens — and remembers. But his mem- ory is cracking like the stone.

Hearts — People & Factions

2. Hearth-Mother — Guest-cup and wergild chest key; hospitality as power. ‘[SOCIAL]’ She has never lost a quarrel. Her voice is soft, her memory longer than the Foedus Stone. She remembers debts that are not yet owed — and the stone is forgetting.
3. Shield-Brother — Comitatus oaths braided into hair; loyalty as bond. ‘[MILITARY]’ ‘[OATH]’ His braids are his ledger. Each knot is a debt paid — or owed. He has started tying knots in his sleep, hoping the stone will remember.

5. Horse-Reeve — Rations pasture between plows and warbands. ‘[TRADE]’ He measures grass in fistfuls. The Ykrul respect his arithmetic. The Ecktorians pretend not to notice. He is saving fistfuls to patch the stone.
6. Ykrul Envoy — Riding under safe-conduct; speaks debts in proverbs. ‘[SOCIAL]’ He never carries a weapon. His tongue is sharp enough. His hostage string has nine knots. He is running out of space — and the stone is running out of memory.
7. Old Legionary — Drill-master for Vilikari levies; Utar in muscle memory. ‘[MILITARY]’ He still marks time in paces. The recruits call him “Grandfather Eagle.” The eagle on his shield is chipped. He says the stone’s cracks are just more places to put his thumb.
8. Ecktorial Factor — Vilikari blood, Ecktorial coin; flows where the ledger points. ‘[TRADE]’ His coat has two collars — one for each loyalty. He wears whichever is warmer. His ledger has three columns. The third column is labelled “crack width.”
9. Kahfagian Pilot — Lantern-law chit and clan tattoo; sea-law on land. ‘[TRAVEL]’ He navigates by stars and tariffs. Both change with the season. He has never been lost — only delayed. The stone’s cracks are good for smuggling.
10. Marcher-Lord — Iron-nail crown, Vilikari law in pocket; a frontier king. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ His crown was a plowshare. He reversed the curse. His hands are still calloused. He does not sit on his throne. He spends his days pressing his ear to the stone.
- J War-Maiden — Oath-braid names the dead and the owed; vengeance as memory. ‘[COMBAT]’ ‘[OATH]’ Her braid is longer than her sword. Both have drawn blood. She never cuts the braid. The dead would forget her. The stone is forgetting everyone else.

- K Federate King — Rex-Dux sworn to forms, sung by his own. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ He has three thrones — oak, marble, and saddle. He uses whichever is not being argued over. His crown is a laurel and a wolf’s tooth. He has stopped arguing. He just listens to the stone.
- A Elder of Elders — Thing-council speaker; a nod can unmake a clan. ‘[LAW]’ He speaks once a year. The rest of the time he listens — and remembers. But his memory is cracking like the stone. He has started writing things on his own skin.

(Two Laws/Two Fronts/Old Grudges) Annona late — grain stipend misses the comitatus; tempers quicken; jurisdiction tangle of mallus vs. basilica writ.

Clubs — Complications/Threats

2. Annona Late — Grain stipend misses the comitatus; tempers quicken like flint. ‘[SUPPLY]’ ‘[SOCIAL]’ The granary is full. The keys are in the wrong vault. Someone is waiting for the price to rise. The soldiers are not. The stone does not care.
 3. Law Tangle — Mallus verdict vs. basilica writ — whose seal bites? ‘[LAW]’ The oak judge and the marble judge are cousins. They send each other holiday cards. The case has been open for three generations. The stone has forgotten who started it.
 4. Raid Rumor — A Ykrul boyar; levies panic the plowlands. ‘[COMBAT]’ ‘[FEAR]’ The boyar is a ghost — or a tax collector. The farmers don’t wait to find out. They burn the fields themselves. The stone’s cracks are good cover for ghosts.
 5. Bridge Levy — Doubled for road-works; caravans balk, fists rise. ‘[TRADE]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ The road-works are a ditch. The ditch fills every spring. The bridge keeper has a new sword. He sharpens it on the stone.
 6. Succession Feud — Wolf-brother claim vs. purple-charter heir. ‘[POLITICS]’ ‘[DEATH]’ The wolf-brother has a better sword. The purple-charter has a better notary. The notary’s ink is mixed with blood. The stone’s crack drinks it.
 7. Foedus Recall — A prefecture resettlement is “requested”; homes bristle. ‘[LAW]’ ‘[SOCIAL]’ The prefecture’s map is forty years old. It shows a village that drowned. The villagers are still there. The stone remembers their names — barely.
 8. Coin Talk — Debasement; pay demanded in salt, hides, or hostages. ‘[TRADE]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The salt is from a disputed pan. The hides are from cattle that were never born. The hostages are children. The stone’s cracks are full of their names.
 9. Grave Offense — A burial field disturbed; omens ride with the news. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[OMEN]’ The ancestors are angry. They have a list. Your name may be on it. The list is carved on a ship’s prow. The stone’s new crack is shaped like a finger pointing.
 10. Port Clash — Lantern-law vs. street-law; confiscations bloom. ‘[LAW]’ ‘[TRADE]’ The lanterns were moved last night. The old safe channel is now a reef. The harbor master is not answering questions. He is listening to the stone.
- J Warband Flip — Colors change mid-pay; hostage protocol snaps shut. ‘[MILITARY]’ ‘[BETRAYAL]’ The hostages are eating well. Their captors are not. The captain’s new banner is stitched with his old captain’s hair. The stone’s crack has grown wider.
- Q Restoration Preacher — Stirs crowds against the “barbarian king in purple.” ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[FEAR]’ The preacher’s license was signed by a dead abbot. The seal is still warm. The crowd does not know. The stone does not care.
- K General Levy — The march is closed; markets freeze into spears. ‘[MILITARY]’ ‘[SUPPLY]’ The levy notice is posted in three languages. None of them are local. The tax collector has a bow. The stone has stopped listening.
- A Spring Melt — Eats the Wolf Road; proofs, plans, and armies bog. ‘[WEATHER]’ ‘[TRAVEL]’ The road is a memory. The ruts fill with water — and older things. The bridge keeper is fishing for boots. The stone’s crack is now a chasm.

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Foedus Seal — Settlement and stipends confirmed for a season. ‘[LAW]’ The seal is a bronze wolf’s head. It warms when the treaty holds — and cools when it doesn’t. The wolf’s eyes are garnets. One eye is cracked.
3. Mallus Right — Hold court under the oak and be obeyed. ‘[LAW]’ The oak is older than the kingdom. Its roots have seen more verdicts than the throne. The acorns are bitter. The oak’s leaves are falling early.
4. Stipend Arrears — Paid in salt and grain; portable, persuasive. ‘[SUPPLY]’ The salt is grey. The grain is from last harvest. Both are worth more than coin. The soldiers will accept. The stone will not.
5. Utaran Patent — Citizenship-style privilege; doors open, bows deepen. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The patent is a worn scrap of vellum. It has been folded and refolded for a century. The seal is a sunburst. The sunburst is fading.
6. Stall-Right — Customs favor on a frontier market line. ‘[TRADE]’ The stall is a painted plank. Plant it, and the tax man will pretend not to see you. He will remember the favour. The stone will not.
7. Hostage Treaty — Exchange fosters; grudges trade for leverage. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[OATH]’ The hostages are children. Their parents are patient. The treaty has nine clauses. The ninth is unspoken. The stone has forgotten the first eight.
8. Remount Allotment — Fresh horses from royal paddocks, no questions. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The horses are from the king’s own herd. They know the roads better than you. They also know the king’s secrets. They refuse to cross the stone’s shadow.
9. Wergild Table — Recognized by both codes; vengeance priced and paid. ‘[LAW]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The table is a slate slab. The prices are carved deep — and often recarved. The newest price is a year of rain. The rain is washing away the carvings.
10. Bridge Farm — Imperial for a season; funds and friends accrue. ‘[TRADE]’ The bridge toll is a copper a head. The bridge keeper is your new best friend. He also keeps a list of your enemies. He scratches the list on the stone.
- J Purple Warrant — Wear the stripe; officials defer on sight. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The stripe is a sash. It was a curtain in a past life. The present life is yours. Do not lose it. The stone’s crack has swallowed one like it.
- Q Queen’s Audience — Private; a whisper becomes policy. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The audience is held in a garden. The flowers are listening. The gardener is a spy. The gardener is also the queen. She keeps a piece of the stone under her tongue.
- K Dux Commission — Command a mixed unit with pay authority. ‘[MILITARY]’ The commission is a baton. It doubles as a mace in a pinch. It also doubles as a receipt. The receipt is overdue. The stone has a receipt for the stone.
- A Great Law Day — Proclaim a new concord; one temporary exception to old law. ‘[LAW]’ ‘[LEGEND]’ The proclamation is made at noon. By sunset, everyone will have an opinion. By dawn, the Foedus Stone will have a new finger — or a new crack.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).

- Diamonds are codified outcomes (charters/rights/escorts) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo law and bond motifs — oaths that bind, stones that witness, treaties that remember every hand — but also cracks and forgetting.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Witness Fading Clock [8]: Tracks the erosion of Vilikari legal authority. Ticks when:
 - The party defies a Vilikari judgment or brings a dispute to an outside court (+1)
 - The GM spends 2 SB to represent a forgotten oath (+1)
 - A foreign envoy (Ykrul, Ecktorian, etc.) publicly ignores a Vilikari ruling (+1)

At 4 segments: Any Vilikari NPC the party interacts with suffers –1 die to social rolls (they doubt their own authority). The stone’s cracks are visible to all. At 8 segments: The Foedus Stone cracks completely. The Vilikari are no longer recognized as a neutral party. The Ykrul and Ecktorians begin fighting over their land. The party can reset the clock only by renewing the treaty — finding a witness older than the stone itself (a Lethai-al elder, a Trow, a ghost of the original signatory) and having them speak the oath aloud.
- Two-Law Balance: Whenever a jurisdictional conflict arises (mallus vs. basilica, oak vs. marble), players may step Position up by citing the Foedus Stone or an older precedent — but every use adds a tick to a Two-Law [4] clock. When it fills, one side demands exclusive authority. The other side sharpens its knives. If the Witness Fading Clock is at 4+, this clock ticks twice as fast.
- Frontier Diplomacy: If a Heart card involves a foreign envoy, a federate, or a mixed-blood courtier, treat the first Diamond played in the scene as doubled leverage. Once per session, a deal struck reverberates — advance or start a Border Tension front. If the Witness Fading Clock is at 6+, the deal also ticks the clock by 1 (the stone forgets another clause).
- March Markets: At any Staple Market, Ford, or Bridge, Diamonds tied to rights or escorts may be cashed as currency in lieu of coin, one-for-one. Doing so creates a Ledger Debt that the GM may call in later through factions or raiders. The debt is never written. It is remembered — until the stone forgets.
- The Vilikari Diaspora (Ecktoria & Acasia): Vilikari characters in Ecktoria gain +1 die on Streetwise checks (they know the back alleys and the bribes), but –1 die on social rolls with Old Blood patricians (who see them as upstarts). In Acasia, they gain +1 die on Survival checks (their ancestors were farmers here) but –1 die on social rolls with the Curse-touched (who remember imperial tax collectors). A Vilikari character may start with one “family ledger” — a minor asset that tracks a single unpaid favour across generations. If the Witness Fading Clock ever fills, the ledger turns to ash.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Two-Faced King — Mykkiel. Justice that wears a laurel and a wolf’s tail.
 - The Hearth Judge — The Witness. The flame that watches both sides of the bargain.
 - The Oak Father — Grimmer. The root that holds the law; the branch that signs the treaty.
 - The Coin Saint — Maelstraeus. Interest on a handshake; the ledger that never sleeps.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Smugglers’ Covenant (The Sealed Gate): Vilikari pilots who run the Kahfagian coast swear by a secret oath to the Unlatched Lock — a threshold that never fully closes. They leave a copper nail at every hidden cove. A captain who breaks the covenant finds that their boat will not cross the tide line; the sea simply refuses to carry them. The Kahfagian Admiralty has tried to bribe the covenant’s keeper; he accepted the coin and sank the next morning in calm water. The stone’s newest crack appeared that same night.
- Saint Theodora of the Dual Writ (The Witness): A march notary who uncovered a Fenwood spy in the Federate King’s court. She forced the spy to sign a confession under both oak and marble, then burned the oak copy and kept the marble one. The spy vanished, but his signature appears on every broken treaty in Vilikari history. Her quill is kept in the Dux’s Palace; it writes in lemon juice, and the truth it records cannot be erased by fire or water. The stone’s cracks drink the juice.
- The Host of the Two Ledgers (The Longhouse Healers): A hospice near the Foedus Stone is run by grey-robed healers who ask no payment. They treat wounded raiders from both sides of the steppe, and the Ykrul and Ecktorian captains have agreed to a truce around its doors. The Federate King tolerates them because they also hold the rite of the Unbuckled Oath — a ceremony where a knight may renounce a blood-debt without losing honour, by placing their sword on the stone and speaking a single true regret. The stone remembers these regrets. It has many.
- The Ostrihari Cousins (The Savage Heart): The eastern Vilikari, called Ostrihari by lowlanders, are no more savage than any frontier people. Their reputation comes from the bear cults of the upper Wolf Road, where initiates wear cured skins and speak in growls. The Ostrihari do not raid Vilikari villages; they trade furs for iron and send their young to serve as mercenaries in the Black Banners. A Vilikari proverb says: “The Ostrihari sharpen their teeth on stone, not on kin.” The stone does not mind. It has no teeth left.
- The Ninth: In any Vilikari scene, the ninth witness called to a mallus court is always a ghost. The wise stop at eight and settle out of court. Those who call a ninth witness find that the ghost speaks the truth — but the truth is always the worst possible version, and the living witnesses remember it as their own. The stone’s cracks are full of these truths.

Vilikari Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Stone: Crumble a crust at the base of the Foedus Stone. Ignore the first Law Tangle penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Braid: Tie a single knot in a horse’s tail. Cancel Annona Late or take –1 die on your next supply roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Oak: Whisper a dead enemy’s name into the hollow of the mallus oak. Gain +1 Effect when collecting wergild from their kin this scene, but mark Obligation to the Elder of Elders. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Press the Crack (new): Touch the newest crack in the Foedus Stone and speak a promise you intend to break. Gain +1 die on your next deception roll, but the stone will remember your name. The Hollow will too. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from march officials or tribal elders.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby levy guards or market patrols.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for trackers or treaty keepers.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favorable legal window.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.
- Crack Whispers (Vilikari only): A character hears the stone whispering a forgotten promise. They must test Resolve (DV 3) or mark 1 Fatigue.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Horse-Reeve or March Notary becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to legal challenge or border closure.
- Foe Appears: A rival faction or warband arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.
- Witness Fading: Advance the Witness Fading Clock by 1 segment (the stone forgets something).

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional shield-brothers, levy forces, or foreign troops arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.
- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes - treaty voided/levy called/border dispute erupts.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.
- Stone Speaks: The Foedus Stone whispers a forgotten clause that invalidates a character's legal protection for the scene.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: Federate King, Queen of Marches, or Elder of Elders intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically - raid hits/levy called/treaty breaks.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice - omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.
- Crack Splits: The Foedus Stone's newest crack widens. One of the party's active Diamonds is lost (crumbles to dust).

Region-Specific SB Options

- Vilikari (Two Laws): Legal documents contradict each other, courts issue conflicting rulings, oaths bind to different authorities. The stone's cracks eat ink.

- Vilikari (Frontier Diplomacy): Treaties expire without warning, foreign envoys demand additional concessions, mixed-blood courtiers shift allegiances. The stone forgets who signed what.
- Vilikari (Border Tensions): Frontier posts close without notice, markets shift locations, safe-conducts are revoked mid-journey. The stone’s shadow grows longer.

Boss Seeds (three-phase foes)

- The March Notary (quills like daggers) — Phases: Citation Tangle → Seal Swap → Precedent Trap. Cracks: produce a Foedus Seal to quiet him; a Queen’s Audience overrules his filing. If the Witness Fading Clock is at 6+, he gains +1 die in all phases (the stone supports him).
- Ykrul Storm-Rider (wolf-cloak, bone whistle) — Phases: Raid Cry → Herd Stampede → Blood Price. Cracks: a Wergild Table settles the feud without combat; a Hostage Treaty buys a season’s peace. He fights harder if the stone is cracked (he smells weakness).
- The Prefect’s Auditor (Ecktorial ink on his fingers) — Phases: Ledger Seizure → Tax Levy → Fort Closure. Cracks: an Utaran Patent grants immunity; a Mallus Right transfers jurisdiction to the oak. He carries a piece of the stone in his pocket; if the party takes it, the Witness Fading Clock resets by 2.
- The Stone’s Ghost (Foedus Avatar) — Phases: Whisper of Forgotten Clauses → Crack Widens → The Hollow Steps Through. Cracks: speak the original treaty aloud (requires a Lethai-al witness), repair the stone with a memory of a kept promise, or sacrifice a personal oath to feed the stone instead of the Hollow.

Extensions (Plug-in)

- Two-Law Dial (Oak ↔ Marble): Track which legal tradition holds sway.
 - Oak High: +1 Position when invoking mallus, blood-price, or tribal custom; first basilica petition starts one step worse.
 - Marble High: +1 Effect when citing charters, patents, or Utaran precedent; first mallus oath starts one step worse.
 - Center the dial by offering a wergild recognized by both sides or hosting a joint moot. If the Witness Fading Clock is at 4+, centering requires a sacrifice (a memory, a name, a drop of blood on the stone).
- Treaty-Feast Procedure (fast diplomacy):
 1. Set the Table: Name 2–3 terms (what both sides want) and 1 taboo (off-limits).
 2. First Cup (Position): Roll a social test; success grants +1 die to bargain, failure grants the host 1 SB.
 3. Bread & Salt (Offer): Put one leverage on the table (Diamond or oath-promise). Host matches with an obligation (escort, market access, or hostage).
 4. Smoke (Complication): The GM reveals a pressure tied to Old Grudges or Two Laws. Resolve it or accept a Rider Clause.
 5. Knot the Braid: On success, create a Feast-Bond [3] clock that protects both parties from betrayal in that matter while it has segments; on breach, the breaker immediately takes 1–2 SB and the clock flips to Blood-Owed [3].

6. Stone Witness: If the Feast-Bond is sworn at the Foedus Stone, it also reduces the Witness Fading Clock by 1. The stone remembers one more promise.
- Frontier Market (quick trading):
 - At any Staple Market or Stone Ford, players may convert a held $\Diamond$ into a Market Edge (+1 die to all buy/sell rolls).
 - Each conversion ticks a Market Knives [4] clock for that locale. When it fills, a rival factor challenges your right to trade — face a duel, a bribe demand, or a confiscation.
 - If the Witness Fading Clock is at 6+, the rival factor is a ghost — a forgotten signatory of the Foedus Stone. The duel is a legal dream-duel.
 - Start-of-Scene Omens (1d6):
 1. Laurel Wilt: first legal action gains +1d; first boast draws Law Tangle.
 2. Smoke on the Steppe: Raid Rumor advances once; shortcuts open.
 3. Twin Bells: both courts are in session; pick a side or start Law Tangle.
 4. Queen's Dove: a message arrives; +1d on the next Queen's Audience.
 5. Grey Salt: Stipend Arrears counts double value today; smugglers' ears open.
 6. Old Eagle: an Utaran relic surfaces; Utaran Patent use is free this scene.
 7. Crack Light (special when Witness Fading Clock 4): The stone glows. The next legal argument made at the stone is automatically binding — for both sides.
 - Plug-in SB Conversions (Vilikari Flavor):
 - 1 SB $\rightarrow$ Seal Crack: a writ loses half its value until re-witnessed.
 - 2 SB $\rightarrow$ Citation War: increase DV by 1 unless you produce a precedent (spend a $\Diamond$ or recall a past ruling).
 - 3+ SB $\rightarrow$ Crown Fracture: a treaty splits; halve a consequence by accepting a rival's seal on your paper (start Two-Law clock).
 - 2 SB (Vilikari only) $\rightarrow$ Stone Whisper: The Foedus Stone reveals a forgotten clause. The GM must answer one yes/no question about a treaty or oath in the region.
 - Reputation Echoes:
 - Court-Favored: once/session, downgrade Law Tangle to a minor delay; the next document you present is scrutinized (+1 DV).
 - Raid-Tested: +1 Position when evading Ykrul or Black Banners; supply lines run 1 segment longer.
 - Neutral Broker: +1d with both oak and marble in a treaty scene; any betrayal earns Blood-Owed [2] from both sides.
 - Stone-Marked (gained by renewing the treaty): The Foedus Stone remembers your name. Once per session, you may reroll a failed social roll involving a Vilikari or a treaty. The stone will ask for a memory in return.
 - Cross-Region Hooks (quick integration):
 - Kahfagia (Lantern-Law): A Foedus Seal may stand in for a Safe-Conduct along a beaconed lane once. Doing so starts Port Clash [2] in the next harbor touched.
 - Ecktoria (Imperial Remnants): An Utaran Patent counts as either Archive Hour (scholars open doors) or Icon License (display symbols) in Ecktorial sites — choose once per session.

- Aelerian Mountains (Pass & Toll): A Pass-Ring (from the Aeler expansion) grants priority at dwarf switchbacks; cashing it to bypass inspection spawns Ledger Notice [3].
- Direwood (Breath & Bells): Spending Stipend Arrears for levee labor converts one Direwood Clubs draw into a Ward-Salt Diamond for a scene, then begins Names Disputed [3] with bell-wardens.
- Acasia (Curse Tithe): A Wergild Table accepted by a Curse-touched village also clears one Feud Spark clock, but the Hollow gains +1 Attention.
- Lethai-ar Silk Bridges: A Hostage Treaty can be witnessed by a Lethai-ar silk-warden, making it binding across the Crimson Valley. The price is a strand of the treaty-bearer’s hair.

Patronage & Power

In Vilikari society, power flows through the careful balance of multiple legal traditions, the management of frontier diplomacy, and the maintenance of complex oaths and treaties. The Federate King maintains authority through a combination of imperial forms and traditional customs, while local leaders wield influence through their knowledge of both Utaran law and tribal custom. The true power lies with those who can navigate this complex legal and diplomatic landscape while maintaining the loyalty of their people and the respect of their neighbors.

But the stone is cracking. The witnesses are dying. The Vilikari are becoming invisible.

For the GM: Patronage in Vilikari society revolves around legal documents, diplomatic relationships, and the ability to command respect from institutions that operate under multiple legal systems. Rewards often take the form of treaties, charters, and official positions that can be leveraged into greater influence. To emphasize the hybrid identity and the fading authority:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (seals, writs, treaties) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided — and that may crumble if the stone forgets.
- Let rival legal systems issue conflicting authorities, forcing players to choose whose favour matters more. Neither may remember them tomorrow.
- Use the courts, markets, and frontier posts as arenas for social contests, where knowledge of law and custom determines success — and where the stone’s whispers can tip the balance.
- Remember that Vilikari characters are at home in Ecktoria’s counting-houses and Acasia’s hedgerow courts alike — but they are never fully trusted in either. That suspicion is their best tool. When the stone cracks fully, that suspicion becomes exile.

In Vilikari society, your word is your bond, and your bond determines whether you rule or are ruled. But a bond is only as strong as the stone that witnesses it. And the stone is forgetting.

Chapter 11

Black Banners

Condotta & Crowns.

A contract is only as good as the next payday, and a grudge is only as sharp as the sword backing it. In this game, we sell steel by the season and vendettas by the year.

I am a Veteran Sergeant. I've seen three captains rise and fall in the time it takes to grow a beard, but the mud stays the same and the pay comes when it pleases.

Mercenary companies sell steel to the highest bidder—and oh, how they love a good spreadsheet. The Banner-Captains don't just want payment; they want proof they're getting their money's worth, which is why they pay in safe-conducts that are good until the next battle... and utterly worthless after, once the smoke clears and the ledgers need balancing.

The camp sings when payday comes. The camp falls silent when the ledger is written in blood. I've heard both. I prefer the singing. At least the singing means you're still alive.

Never break a Bell Dawn. Three bells at sunrise means bury the dead, trade prisoners, fix the wells, no ambushes. Violating it is how legends end badly—and how captains end hanging.

— Old Sorka, Veteran Sergeant, who counts scars like coins and spends them on whiskey and mercy

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Hardtack and camp stew—the stew is whatever was caught, killed, or traded for before dawn. The cook is called "The Alchemist." No one knows their real name. No one asks.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count coin. Camp children are taught to tally pay shares before they can read. A child who miscounts is a child who will go hungry. A child who goes hungry is a child who learns to count faster.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their colours. Every Black Banner company has its own banner—lantern, thorn, bell, fishbone, broken scale. A stranger whose colours are faded has been running. A stranger whose colours are too bright has never fought. A stranger with no colours has no company. A stranger with no company is a deserter. A deserter is a liability. A liability is a corpse.

What is the most common crime? Desertion—but desertion is not a crime, it is a negotiation. A soldier who wants to leave will sell their gear to the quartermaster, sell their secrets to the enemy, and sell their silence to the captain. The price is negotiable. The price is always "one more season."

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Black Colonel is not a person. The Colonel is a title held by a wax seal. The seal is kept in a lead-lined box. The box is carried by a mute lieutenant. The lieutenant signs documents with the Colonel's thumb-print. The thumb-print is a forgery. The forger is the lieutenant. The lieutenant has no thumbs.

Where do people go when they die? To the pyre. Camp dead are burned in a bonfire of broken spears and banner poles. The ashes are scattered by the quartermaster. The quartermaster charges a fee. The fee is deducted from the dead's final pay. The final pay is never enough.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You stand a watch. The wronged party chooses the hour—midnight, dawn, the dead of winter. You stand alone. If you survive, you are forgiven. If you do not, the debt is paid. The camp does not mourn. The camp does not forget.

What is the most important festival? Payday—but payday is not a day, it is a negotiation. The captain promises payment on the first of the month. The quartermaster promises payment when the supply train arrives. The soldiers promise loyalty until the payment comes. The payment never comes. The loyalty never ends.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Banner-Captain's contract is written in disappearing ink. The ink was supplied by a Sidhi forger who was paid in promises. The promises were not kept. The forger is now a camp follower. The forger knows where the contract is hidden. The forger is waiting for the right offer.

11.1 Black Banners — “Condotta & Crowns”

Quick Reference

Tagline: A contract is only as good as the next payday.

Banner-Captain (Elite): “A contract is only as good as the next payday, and a grudge is only as sharp as the sword backing it. In this game, we sell steel by the season and vendettas by the year.”

Veteran Sergeant (Commoner): “I’ve seen three captains rise and fall in the time it takes to grow a beard, but the mud stays the same and the pay comes when it pleases. Best keep your own counsel and your blade sharp. The camp sings? You live. They stop singing? Even the best charter bleeds.”

Genre / Mood: Mercenary realism, winter warfare, ledger-driven violence.

Starting Location: A war-camp crossroads where two banners snap in the same wind, their sigils bleeding into one another. A Condotta broker with ink-stained fingers lays two contracts on a barrel — one from Ecktoria, one from Ykrul. “Pick a war. Pick a grave. The bell tolls at noon.”

Condotta & Crowns

Ecktorian treasuries bankroll a perpetual border-war they claim to be containing. In truth, the gold keeps the fire burning. The Black Banners are mercenary leagues — ex-Utaran legionaries, second-sons, debt-dodgers, and exiles — who sell steel to the highest bidder, today’s ally becoming tomorrow’s quarry. Between them move the Ykrul steppe-clans (swift, pragmatic, oath-canny) and the Vilikari hill tribes (crafty, patient, and proud). Ecktorian ministers call it “pressure management.” The companies call it a season.

What you notice first: The smell of wet wool and old blood. The way every tent has a ledger pinned to its flap. The silence when the paychest is opened — and the murmur when it’s light.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never break a Bell Dawn. Three bells at sunrise means bury the dead, trade prisoners, fix the wells, no ambushes. Violating it is how legends end badly — and how captains end hanging.

Regional Mood: The Theater of Banners

Here, war is a marketplace. The Black Banners are not a single army but a squabbling league of freelance violence, bound by camp law, pay customs, and the shared knowledge that tomorrow’s enemy might be today’s employer. The real battles are fought in counting-tents over clauses and riders; the clash outside is just the audit. Loyalty is a coin that fluctuates with the market, and a captain’s true skill lies in reading the political winds that blow across contested borders. Between the rigid honour codes of Ecktorian nobility and the fluid pragmatism of steppe clans and hill tribes, mercenaries navigate a dangerous middle ground where survival depends on knowing when to keep an oath and when to break one — always at dawn, with a witness, and with surety paid.

Prominent NPCs of the Black Banners

Castellan Thorne	Banner-Captain of the Iron Hand	Win a permanent contract for his company	He has never lost a siege, but he has lost three paychests to bad debt.
Old Sorka	Veteran Sergeant (commoner exemplar)	Keep her squad alive until spring	She counts scars like coins; her left ear is a nub from a mutineer's apology.
Lys	Condotta Broker	Flip contracts for maximum margin	Her ink has a metallic smell. She says it's from the silver in the seals.
Chaghan	Ykrul Clan Emissary	Test the Black Banners' honour before the next migration	He speaks only in proverbs and pays in copper from a cursed mine.
Volund	Quartermaster-Provost	Stockpile leverage on every officer in the camp	His bribe book is thicker than his roster; he calls it "risk assessment."
The Bannerless One	Mysterious warlord	Unite the scattered companies under a single will	She has no flag. Men follow her because she asked.

5. Condotta Broker – Changes colours when the wind turns, but always lands on his feet. ‘[SOCIAL]’ His feet are calloused from landing. He has never broken an ankle.
6. Ykrul Clan Emissary – Speaks in riddled proverbs and pays in copper and promises. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[OATH]’ The copper is from a cursed mine. The promises are from a cursed tongue.
7. Vilikari War-Chief’s Second Son – Honour burns brighter than his father’s patience. ‘[SOCIAL]’ His father’s patience is measured in seasons. This is the last season.
8. Surgeon of the Red Ledger – Treats friend and foe alike; her ledger balances only in blood. ‘[DEBT]’ Her ledger is bound in human skin. The skin was a gift from a patient who lived.
9. Quartermaster – Knows where every coin went and every man will fall. ‘[DEBT]’ His bribe book is thicker than his roster. He calls it “risk assessment.”
10. Tribune’s Aide-de-Camp – Sealed orders that contradict the general’s intent. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The general’s intent was to retire. The seals say otherwise.
- J The Black Colonel – Legendary commander not seen in the line for months, yet his banner still rides. ‘[LEGEND]’ The banner rides alone. The horse is riderless. The men follow anyway.
- Q Ykrul Clan-Mother – Weaves war-braids from the hair of oath-breakers. ‘[OATH]’ Each braid has a name. The names are still attached.
- K Vilikari High Chief – Trades mercenaries like game pieces and never tips the board. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The board is an old treaty map. The pieces are real.
- A The Bannerless One – Commands loyalty without rank or flag; men follow because they want to. ‘[LEGEND]’ They follow into the Singing Wastes. They follow into the ice. They follow because she asked.

(Betrayals/Weather/Politics/War) Payday delayed; supplies die before coin arrives. False orders: your target is now your ally — on paper. Blizzard pins two rival companies in the same cloister; vows and knives both come out.

Clubs — Complications/Threats

2. Payday Delayed – Supplies die before coin arrives. ‘[DEBT]’ The coin was eaten by interest. The interest has teeth.
3. False Orders – Your target is now your ally — on paper. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The paper is from a dead notary. The signature is warm.
4. Blizzard Pins – Two rival companies, one cloister; vows and knives both come out. ‘[WEATHER]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ The cloister’s abbot is counting. He will sell the winner’s story.
5. Ykrul Counter-Offer – Better terms than Ecktoria; your contract becomes a liability. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The terms are written in salt. They will dissolve in rain — or blood.

6. Condotta Flip – Unit switches colours mid-battle; your “relief” hits your flank. ‘[COMBAT]’
The new colours are the same as the old colours. The captain just wanted a raise.
7. Camp-Fever – Blooms in the surgeon’s tent; the counting-house for the dead. ‘[DEATH]’
The fever has a face. It is the face of a soldier you left behind.
8. Vilikari Raid – Cuts your supply road; winter moves the schedule. ‘[COMBAT]’ ‘[TRAVEL]’
The raiders took the salt and left a recipe. The recipe calls for tears.
9. Honour Code Collision – Ecktorian ideals vs. mercenary pragmatism; the camp splits by doctrine. ‘[SOCIAL]’
The doctrine is written on a napkin. The napkin is from a feast that ended badly.
10. Tribune Captured – The aide must choose: the rescue or the war. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[DEBT]’
The war is a ledger. The rescue is a name. Names are heavier than ledgers.
- J Black Colonel’s Banner – Appears on the wrong field; confusion is a weapon. ‘[COMBAT]’
The banner is frayed. It has seen too many wrong fields.
- Q Blood-Feast – Clan-Mother calls it; all contracts suspended until dawn’s judgment. ‘[OATH]’ ‘[SOCIAL]’
The judgment is a feast. The feast is a trial. The trial is a knife.
- K High Chief’s Game – Plays companies against each other; “winner” takes obligations, not spoils. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[DEBT]’
The obligations are written in invisible ink. You will see them when it is too late.
- A The Singing Wastes Awaken – Every fallen blade rises to seek its last hand. ‘[MAGIC]’
‘[DEATH]’
The blades remember the grip. They do not remember mercy.

(Contracts/Claims/Dispensations) Emergency requisition — strip a fallen company for what you need (and their ghosts for what they’re owed). Dual contract — serve two masters with goals that cannot both be met.

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Emergency Requisition – Strip a fallen company; their ghosts watch. ‘[DEBT]’
The ghosts will remember. They will collect.
3. Dual Contract – Serve two masters whose goals cannot both be met. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[DEBT]’
The masters are both paying. The interest is your reputation.
4. Honour Dispensation – Your acts are justified regardless of code (for now). ‘[SOCIAL]’
The dispensation is a bell. Ring it, and the tribunal looks away — once.
5. Condotta Rider’s Pass – Cross any camp perimeter unchallenged. ‘[STEALTH]’
The pass is a feather. The feather is from a messenger who arrived too late.
6. Ykrul Safe-Conduct Token – Pass a named clan’s lands unmolested (until the moon changes). ‘[TRAVEL]’
The token is a horse’s tooth. The horse was a gift from a Khagan. The Khagan is dead.
7. Vilikari War-Mark – Their scouts guide you through hostile hills — and remember the favour. ‘[TRAVEL]’ ‘[DEBT]’
The favour will be called at dawn. The location will be a ridge. The odds will be even.
8. Surgeon’s Debt-Note – Medical care when no coin remains; the interest is names. ‘[DEBT]’
The names are of people who owe the surgeon. You are now one of them.
9. Tribune’s Cipher Ring – Decode orders that do not exist yet. ‘[SOCIAL]’
The ring is warm. The future is cold.

10. Banner-Captain's Seal – Commandeer resources from junior companies (and their resentment). '[AUTHORITY]' The seal is a skull. The jaw moves when you press it.
- J Field Promotion Warrant – Assume command of a shattered unit, inherit its clocks. '[AUTHORITY]' '[DEBT]' The clocks are ticking. The unit is watching.
- Q Clan-Mother's War-Braids – Her chosen fight beside you this battle, then judge you after. '[COMBAT]' '[SOCIAL]' The judgment is a song. The song will be sung at your funeral.
- K High Chief's Trading Charter – Buy or sell anything in any camp, no questions asked aloud. '[TRADE]' The questions are asked in silence. The answers are paid in silence.
- A The Bannerless Word – Loyalty that outruns rank, law, and coin. '[LEGEND]' The word is a whisper. The whisper is a promise. The promise is a grave.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (contracts/claims/dispositions) that shift position rather than call for a roll.
- If any Ace appears, echo war and winter motifs — ice that keeps the dead, weapons that remember, loyalty that needs no banner.

The Fractured League: Banner Alignments

The Black Banners are not a single army but a squabbling market of violence. Three loose alignments shape the loyalties of any war-camp. Most companies shift between these poles depending on the season, the paychest, and the weather.

- Condotta Brokers (The Paper Men) – They own the contracts, not the swords. They flip companies like playing cards and measure victory in percentages. Most captains hate them, but everyone pays them. Clocks: BROKER'S GRIP [4], DOUBLE CHARTER [6].
- Company Loyalists (The Old Banners) – Veterans who remember when a banner meant a blood-oath, not a season's wage. They grumble, they desert, they are sometimes bought – but they fight like demons when the paychest is full. Clocks: VETERAN WRATH [4], OATH REMEMBERS [6].
- Free Companies (The Tide) – Newly raised, culturally mixed, and chronically unpaid. They are as likely to mutiny as to charge, and their loyalty can be bought with a hot meal and a day's rest. Clocks: MUTINY WHISPER [4], PAYDAY FEVER [6].

Superimposed on these are the Ykrul steppe-clans (honour-bound, quick to take insult) and the Vilikari hill tribes (pragmatic, patient, and skilled at ambush). A wise captain learns to read all three.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Payday & Supply Clocks: Track two pressures common to the Black Banners: Payday [4] and Supply [4]. When Payday fills, morale falters and the Keeper may peel away a squad or impose a desertion SB. When Supply fills, all risky maneuvers begin one step worse Position until the players secure fresh provisions or bargain a Diamond.

- Allegiances in Flux: At the start of a scene, roll 1d6 to see if loyalties shift:
 1. Condotta broker flips colours mid-parley.
 2. Ykrul emissary offers better terms; accept and mark Obligation, or refuse and tick Payday.
 3. Vilikari scouts reveal a shortcut; gain +1 Effect but risk SB from hostile terrain.
 4. Ecktorian clerk “corrects” your orders; obey for +1 Position, defy and gain a Diamond but earn a Black Mark.
 5. Rival captain spreads falsified orders; unless revealed, counters are harder this scene.
 6. The Bannerless One’s messengers arrive; accept their word to clear 1 Payday, but the Keeper gains 1 SB.
- Honour vs. Pragmatism Dial: Place a two-step dial between Honour and Pragmatism.
 - Honour: +1 Position in parley or oathbound actions; logistics costs rise faster.
 - Pragmatism: +1 Effect in ambushes or sabotage; parley begins one step worse Position.
 Center the dial by a symbolic act – repaying arrears, returning prisoners, or honouring a broken writ.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Red Ledger – Maelstraeus (infernally bargainer). Every contract signs in blood; every payment accrues interest.
 - The White-Ribbon Courier – The Traveler (roads and shortcuts). A safe road is a contract; a shortcut is a rider.
 - The Unbroken Bell – The Sealed Gate (threshold guardian). Bell Dawn is sacred; break it, and the road closes behind you.
 - The Bannerless One – An avatar of Ikasha (freedom and thresholds). No flag, no oath, no debt – only the road and the choice.

Mercenary Realpolitik

In the world of the Black Banners, loyalty is a currency that fluctuates with the market. A man’s worth is measured not in noble blood or ancestral holdings, but in the sharpness of his blade and the reliability of his word. The condotta system creates a web of shifting allegiances where today’s enemy may become tomorrow’s employer, and a captain’s true skill lies not in strategy alone but in reading the political winds that blow across contested borders. Between the rigid honour codes of Ecktorian nobility and the fluid pragmatism of steppe clans and hill tribes, mercenaries navigate a dangerous middle ground where survival depends on knowing when to keep an oath and when to break one.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Sealed Gate: Deserters who flee a losing battle sometimes cross into the Singing Wastes at night. They return at dawn with their mouths sewn shut and a ward-sigil branded on their palms. The Bannerless One pays well for such men – they cannot speak of what they saw, and they never run again.
- Maelstraeus, the Infernal Bargainer: A black ledger circulates among the condotta brokers, its pages written in dried blood. A captain who signs it never misses a payday – but the ledger’s interest is collected in souls, not silver. The Bannerless One has refused to touch it. Twice.

- The Traveler: Before every major march, a White-Ribbon courier from the Aeler tunnels appears at the edge of camp, plants a brass way-stone, and vanishes by dawn. Companies who follow the stone's direction find safe passage through the worst terrain. Those who ignore it are never seen again.
- Xhak'Thul, the Thunder-Speaker: A drummer walks the camp on the night before a battle, beating a rhythm that has no source. Veterans do not look for the drummer; they sleep with their hands over their ears. When the drum stops, the battle begins – and one side will be annihilated by a storm that came from nowhere.
- The Ninth: In any war-camp, the ninth tent pitched in a row will collapse before dawn. The wise pitch eight and leave a space. Those who ignore this find that the ground beneath the ninth tent is always damp – and the footprints leading out of it never match any boot in the company.

Black Banner Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Paychest: Crumble a crust into an empty chest. Ignore the first Payday Delayed penalty. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Knot the Colours: Tie a single knot in a banner's cord. Cancel Condotta Flip or take –1 die on your next morale check (your choice). '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Name to the Wastes: Whisper a dead captain's name into the wind. Gain +1 Effect when rallying their former unit this scene, but mark Obligation to the Bannerless One. '[SUPERSTITION]'

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from condotta brokers or camp guards.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby rival companies or camp followers.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for trackers or debt collectors.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favourable contract terms.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Banner-Captain or quartermaster becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to blizzard or camp upheaval.
- Foe Appears: A rival mercenary squad or debt collector arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional free companies, Ykrul riders, or camp enforcers arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.
- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes – contract voided / paychest stolen / Bell Dawn broken.

- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: The Bannerless One, Clan-Mother, or Black Colonel intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically – Singing Wastes awaken / camp splits / blizzard seals the pass.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice – omen appears / blessing lost / curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Black Banners (Camp Law): Payday disputes escalate to blades, a banner is stolen, a sergeant calls a mutiny.
- Black Banners (Winter War): Frostbite slows movement, supply lines freeze, mercenaries demand double pay or desert.
- Black Banners (Condotta): A rival broker offers a better charter, a clause is invoked that voids your contract, a captain demands a duel of honour.

Field Procedures (Use at the Table)

- Colours & Countersigns: Declaring correct countersigns cancels the first “False Orders” SB each night; wrong signs worsen Position on first contact.
- Payline Drill: If a scene depicts orderly pay, clear 1 Payday. If pay is “creative,” clear it but mark Black Mark – future officers begin one step colder in parley.
- Scavenge Doctrine: After battles, you may gain 1 temporary Gear tag or advance Supply by 1; on a 1–2 on 1d6, spawn “Honour vs. Pragmatism” conflict immediately.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Survival): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Deep Snow.
- Cut the Contract (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a Condotta Rider’s Pass is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Blizzard (Resolve + Endurance): On a hit in Blizzard Pins, you pick who finds shelter; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Archetypes in the Black Banners

Contract & Command (Human Adversaries)

- Banner-Captain (Fixer General) – Wins by paperwork and parade-ground precision. Break their chain-of-command clock [6] by flipping lieutenants, forging orders, or seizing the paychest.
- Condotta Broker (Colour-Flipper) – Turns loyalties like cards. Expose a dual contract or force public arbitration under neutral bells to collapse their leverage track.

- Quartermaster-Provost (Logistics Tyrant) – Starves you with ledgers. Complete the Three Cuts: road, ration, rumor — any two stalls them; all three topple their supply engine.

Tribe & Tactic (Field Sovereigns)

- Ykrul Raid-Mother (Oath-Weaver) – Fights with remounts and safe-hostages. Honour horse-rites to gain truce windows; break one braid in parley to end a phase.
- Vilikari Hill-Fox (Ambush Architect) – Owns ridgelines and feint paths. Clear Three High Stones (overwatch, supply cache, signal cairn) to force even ground.

Faith & Fear (Camp Powers)

- Field Chaplain-Inquisitor (Morale Engine) – Smelts guilt into zeal. Win by sanctifying plague-ground or redeeming prisoners; each rite drops their Zeal track [0–3].
- Surgeon of the Red Ledger (Mercy's Price) – Keeps units marching past sense. Expose graft or pay blood-debts; on three reconciled names the operating tent stands down.

The Unquiet Field (Supernatural Front)

- The Singing Wastes (Weapon-Host) – The battlefield itself retaliates. Complete the Silencing Acts: oil the choir (funeral honours), bury the standards, ring the wind-break bell — each lowers its Tier for one exchange.
- Black Colonel's Banner (Legend in Motion) – A rumour that commands. Prove the lie or become the truth: either unmask the courier network (three ciphers cracked) or fly a counter-sigil to pull rank on the myth.

Faction Entanglements

- Condotta Brokers' Syndicate: Register your charter and bank a Broker's Favor – spend to reduce one parley DV inside a war-camp. Skipping registration flags your unit with Unauthorised Colors: the first checkpoint scene gains a free “False Orders” SB.
- Camp Quartermasters: Accept ration-scale audits to cancel the first Supply tick this leg; refuse and mark a 4-segment Short Rations clock that worsens Position on marches.
- Field Chaplains & Leech-Circles: Donate time or tithe to clear 1 segment from Camp-Fever; if ignored, the Keeper may convert the first 1 SB of a scene into “Disease/Death.”
- Steppe Envoys: Honour horse-rites (salt, water, shade) to gain Remount Rights – once, treat a retreat as movement with +1 Effect. Break rites and add a Soured Oath tag that raises parley DV with riders until cleansed.
- Hill Truce-Holders: Enter a stones-circle under their witness to bank a Blood-Truce – spend to negate one ambush on hill roads. Violating the circle spawns a 4-segment Guest Right Forfeit clock.

Cross-Regional Conversions (Using Diamonds Elsewhere)

- Vhasia: A Condotta Rider's Pass can substitute for a Safe-Conduct on the Pont-du-Tithe once; after use, start a Parlement Divided tick.
- Viterrra: A Ykrul Safe-Conduct Token may be notarised as a Ferry Priority in Viterran courts; the notary's fee is a story.

- Ubral: A Clan-Mother’s War-Braid counts as a Guest-Token in hill-forts; the clans will ask whose side you took in the war.
- Mistlands: A Banner-Captain’s Seal can be presented to a Bell-Warden as proof of lawful passage; the Warden will test it with a bell. If it rings false, the mist takes a day.
- Valewood: A Field Promotion Warrant can be offered to a Green Knight as proof of worth; the Knight may challenge you to a trial of paths instead of blades.

Patronage & Power

In the Black Banners, power flows through contracts, paychests, and the weight of a reputation. A Banner-Captain’s authority rests on the number of companies he commands; a Condotta Broker’s on the thickness of his ledger. There is no loyalty, only the shared understanding that a broken contract costs more than a broken blade.

For the GM: Power in the Black Banners is measured in payday clocks, broker’s favours, and the length of a duel record. Patronage often takes the form of dual contracts, emergency requisitions, or the Bannerless Word – each tied to a specific company, broker, or debt. To emphasise the mercenary realism:

- Use Payday & Supply Clocks as visible pressure. Let players negotiate, raid, or pledge future services to clear ticks.
- Enforce Allegiances in Flux – every scene, loyalties may shift. The Keeper’s SB pool grows when the party betrays a contract.
- Let Honour vs. Pragmatism be a dial the party can slide through their actions. Centre it by a costly act of mercy or a profitable betrayal.
- Track Black Marks as a persistent reputation score. Three Black Marks and no condotta broker will write a clean charter for you.

In the Black Banners, the camp sings when payday comes – and falls silent when the ledger is written in blood.

Chapter 12

The Linns

Skerries & Storm-Oaths.

The sea keeps better counsel than any scribe, and the storm remembers every oath sworn upon its winds. To rule these shores is to dance between their moods and never miss a step.

I am a Net-Wife. I tie a knot for every storm I've survived. My belt has thirty.

North of the Aberderrin Sea, the Linns don't just raid and trade—they do it with the fervour of the converted, swearing oaths to storm and sea that aren't just words—they're leverage with a supernatural clause. They pay in stories, not silver, because to them, a tale well-told is worth more than a chest of gold... especially when it's true.

The jarls measure their wealth in ships. The skalds measure their wealth in verses. The dead measure their wealth in how many living remember their names. I measure mine in knots. Each knot is a promise I kept to the sea. The sea remembers. The sea does not forgive forgetting.

Never name a drowned person aloud while underway. The sea collects names, and if it hears you speaking one it doesn't recognize, it may reach up to correct the ledger.

— Astrid, Net-Wife, who has never lost a sailor to the mist but has lost three to bad stories

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Seal blubber and flatbread—the blubber is chewy, the bread is dense, and both are stored in the same barrel. The barrel is shared with the crew. The crew shares everything. The crew is family. Family is obligation.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To tie a knot. Linn children are given a length of rope at birth. By age five, they can tie the eight sea-knots: clew, clove, figure-eight, reef, sheet, stopper, timber, and the ninth—the one that slips when pulled. The ninth knot is for emergencies. The ninth knot is for funerals. The ninth knot is for when the sea asks for a life.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their breath. Linn sailors chew kelp to sweeten their breath—the kelp is harvested from sacred beds, blessed by the Volva. A stranger whose breath smells of salt has been at sea. A stranger whose breath smells of nothing has not. A stranger whose breath smells of copper has spoken a false oath. The sea knows. The sea will answer.

What is the most common crime? Oath-breaking—but oath-breaking is not a crime, it is a storm. The oath-breaker's ship will founder. The oath-breaker's nets will tear. The oath-breaker's children will be born with webbed fingers. The punishment is not imposed by the jarl. The punishment is imposed by the sea. The sea is patient. The sea does not forget.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Sea-Queen is not a queen. She is a figurehead—literally. Her body is carved from the keel of a ship that sank in 612 AR. Her voice is a recording. Her throne is a navigation table. The jarls pretend. The jarls have always pretended. The pretending keeps the peace.

Where do people go when they die? To the waves. Linn dead are placed in boats and set adrift, weighted with stones. The stones are carved with the dead's name. If the boat sinks before it reaches the horizon, the dead is accepted. If it reaches the horizon, the dead is rejected. If it returns to shore, the dead is cursed. The cursed wash up on beaches. The beaches are littered with their bones.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a storm-oath. You stand on a cliff during a gale and swear your apology to the wind. If the wind carries your words, you are forgiven. If the wind throws you into the sea, you are not. The sea does not give second chances.

What is the most important festival? The Launching of the Longships (spring thaw). The ships are dragged from their winter shelters and blessed with blood and mead. The blood is from a sacrificed goat. The mead is from the jarl's own stores. The ships are named after ancestors. The ancestors are listening. The ancestors approve.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Volva of the Mist is a fraud. She cannot see the future. She reads the weather—the pressure, the wind, the taste of salt on the air. The sailors know. The sailors do not care. A weather-reader is more useful than a seer. The Volva knows this. The Volva uses this. The Volva is never wrong.

12.1 Linn — “The Frost Ledger”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The sea writes in salt. The frost binds in iron. The skald remembers in verse.

High Jarl (Elite): “The sea keeps better counsel than any scribe, and the storm remembers every oath sworn upon its winds. But the frost — the frost is the ledger. It preserves what the tide would wash away. A debt sworn in winter is owed until the ice melts. And the ice never truly melts.”

Net-Wife (Commoner): “The water speaks to those who know how to listen — the way it moves tells you if the fish are running, if the weather’s turning, or if something’s coming that wasn’t invited to the feast. My grandmother taught me to read the frost on the oar-blades. That’s how I know who will live through the winter and who will feed the seals.”

Genre / Mood: Norse coastal saga, oath-driven honour, horror of the unwitnessed death, the tyranny of seasons.

Starting Location: A longship house lined with storm-charms and whale-bone runes, salt wind clawing at the doors. A Net-Wife binds a storm-token into a PC’s palm. “The Whale-Road sings,” she says. “But the Mistlands whistle back. Bring us three keel-lengths of ironwood from the Valewood edge, or the tide will take our boats in the spring. The frost ledger says you owe us for the shelter you took last winter. Pay, or the ice will remember.”

Theme & Atmosphere

North of the Aberderrin Sea, where fjords split the coast and skerries break the tide, dwell the Linn. They are traders and raiders in equal breath, their longships crowding the whale-road and river mouths. They descend the Ylolka like an axe-blade and cut into southern shores, or slip through the Thin Strip where the Valewood dares not touch salt. Yet even these storm-oath people dread the Mistlands and the Valewood, whose fog and trees have no need of ships or harbors to claim their due.

The Linn measure their lives in seasons, not years. There is a season for raiding (summer, when the seas are open), a season for planting (spring, when the frost breaks), a season for governance (autumn, when the ships are beached and the Thing meets), and a season for survival (winter, when the frost ledger is written). In winter, the fjords freeze, the longships are dragged into sheds, and the people gather around the longhall fires to settle debts, tell sagas, and wait for the sun to return. The frost ledger is not a book — it is a set of carved tally-sticks, each notch a debt, each knot a promise. When a Linn says a debt is “written in frost,” they mean it is unchangeable until the ice melts. And the ice, in the high north, never truly melts.

The gods of the Linn are not distant. Adar, the All-Father, walks the ridges in a grey cloak, his one eye watching for those who break oaths. He is a manifestation of the Oath of Flame and Light, but the Linn know him as the god of wisdom, death, and binding promises. Xhak’t hul, the Storm Father, rides the clouds, his hammer cracking the sky. He is the patron of raiders and sailors, a Thor-like figure who laughs in the teeth of the gale. His cult is loud, proud, and dangerous — a Xhak’t hul devotee will swear a storm-oath by drinking seawater and shouting at the lightning. The Temple of Light calls him a demon. The Linn call him captain.

What you notice first: The smell of tar and salt fish. The creak of oars from unseen boats. The way everyone — jarl to thrall — touches a knotted cord before speaking of the sea. The tally-sticks hanging from every belt, each notch a debt owed or collected.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never name a drowned person aloud while underway. The sea collects names, and if it hears you speaking one it doesn't recognize, it may reach up to correct the ledger. Also, never refuse a cup of winter mead — it is a test of your honour and your debt-worthiness.

Regional Mood: Skerry Stormcall, Frost Ledger

Power here is spoken, not written. A jarl's authority rests on the weight of his oath-chest and the sharpness of his skald's tongue. Longships are not vessels; they are promises carved in timber. Every voyage is a gamble against tide, reef, and the attention of things that sleep beneath the waves. The Linn do not fear death — they fear dying without a witness, swallowed by fog where no verse will remember their name.

But beneath the sea-lore runs the frost ledger. Each Linn keeps a tally-stick, notched for every debt they owe and every debt owed to them. When the winter gales ground the longships, the Thing convenes to settle the ledger. A jarl whose tally is too deep in the red may find his hall burned; a thrall who has collected enough notches may buy his freedom. The frost ledger is the true law of the Linn — not the spoken word, but the carved one.

Prominent NPCs of Linn

Name	Role/Title	Motivation	Rumoured Quirk
Jarl Skjold	High Jarl of the Southern Fjords	Unite the scattered strands under one oath	His beard is braided with silver from every ship he has taken. His tally-stick has notches from three wars.
Volva Hervor	Mist-seer and oath-reader	Read the tides of fate before they turn	She speaks once a year; the rest of the time she listens to the fog. She reads the frost ledger by touch — her fingers are scarred from counting.

Astrid	Net-Wife (commoner exemplar)	Keep her village safe from the Hollow and the deep	She ties a knot for every storm she’s survived. Her belt has thirty. She is the keeper of the village tally-sticks.
Brother Halvard	Missionary of the Temple of Light	Convert the Linn to the Lens of the White Flame	He carries a water-clock to measure the hours of prayer, but the skerries have no hours. His tally-stick is blank — the Linn do not trust him.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (rights/tokens/escorts) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo sea-omens — horns on wind, white horses on swell, verse unfinished until landfall, the frost ledger cracking.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Frost Ledger (Debt Clock): Every Linn community keeps a tally-stick or a frozen block of ice carved with notches representing debts. A character who accepts a favour, shelter, or gift from a Linn must accept a Frost Notch — a 4-segment debt clock. When the clock fills, the community may demand a service (a raid, a story, a season of labour). A character who refuses to accept a Frost Notch is considered an oath-breaker and suffers –1 die on all social rolls with Linn for the remainder of the journey. The Frost Notch can be cleared by performing a season-appropriate task (planting in spring, raiding in summer, governing in autumn, surviving in winter).
- Storm-Oaths: A Linn may swear an oath by touching salt water. Breaking a storm-oath inflicts 1 Fatigue (the sea’s disappointment) and gives the GM a free SB to represent the sea’s attention. Keeping an oath until its completion grants +1 die on the next roll involving the sea or sailing. Oaths sworn during a storm (under Xhak’tul’s eye) are doubly binding — breaking them inflicts 1 Harm.
- The Season’s Turn: The GM may declare that the current season affects certain actions. In Spring (planting), foraging and healing rolls gain +1 die. In Summer (raiding), combat and sailing rolls gain +1 die. In Autumn (governance), social and legal rolls gain +1 die. In Winter (survival), all survival rolls are Desperate, but clearing a Frost Notch is easier (the community is too cold to argue). The season changes when the GM spends 3 SB, or after a major story beat.
- Saga Reputation (Community Track): Every Linn settlement has a Saga Track [6] that reflects the community’s oral memory. The party can increase it by performing deeds worthy of verse (rescuing a ship, slaying a sea monster, keeping a difficult oath). At 3 segments, locals offer hospitality without question. At 6, the party gains a permanent epithet and may call on one favour from any Linn jarl.

- Mist-Dread: Linn characters suffer –1 die on navigation rolls when entering the Mistlands or Valewood, but gain +1 die on rolls to avoid supernatural fear (they have learned to dread the right things).
- Skald’s Burden: A PC who publicly composes a verse about an event may choose to increase or decrease the Saga Track by 1 (as they shape memory). On a failed Performance roll (DV 3), the verse backfires and the track moves the opposite direction.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - Adar the All-Father — Oath of Flame and Light. The one-eyed god of wisdom, death, and binding oaths. He watches from the ridges. His tally-stick is the frost ledger itself.
 - The Storm Father — Xhak’t hul. The god of thunder, raiding, and the wild sea. His devotees swear storm-oaths by drinking seawater. He laughs at lightning.
 - The Salted Anchor — The Sealed Gate. The harbour that never closes, the oath that never rusts.
 - The Wave Mother — Raéyn. The tide that carries and the storm that answers.
 - The Drowned Chorus — Khemesh. The pressure beneath the keel, the debt the sea collects.
 - The Unwritten Verse — The Witness. The memory that survives the drowning.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Draugr Jarl (Unfinished Business): The Thing-Holm is haunted by a jarl who died before his oath was fulfilled. He rises when a storm-oath is broken, demanding a blood-price paid in stories. The Temple of Light has sent three missionaries to lay him to rest; all three drowned in calm water. His tally-stick is frozen into the ice of the Thing-Holm. If it ever thaws, he will walk again.
- Adar’s Ravens (The Witness): Adar is said to have two ravens, Memory and Thought, who fly across the world each day and return to whisper in his ear. A Linn skald who prays to Adar may ask one question about a forgotten debt; the GM must answer truthfully, though cryptically. The price is a memory — the skald forgets something unimportant, but it may become important later.
- Xhak’t hul’s Hammer (The Savage Heart): The Storm Father’s hammer is said to be lodged in a cliff on the highest skerry. A character who touches the hammer and survives the lightning may invoke Xhak’t hul’s wrath once per session: all enemies within Near must test Resolve (DV 4) or be Stunned for one exchange. The cost is that the character is marked by the storm — they will be struck by lightning at the worst possible moment (GM’s discretion).
- The Tide-Washed Covenant (The Hospice of the Salted Anchor): A grey-robed healer runs a hospice on the edge of the Mistlands, treating wounded raiders and fog-mad sailors alike. She asks no payment, but she writes every name in a ledger that never dries. Linn captains leave offerings of fresh water before a voyage; those who refuse find their ship plagued by the drowned. The ledger is said to be a copy of the frost ledger — but written in salt water, not ice.
- The Ninth: In any longhouse, the ninth horn blown at a feast summons the Hollow. The wise stop at eight. Those who blow the ninth are said to see a pale figure standing at the high table — waiting to collect a debt. The figure is Adar, checking his tally-stick.

Linn Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Wake: Toss a crust over the gunwale before a voyage. Ignore the first Black Squall penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Oar: Tie a single knot in your oar’s leather grip. Cancel Keel-Rot Rumor or take –1 die on your next rowing check (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Deep: Whisper a dead enemy’s name into the tide. Gain +1 Effect against his kin for the scene, but mark Obligation to the Sea-Queen. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Drink to the Storm: Pour a cup of mead into the sea before a raid. Xhak’tul will grant you favourable winds — but he will also expect a share of the plunder. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Patronage & Power

Among the Linn, power flows through oaths, kinship, and the spoken word — and through the notches carved in ice. Jarls maintain authority through successful raids and wise judgments, while skalds wield influence through their ability to immortalize deeds in verse — or damn names through satire. The Sea-Queen holds sway over the coastlands, but her rule depends on the respect of the High Jarl and the Thing-speakers who interpret ancient laws. And beneath all of them lies the frost ledger — the true account of who owes what, written in a language that only the Volva can read.

For the GM: Power in Linn society is fluid and performance-based. Patronage often takes the form of foster-bonds, oar-shares, or raid-truces — each binding the recipient to service and reputation. To emphasize this:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (tokens, banners, verses) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided.
- Let rival jarls issue conflicting claims, forcing players to choose whose favor matters more.
- Use the Thing-holm and harbor gatherings as arenas for social contests, where oaths are sworn and broken.
- Introduce the Frost Notch as a recurring pressure. Every gift from a Linn comes with a debt. Players who ignore their notches may find themselves summoned to the Thing in winter.
- Let the seasons change. A winter scene should feel different from a summer raid. Use the Season's Turn to reinforce the cyclical nature of Linn life.

In Linn society, your word is your bond, and your reputation is your greatest treasure. But the frost ledger is patient. It waits for spring.

12.1.1 Temple Crusade Mini-Generators

Temple Pressure Events (d6)

Roll when the Northern Crusade advances or when the GM needs a story beat.

1. Grain Fleet Arrives. Temple ships unload cheap southern grain. Prices drop, but the old shrine offerings are forgotten. Effect: +1 tick on Temple Pressure clock; +1d on social rolls with hungry villagers for one scene.
2. Synod Court Opens. A Thepyrgosi judge hears the first case. Feuds may be settled with penance instead of blood-silver. Effect: Shrine-devout characters suffer –1 Position in this settlement until they prove their loyalty.
3. Bell Tower Consecrated. A bronze bell rings nine times at dawn. The old shrine bells fall silent. Effect: Temple-leaning characters gain +1d on faith actions; every midnight, the GM may spend 1 SB to have the ninth bell attract a hungry ghost.
4. Schoolmaster Arrives. Children learn to write Temple script. Old oral traditions are called “superstition.” Effect: The next generation will have +1 Temple Devotion; players may attempt a Synthesis Scene to save one shrine teaching.
5. Bishop's Progress. A high-ranking cleric tours the coast, consecrating altars. Refusal to host him marks you as an enemy of the Light. Effect: Begin a Bishop's Favour [4] clock; if it fills, the bishop demands a public oath of loyalty.
6. Iconoclasm. Zealots burn a seastack shrine or break a Thing's oath-ring. The old patrons are furious. Effect: Shrine-devout characters gain a free Vengeance Oath String; weather and tide hazards become one step worse for 1d4 days.

Linn Reactions to the Temple (d12)

How a community (or a crew) responds to the crusade's advance.

1. Desperate Acceptance. “We ate their grain. We owe them.” Tag: Grateful-Sullen.
2. Silent Resistance. Shrine offerings are left in secret; Temple priests are given cold hearths. Tag: Ice-Hospitality.
3. Open Feud. A clan declares the Temple an enemy. Raids on granaries begin. Clock: Feud with Temple [6].
4. Syncretic Curiosity. Elders ask the priest to bless a shrine. “Both fires warm the hall.” Opportunity: Earn a Synthesis Token.
5. Pragmatic Split. The jarl converts; half the thing follows, half walks out. Clock: Thing Schism [6].
6. Conversion as Revenge. A family spurned by the old patrons embraces the Temple to spite them. Tag: Bitter-Righteous.
7. Bread Bells. The village accepts the Temple but keeps a hidden shrine to Hvítabjörn. Tag: Double-Altar.
8. Heretic Burnings. Temple zealots execute a shrine-keeper. The hall is now Contested Ground.
9. The Bishop’s Bastard. A priest’s secret child is now a Linn raider. String: Blood-Secret.
10. Wave-Father’s Answer. A storm wrecks a Temple grain ship. Shrine-devout see a sign. Effect: +2 on a shrine-related roll this session.
11. Oath-Ring Saved. A Temple judge rules that the old oath-ring is still lawful – a rare bridge-builder. Reward: Ambassador Status (one scene of neutral faith ground).
12. The Silent Bell. The new tower’s bell cracks on the ninth toll. No one can explain it. Omen: GM gains 2 SB for fog- or ghost-related twists.

Temple Missions (d6)

Quests the Temple of Light might offer to a mixed or Temple-leaning crew.

1. Recover a Stolen Relic. A shrine-devout crew has taken a fragment of the True Candle. Find it – by negotiation or force.
2. Escort the Bishop. Take a southern prelate through a contested fjord. Protect him from “pagan” ambushes – or arrange one.
3. Convert a Hall. A jarl sits on the fence. Persuade him (or his skald) that the Light is good for trade. Clock: Conversion [6].
4. Burn the Shrine. A remote seastack shrine is a navigation hazard and a gathering point for resisters. The Temple offers silver for its destruction.
5. Rescue a Synod Judge. He was taken hostage after a biased ruling. Infiltrate the clan’s winter hall and bring him out alive.
6. Forgive a Blood-Debt. The Temple wants to end a feud by paying blood-silver from its own coffers. You must convince both sides to accept – a delicate parley.

Faith Tension Scenes (d6)

Quick scene starters for religious conflict.

1. The Thinglet at the Hearth. Shrine-devout and Temple-leaning families argue over a broken betrothal. Position: Controlled → Desperate if you take sides openly.

2. Midnight at the Bell Tower. Someone has silenced the ninth bell – by stuffing it with wool from a white bear’s pelt. Complication: Spiritual Conflict Condition begins.
3. The Convert’s Shame. A Temple-leaning Linn begs you to smuggle her family heirloom (a shrine totem) out of the village before the bishop’s agents find it.
4. Storm over the Synod Court. Vélki answers a shrine-devout’s prayer with a lightning strike on the Temple granary. GM: Spend 2 SB to have a priest accuse the party of witchcraft.
5. The Wandering Skald. A singer arrives with a verse that claims the crew has a secret shrine oath. The verse is false – but now everyone believes it.
6. Dual Oath at Dusk. A dying warrior asks to swear by both Hraevkn and the Light. The shrine-keeper and the Temple priest each demand you witness only their rite. Reward: A Synthesis Token if you honour both.

Syncretic Outcomes (d6)

When players successfully blend shrine and Temple practices, roll (or choose) a lasting effect.

1. The Shared Cairn. A new shrine uses a Temple candle to light the old oath-ring. Effect: This site is now Mixed Quarter permanently; once per session, any character may reroll a failed faith-related roll here.
2. Witness of Both. The crew is known as bridge-builders. Effect: Gain Ambassador Status (convert a faith-based Position penalty into a bonus once per session).
3. The Ninth Bell Silent. The village agrees to ring only eight bells, leaving the ninth for the old patrons. Effect: Shrine-devout characters no longer suffer –1 Position in this village.
4. The Skald’s Compromise. A Temple hymn is set to an old shrine tune. Effect: Any Audience tag that includes “Suspicious” downgrades to “Curious” in this region.
5. Blood-Silver to the Poor. A feud is settled by paying wergild to the Temple’s poor fund – but the shrine witnesses the payment. Effect: The settlement counts as both a Thing Verdict and a Synod Absolution. The GM may not use this feud as a complication again.
6. The Unbroken Spiral. A new rite is born: a white candle and a raven’s feather are offered together. Effect: The crew gains a permanent Synthesis Token that refreshes every season (instead of being one-use).

Part III

The Eastern Dolmis & The Valewood

“Every threshold has a keeper. Some keepers ask for salt. Some ask for silence. The Green Host asks for a name – and it does not mean yours.” — Dusana of the Raven Road

Chapter 13

Theona

Three Greens, No Ninth.

The wells here hold more than water—they hold the dreams and prayers of generations. To govern is to tend these sacred spaces where the living commune with what came before.

I am a Peat-Cutter. My barrow has a false bottom. I hide debts there—and bodies.

The isles of Theona rise green and jagged from the Dolmis, their basalt cliffs wrapped in mists and moorland song. Nominally a duchy sworn to Viterra, in truth the Three Greens heed no crown but their own moots, no law but their taboos. The greatest of these is the silence of Nine: no bell tolls a ninth, no bridge counts that span, no oath dares its syllable.

The Viterran sheriffs call it superstition. The Green Host calls it trespass. The difference is that the sheriffs will hang you. The Green Host will take your name, and you will wander the mist until you forget you ever had one.

Never pour the ninth cup at a feast. Never speak the ninth name in a bargain. Never step where a step is missing. The Green Host rides for those who complete what should remain incomplete.

— Celia, Hedge-Witch Midwife, who has tied nine thousand knots and untied nine

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Oatcakes and heather ale—the oats are grown on terraced hillsides, the heather is harvested from the high moors. The ale is brewed in secret, by women who have forgotten more recipes than the men will ever learn. The men do not ask. The men are wise.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count to eight. Theona children are taught numbers on their fingers—eight fingers, two thumbs. The thumbs are not counted. The thumbs are for pointing. Pointing is for warnings. Warnings are for the ninth thing.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their shadow. Theona is a land of mists and twilight. A stranger whose shadow is too short has been touched by the Host. A stranger whose shadow is too long is running from them. A stranger with no shadow is already taken. Do not speak to them. Do not meet their eyes. Do not offer them salt.

What is the most common crime? Breaking the ninth taboo—but breaking the taboo is not a crime, it is an invitation. The Host rides for those who pour the ninth cup, speak the ninth name, or take the ninth step. The Host does not arrest. The Host takes. The taken are never found. Their empty cups remain on the table. The cups are warm for three days.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Green Host are not ghosts. They are the living—Theonans who broke the taboo and were taken. They ride with the King in Green, who was once a chieftain of the northern isle. He broke the ninth vow. He was not taken. He was crowned. His crown is made of thorns. His throne is a barrow. His court is the mist.

Where do people go when they die? To the barrows. Theona's dead are buried in long, low mounds that line the eastern cliffs. The mounds are planted with gorse and broom. The gorse blooms yellow in spring. The yellow is for mourning. The broom is for memory. The dead are not mourned. The dead are remembered. Remembering is enough.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You walk the Ninth Mile—a stretch of road that circles the central isle. The road is nine miles long. You must walk it at night, alone, with no light. If you reach the end by dawn, you are forgiven. If you do not, the Host will find you. The Host is always looking. The Host is always waiting.

What is the most important festival? The Feast of the Eighth Cup (autumn equinox). Every household pours eight cups of mead—one for each of the living generations. The ninth cup is poured onto the ground. The ground drinks. The ancestors listen. The ancestors do not answer.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Three-Isles King is a changeling. The real king died in 798 AR, drowned in a peat bog while hunting. The changeling was placed by the Lady Beneath as part of a bargain. The bargain was for peace between the isles. The peace has held. The changeling has aged. The changeling's reflection does not.

13.1 Theona — “Three Greens, No Ninth”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The Green Host rides for those who count to nine. Viterra counts to nine.

Matron of Wells (Elite): “The wells here hold more than water – they hold the dreams and prayers of generations. To govern is to tend these sacred spaces where the living commune with what came before. The Viterran sheriffs call it superstition. The Green Host calls it trespass.”

Peat-Cutter (Commoner): “The land here remembers everything, especially what you don’t say. Skip the ninth step, forget the ninth name, and the green earth takes note. Best keep your omissions honest. The Viterran scribes write everything down. That’s why they’ll never understand.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The isles of Theona rise green and jagged from the Dolmis, their basalt cliffs wrapped in mists and moorland song. Nominally a duchy sworn to Viterra, in truth the Three Greens heed no crown but their own moots, no law but their taboos. The greatest of these is the silence of Nine: no bell tolls a ninth, no bridge counts that span, no oath dares its syllable. It is said that those who break the ban invite the Green Host – the Aos Sí, the fair folk who were here before the first Viterran longship. The Viterran Viterrans call it superstition. The Theona call it survival.

The Viterran crown claims the isles by right of conquest and papal bull. Its sheriffs impose common law, its bishops build stone churches, its undertakers plant English towns on confiscated lands. But the old ways persist: Brehon judges still speak judgment at the Moot Hill, and the Green Host still rides on the ninth night. To break a taboo is to invite not only the fae but the Viterran inquisitor. Both collect debts. Only one accepts coin.

What you notice first: The smell of wet peat and salt. The silence that follows every eighth bell-ring. The hawthorn trees at every crossroads – the fairy trees that no local will touch, and that Viterran surveyors learn to avoid after the first one disappears.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never pour the ninth cup at a feast. Never speak the ninth name in a bargain. Never step where a step is missing. The Green Host rides for those who complete what should remain incomplete. The Viterran sheriff will hang you for the same offence – but the Host takes your name, not your neck.

Regional Mood: Three Greens, No Ninth

Here, peace is a ritual, and every word sharpens the blade that seals it. Theona is claimed by Viterra but ruled by moots, well-keepers, and the old faith. The Viterran sheriffs demand taxes in silver; the Brehon judges settle disputes in cattle. The Viterran bishops burn offerings to the White Flame; the well-keepers leave butter at hawthorn groves. Every hedge is a boundary, every bridge a negotiation, every ninth step a door the Green Host might open.

Linn longships cut through the fog for raiding; Ashaani slavers hunt the coves in stolen coracles; pirates from Zakov and the Vilikari shore trade stolen goods for kelp and salt. Sidhi sailors and Aelinnel factors run cargo up the tide-stairs, and Aelaerem hedge-wives barter red thread for hawthorn passes. Through it all, the Ninth Taboo threads every handshake, every toast, every whispered prayer. To break it is to invite the Green Host—and the Host does not bargain. To break Viterran law is to invite the sheriff's noose. The Theona have learned to break neither – and to bend both.

Starting Location: A Moot Hill under rain, where vows are carved into stone and knives gleam beside the altar. A Bride-Peacemaker draws a blade between two bloodlines. “The ninth vow was never spoken,” she says. “But the Green Host remembers. Bring us the head of the slaver who burned the eastern strand, and the feud will end. Fail, and your name will join the uncounted. Or the sheriff will take you for vagrancy – the crown has declared our moots unlawful assemblies.”

Spades — Places

2. Tide-Stairs — Basalt steps into cove; everyone skips the “missing” rung. The missing step is still there—you just can’t see it. Step where it should be, or don’t step at all. The Viterran engineers measured the stairs. They counted nine. They are no longer here.
3. Saint’s Well — Under hawthorn hung with ribbons and secrets; wishes tied in cloth. The ribbons are knotted in eights. The ninth knot is never tied—only imagined. The crown calls it idolatry. The locals call it irrigation.
4. Fog-Wick Tower — Burning peat; bell plays eight notes, never nine. The bell-ringer wears a mask. Underneath, he has no mouth—only a whisper. The sheriff has tried to arrest him three times. Each time, the tower was empty.
5. Black Bog Causeway — White stones like teeth; will-lights test your stride. The stones were set by a king who drowned. He counts each footstep from below. The Viterran surveyors replaced the stones with wooden posts. The posts burned.

8. Sea-Cave Harp — Tide-ropes sing under headland; echoes bargain for safe passage. The harp has no player. It plays itself when the drowned want to speak. The crown has posted a notice: "Unauthorized musical performances prohibited." The notices wash away.
9. Uncounted Bridge — Nine-arch causeway; locals tally “eight-and-one.” The ninth arch is there—but the locals will deny it. Walk it at your own risk. The Viterran cartographer marked it on his map. His map now shows a bridge to nowhere.
10. Ogham Grove — Carved pillars around an absent ninth post; runes speak in silence. The missing post was removed by a king who broke a vow. The runes still curse his line. The Viterran bishop ordered the grove destroyed. The axes broke.

9. Green Neighbor — Polite emissary from under the hill; borrowed boots, strange customs. He never steps on a crack. He says the earth has teeth. The Viterran tax assessor stepped on a crack. He now has a limp.
10. Coracle-Captain — Eight-boat flotilla; swift as rumor, sure as the tide. Her boats have no names. She says naming a vessel invites the Green Host to count it. The Viterran harbormaster tried to register one. He could not find it. It was right in front of him.
- J Bride-Peacemaker — Walks between bloodlines with a silver knife; peace in marriage. Her knife has a wooden blade. The families cut their palms with wood—blood without iron. The Viterran magistrate declared the ritual "superstitious." The knife is now his letter opener.

(Fog/Feud/Taboo) Ground-mist erases tracks; horns travel, edges do not; bog-lights lure teamster off the causeway.

Clubs — Complications/Threats

3. Bog-Lights — Lure teamster off the causeway; recovery costs time and pride. The lights are the souls of debtors. Follow them, and you'll never pay your way out. The Viterran tax collector followed them. He now lives in the bog. He pays no tax.
4. Spoken Geas — No ninth word in parley—or the deal curdles like milk. The word you cannot speak sits on your tongue like a stone. The Viterran merchant who said "nine" in a contract now sells only in eights. His customers have not noticed.
5. Salt-Rot — Smokehouse fails; fish spoil, tempers rise like the tide. The salt was cut with grave dust. Someone wanted the winter to be hard. The Viterran garrison's supplies rotted. They bought from the locals. The price was a promise.

6. Procession Clash — Saint-day vs. hawthorn taboo; shutters slam, peace fractures. The saint’s banner and the green branch cannot touch. When they do, blood follows. The Viterran bishop ordered the hawthorn removed. The tree grew back overnight.
7. Wave-Count — Eighth swell, Nameless follows; boats tremble, sailors pray. The ninth swell never comes. But something rides the eighth. The Viterran customs cutter that chased a smuggling boat did not see the eighth swell. It is at the bottom.
8. Ringfort Wakes — A bone-judge is “consulted”; now you’re named in the old law. The bone-judge’s skull is filled with peat smoke. It speaks in riddles—and judgments. The Viterran magistrate who ignored a bone-judge’s ruling now has no memory of the case.

- Q Mainland Return — Exile with papers; elders arrested “for progress.” The papers are stamped with a Viterran seal. The seal is still warm—and wrong. The elder who was arrested now works in the governor’s garden. He does not speak. The plants are very healthy.
- K Green Host Rides — Hooves like drums, cattle scatter, sentries sleep. The riders have no faces—only masks of woven hawthorn. The Viterran garrison that saw the Host now stands watch at noon. They will not explain why.
- A Great Fog — Routes loop, bells lie, every promise takes the long way. The fog is old. It remembers promises made to the dead. The Viterran governor who swore to “pacify” the isles is still lost in it. His dispatches arrive late. They make no sense.

(Blessing/Token/Right) Well-blessing for a named ford crossing; moot token with eight-knotted cord skips local queues.

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Well-Blessing — Named ford crosses you safely, once; water remembers your need. The blessing is a ribbon. Tie it to your wrist. Do not tie a ninth knot. The Viterran sheriff’s horse refused to cross the blessed ford. He had to swim.
3. Moot Token — Eight-knotted cord; skip any local queue or judgment. The cord is braided from horsehair and silence. Cut a knot to speak. The Viterran magistrate who tried to arrest a token-holder found his courtroom empty. The case was dismissed.
4. Harbor-Green — Painted mark exempts your boat from the next levy; tide as ally. The mark is a circle with an eighth cut. The missing slice is the toll. The Viterran customs officer who tried to collect from a marked boat now collects shells on the beach.
5. Hawthorn Pass — Immunity from a single local taboo (for one scene). The pass is a hawthorn twig. Carry it in your mouth. Do not chew. The Viterran inquisitor who tried to burn a pass-bearer found his pyre would not light.

- K Whale-Escort — Eight-oar guards across the Dolmis reach; strength in numbers. The crew carries your name on a scrap of vellum. If the paper gets wet, you are alone. The Viterran warship that tried to intercept a whale-escorted vessel now has no name.
- A Green Favor — One uncanny exception to custom, spoken beneath hawthorn. The favor is a dream. When you wake, the hawthorn will remember—even if you don’t. The Viterran governor who asked for a Green Favor now believes he is a king. The actual king is amused.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (blessings/tokens/rights) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- The “No Ninth” custom: whenever a 9 appears in your seed, add an omission to the scene (a missing step, an unsaid name, an unseen guest). If the 9 is a Diamond, you may break the taboo once—but someone will come to collect later.
- If any A appears, echo green and count motifs—hawthorn that whispers, bells that miscount, promises that take the long way home.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Silent Count: Players and GMs are encouraged to omit a detail (a name, a step, a tally) when the Ninth appears, echoing Theona’s taboo. This is how the islanders evade Viterran law: they simply do not say what the law requires. The law cannot count what is not spoken.

- Green Host’s Omen: Any dream sequence or omen may be framed as the ride of the Green Host—hoofbeats across the sky, wind through the moors, sea spray tasting of salt and blood. The Viterran garrison has learned to ignore the omens. The garrison is understrength.
- Bride-Peace Feasts: Weddings, truces, and funerals blur; sharing a feast can end a feud for a season—or doom a guest if the ninth cup is poured. The Viterran crown has outlawed these feasts. The feasts continue. The crown’s officers attend. They never pour the ninth cup.
- The Viterran Plantation Clock [8]: Tracks the Viterran crown’s efforts to colonise the isles. Advances when the party assists the crown (provides evidence, enforces a writ, pays a tax) or when a Viterran sheriff successfully imposes common law. Retreats when the party supports a moot, hides a fugitive, or exposes a crown official’s corruption. When full, a new plantation is declared: a Viterran town is built, lands are confiscated, and a new sheriff is appointed. The Green Host’s attention ticks up.
- Brehon Law vs. Common Law: In any legal dispute, the party may choose to invoke Brehon law (custom, precedent, witness) or Viterran common law (statute, seal, written evidence). Brehon law grants +1 die if the party can produce a respected elder or a witnessed oral history; Viterran law grants +1 die if the party has a writ or a seal. Choosing one over the other shifts the Viterran Plantation clock by 1 segment toward or away from the crown.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Saint Bríd of the Unquenched Well (Syncretic): A local saint venerated by both the Temple of Light and the old well-keepers. Her shrine is a well hung with red ribbons; pilgrims who tie an eighth knot and leave a silver coin may ask one question of the Green Host—but the answer comes in a dream, and the dream always costs a memory. The Viterran bishop has declared her a heretic three times. Each time, the declaration was found burned. The well still flows.
- Saint Colmán of the Eighth Bell (Oath of Mercy and Grace): A missionary who tried to convert the isles by ringing a ninth bell. The Green Host took his tongue, and he spent the rest of his life speaking in eights. His hospice still stands near the Fog-Wick Tower; it heals the fog-sick, but every patient leaves unable to count past eight. The Viterran crown has tried to close the hospice. The hospice’s patients now include the governor’s son.
- The Dullahan (The Headless Horseman): A fae omen that rides when a Viterran sheriff is about to die. It carries its own head under its arm, and it calls the sheriff’s name. Those who hear it are dead before dawn. The current sheriff has heard it three times. He is still alive. He is very afraid.
- The Banshee (Bean Sidhe): A spirit who keens when a pure-blooded Theona chieftain dies. The Viterran crown has tried to suppress her songs as “noise pollution.” The keening continues. The chieftains die. The crown’s record-keepers have given up counting.
- The Morrigan (The Phantom Queen): A war goddess who appears as a crow before battle. She does not choose sides. She chooses the dead. The Viterran soldiers who see a crow before a skirmish often desert. The local fighters see a crow and sharpen their blades. The Morrigan is amused.
- The Ninth: In any Theona scene, the ninth person to speak in a room draws the Green Host’s attention. The wise hold their tongues until someone else breaks the count. Those who speak ninth are said to see a pale rider on the horizon the next night—and the rider is always one name closer. The Viterran governor who spoke ninth now has a portrait of himself that ages instead of him. He has not looked at it in a year.

Theona Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Bog: Toss a crust into the mist before crossing a causeway. Ignore the first Ground-Mist penalty.
- Knot the Eighth: Tie a single knot in a ribbon before a moot. Cancel Spoken Geas or take -1 die on your next oath (your choice).
- Name to the Well: Whisper a dead enemy's name into Saint's Well. Gain +1 Effect against his kin for the scene, but mark Obligation to the Matron.

Patronage & Power

In Theona, power flows through ancient custom, sacred spaces, and the careful observance of taboo. The Three Greens maintain their independence through a web of moots, well-keepers, and geas-keepers who ensure the old laws are honored. The King and Matron rule by consensus and tradition, while the unseen Lady Beneath influences events through dreams and whispers. Against them stands the Viterran crown — a Viterran power of sheriffs, bishops, and undertakers who seek to replace Brehon law with common law, hawthorn with church stone, and the Green Host with the White Flame.

For the GM: Patronage in Theona revolves around blessings, exemptions, and the delicate balance of keeping or breaking taboos. Rewards often take the form of tokens, rights, or divine favor that can be leveraged into greater influence. To emphasize the Viterran-Irish conflict:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (ribbons, tokens, blessings) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided by crown officials.
- Let the Viterran crown and the Green Host issue conflicting exemptions — players must choose whose favor matters more, and whose curse is worse.
- Use the moots, wells, and causeways as arenas for social contests, where knowledge of Brehon law (and its deliberate omissions) determines success against Viterran common law.
- The Viterran Plantation Clock is a visible campaign front. Players can accelerate or delay it, but once it fills, the isles change forever — new towns, new sheriffs, new taboos.

In Theona, your word is your weave, and your weave determines whether you walk the green path or invite the Host — or the sheriff's noose.

Thematic SB Spend Table

- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for trackers, green neighbors, or crown informers.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favorable tide.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Wick-warden, moot official, or Viterran bailiff becomes aware and begins responding.

Chapter 14

Zakov

Salt & Serpent.

The tide here keeps better ledgers than any scribe, and the reefs remember every secret whispered above their depths. Power flows like the currents—those who understand them rule the waves.

I am a Dock-Rat. My tattoo is of the Sunken Quarter at low tide. The buildings are upside down.

The pirate-city of the Dolmis coast isn't just a den of thieves—it's a corporation with a flag, and oh, how the Salt Prince loves playing king while the Syndicate Silent pulls the strings. Here, every manifest is a lie, every harbor a doorstep to a dozen conspiracies, and every fog-light a lure or a warning. The city breathes with the sea: at low tide, secrets exposed; at flood, the drowned walk the Sunken Quarter and knock on doors that should be locked.

The Salt Prince's crown floats. The Syndicate's ledger is written in disappearing ink. The Kraken's Tongue lives in a bell tower that only exists at high tide. None of this is metaphor. All of it is true. All of it wants something from you.

Never take a coin that tastes of brine. The Serpent's Mark is not a blessing. It is a debt that drowns.

— Ravel, Dock-Rat, who has never slept above the high-water mark

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Salted fish and hard cheese—the fish is dried on the docks, the cheese is smuggled from the mainland. The cheese is always stale. The fish is always fresh. The contradiction is never explained.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To read the tide tables. Zakov children are taught the schedule of the sea before they learn their letters. A child who cannot read the tide is a child who will be caught by the flood. The flood is not water. The flood is the Syndicate. The Syndicate collects debts at high tide.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their coin-pouch. Zakov runs on silver—good silver, bad silver, silver that has been under the sea. A stranger whose pouch clinks with fresh-minted coin is a merchant. A stranger whose pouch is full of salt-crusted bits is a pirate. A stranger whose pouch is empty is a liar. Liars do not last long in Zakov. The sea takes them.

What is the most common crime? Piracy—but piracy is not a crime, it is a profession. The Syndicate licenses privateers. The privateers pay a tithe. The tithe funds the harbor. The harbor protects the ships. The ships are protected from pirates. The pirates are the Syndicate. The cycle is beautiful.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Salt Prince is not a person. The title is held by a ring—a band of black coral that has been passed from captain to captain for three centuries. The ring is cursed. The ring's wearer cannot sleep. The ring's wearer cannot die. The ring's wearer cannot leave Zakov. The current Prince has worn the ring for forty years. He has not slept in forty years. He has not smiled in forty years. He has not left the palace in forty years.

Where do people go when they die? To the Sunken Quarter—the drowned district that lies beneath the harbor. The dead are weighted with chains and dropped into the canals. The canals empty into the sea. The sea returns the bodies at low tide. The bodies are collected by the Syndicate. The Syndicate sells them to the Salt-Prince's collectors. The collectors use them for—no one asks. No one wants to know.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You pay the Salt Tithe—a silver coin for every year of the wronged party's life. The coin must be a salt coin—one that has been under the sea for a full tide cycle. The coin is thrown into the harbor. If it sinks, you are forgiven. If it floats, you are not. If it floats back to shore, you are cursed. The curse is the Serpent's Mark. The Mark is a debt that drowns.

What is the most important festival? The Rising of the Tides (summer solstice). The harbor fills with luminescent algae. The algae glows green. The green is called "the Kraken's Eye." The Kraken is said to rise on this night. The Kraken has not risen in living memory. The Kraken is patient. The Kraken is waiting.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Pirate Queen is a spy. She was planted by the Kahfagian Admiralty forty years ago. Her mission was to destabilize the Syndicate. She has become the Syndicate. The Admiralty does not know. The Admiralty still sends her orders. She burns them. The ashes are mixed with her tea.

14.1 Zakov — “Salt & Serpent”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The tide keeps a better ledger than any scribe. The reef remembers every secret.

Salt Prince (Elite): “The tide here keeps better ledgers than any scribe, and the reefs remember every secret whispered above their depths. Power flows like the currents — those who understand them rule the waves. The Astroegro learned that. They are at the bottom now.”

Dock-Rat (Commoner): “The sewers and the sea both carry what folks want to forget, but they also remember everything. Best keep your business above water and your enemies guessing which dock you’ll use next. The Salt Prince’s crown floats, the Reaping grows in the dark, and the tide pulls for anyone with a sharp knife and a sharper tongue.”

Genre / Mood: Lovecraftian dread meets pirate swagger; eldritch tide-horror, maritime noir, debt as a living force.

Starting Location: A smuggler’s gate built into the seawall, its iron mouth crusted with barnacles and secrets. The gatekeeper is a one-eyed woman who accepts payment in stories. Behind her, the Dregs Quarter stretches on stilts into the harbor, and the Salt Prince’s flagship, the Red Wake, rides at anchor off the Iron Pier. “The levy rises tonight,” she says, spitting into the water. “Every ship pays, or every ship burns. You look like the burning type. Good. The Prince needs a reminder that the tide turns for everyone. And keep your eyes off the water at low tide. The Reaping doesn’t like being watched.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Zakov is the pirate-city of the Dolmis coast, built on the drowned bones of an Astroegro port city that sank beneath the waves when that ancient empire fell. The old stone ruins — shattered columns, flooded plazas, sealed vaults — lie only a few fathoms down, and at low tide you can see their roofs breaking the surface like the spines of dead leviathans. The city’s streets are built on the rubble, its piers driven into the wreckage, and its deepest cellars open into sunken chambers where the water is warm and still. The Astroegro are gone, but their secrets remain: crystalline shards that hum with a terrible patience, sealed doors that weep brine, and the slow, creeping corruption that the locals call the Reaping.

Zakov’s streets are piers, its courts are taverns, and its rulers are whoever the Syndicates fear most this season. The Salt Prince claims the throne of driftwood and extortion, but the real power ebbs and flows with the tide — and the tide remembers everything. Here, every manifest is a lie, every harbor a doorstep to a dozen conspiracies, and every fog-light a lure or a warning. The city breathes with the sea: at low tide, secrets exposed; at flood, the drowned walk the Sunken Quarter and knock on doors that should be locked. Zakov is not a place you visit. It is a place you survive — or rule.

Beneath it all, the Reaping. Centuries ago, the first Salt Prince — then a common adventurer — dove into a submerged Astroegro vault off the coast. What he found there no one knows for certain. Some say it was a living crystal, a fragment of a god that fell into the sea. Others whisper it is the father of Khemesh, the first hunger. The oldest tales call it simply the Reaping: a hunger that does not kill, but harvests. The Reaping seeps into Zakov like groundwater, corrupting slowly, tainting every soul who stays too long. Dreams curdle into obsession. Generosity rots into debt. The city’s famous “everyone owes everyone” is not a culture; it is a symptom. The Salt Prince keeps the Reaping’s source sealed beneath his palace, but the seal is cracking, and the crystal grows.

What you notice first: The smell of brine and tar. The constant slap of water against stone. The way every tavern has a door that leads to a different dock — and every dock has a name that changes with the tide. The faint, harmonic hum that comes from the deep, like a bell that never stops ringing.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never take a coin that tastes of brine. The Serpent’s Mark is not a blessing. It is a debt that drowns. And never look into a still pool at low tide. The Reaping looks back.

Regional Mood: Salt, Serpent, and the Crystalline Deep

Here, the sea is not a border — it is a landlord. Zakov rose from the wreckage of a sunken Astroegro port, and every stone is a salvage claim. The Salt Prince rules from a throne of driftwood and extortion, but the real lords are the Syndicate factors who own the docks, the eel-cults that whisper from the sewers (descended from Astroegro cultists who worshipped the deep), and the fae courts that launder their influence through tide-bargains. Ships arrive with goods no customs post will name, and depart with cargoes no manifest will show. The city’s law is the Tide Clock: low water for killing, flood water for trading, slack for negotiation. Break the rhythm, and the city will break you.

The Reaping is not a myth. It is a presence. It manifests as a crystalline growth that spreads through the submerged ruins, leaching colour from stone and warmth from water. Those who stay in Zakov too long begin to dream of drowning; their shadows grow sharp and angular; their debts feel heavier. The Reaping does not demand worship. It demands attention. And it has been waiting for centuries.

The Reaping — A Campaign Clock

The Reaping is not a monster to be fought. It is a pressure, a corruption, a slow unmaking of the soul. Track the party’s entanglement with it using a Reaping’s Corrosion clock [8]. Tick the clock when:

- A character accepts a bargain from the Salt Prince or a Syndicate factor.
- A character uses a Serpent’s Mark (see Diamonds).
- A character fails a Resolve test while in Zakov (drowning dreams, crystalline whispers).
- The party lingers in the Sunken Quarter or the Serpent’s Spine for more than a scene.

At 4 segments: the character gains the Crystalline Whisper condition (you hear the Reaping’s voice in quiet moments; –1 die to resist fear). Their shadow begins to shimmer faintly. At 8 segments: the character becomes Harvested. Their shadow detaches and walks into the sea, and they owe the Reaping a name (a true name of someone they love, or their own). They may still act, but they are marked. The GM may spend 2 SB to have a Collector — a crystalline spirit in the shape of a drowned sailor — appear and demand payment. To clear the clock, the party must:

- Offer the Reaping something it values more than a soul: a memory of a crime no one witnessed, a true name from the Astroegro era (found in the sunken vaults), or a shard of its own prison

(a heist into the Salt Prince’s vault).

- Perform a deep-dive ritual at the Serpent’s Spine, cutting a crystalline growth from the reef and replacing it with a lock of hair from a willing volunteer.

Prominent NPCs of Zakov

Name	Role/Title	Motivation	Rumoured Quirk
Salt Prince Lev	Nominal ruler of Zakov; keeper of the Reaping’s seal	Keep the syndicates from tearing the city apart	His crown is a circlet of driftwood; he has never taken it off. Beneath it, his scalp is cracked like dry earth. Something crystalline moves in the cracks.
Pirate Queen Mila	Rules the Shallows with charm and cutlass	Carve out a kingdom free of the Salt Prince’s levies	Her cutlass was her grandmother’s; the grandmother was also a queen. The grandmother was the first to see the Reaping and refuse it. The refusal cost her her shadow.
Kraken’s Tongue	Tide-oracle who speaks in riddles	Survive another season without being harvested	She lives in a bell tower that only exists at high tide; the bell does not ring. The bell is a fragment of the Reaping’s prison. She tends it with her own blood.

Dock-Master Olena	Syndicate factor who “loses” ships	Own the waterfront, one debtor at a time	Her ledger has a secret page that is a map of debtors’ bones. The bones are crystalline. They move.
The Reckoner	Broker of cosmic debts (Maelstræus)	Collect interest on every contract signed in Zakov	His coin appears in the pocket of the opposing counsel the next day. The coin is warm. It tastes of brine and crystal.
The Salt-Bitten Angel	Cursed messenger (Malachai)	Offer cruel bargains that always leave a scar	A silver coin that tastes of brine circulates among the smugglers; take it, and your cargo always passes inspection — but the Angel’s smile has too many teeth, and the Reaping watches.

8. Poison-Tongue — Trades secrets like coin; words as blades. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[MAGIC]’ His tongue is forked — not by birth, but by a curse. He can speak two truths at once. The Reaping speaks through him in his sleep. He no longer sleeps. His dreams are harvested.
9. Exiled Admiral — Runs a black-market shipyard; rank as a resource. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ *Her flag is a torn imperial pennant. She keeps it to remind herself why she left. - Q Kraken’s Favor — The tides part for your ship, once; nature as an ally. ‘[TRAVEL]’ ‘[MAGIC]’ The favor is a tentacle wrung dry. When you need it, soak it in seawater. The tentacle will write a name in the foam. Do not speak that name. The name is the Reaping’s. It will answer.
- K Prince’s Coin — Bribe any official, silence any witness. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The coin is a finger bone. The official who takes it will not speak — or not listen. The bone belonged to the Salt Prince’s predecessor. He is still alive. He is in the coin. He is made of crystal.
- A Serpent’s Mark — The reef itself will guide you home; danger as a guide. ‘[TRAVEL]’ ‘[MAGIC]’ The mark is a scar on your palm. The reef will cut you — but it will also open. The cut bleeds crystalline brine. The brine is the Reaping’s attention. Use it sparingly. The Reaping will remember. It will ask for a name.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (passes/contracts/goods) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo salt and serpent motifs — tides that remember, reefs that shift, the deep that listens, crystal that grows in the dark.

Additional Features

- Tide Clock: Scenes run on a four-segment Tide Clock (Low → Flood → Slack → Ebb). Each advance shifts Position: Low tide reveals hidden wrecks and bolt-holes; Flood tide drowns streets and seals doors. When the Clock turns, the Keeper may demand 1 SB tied to the waters.
- Reaping’s Corrosion (Clock [8]): Tracks the slow corruption of the party’s souls. See §14.1 for full mechanics.
- Syndicate Debt: Every deal leaves a mark. Track a single Debt value (0–3). At 3, the Syndicate calls it in: a betrayal, a levy, an unwanted escort. Clear 1 Debt by paying a Diamond or sacrificing a useful contact.
- Whispers Deep: Rumors carry teeth. When characters openly boast, bargain, or betray, roll 1d6: 1–3, Whispers spread, increasing SB generation; 4–6, Whispers favor the PCs, lowering suspicion until the tide turns.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Reckoner — Maelstræus. Interest on every contract; the coin that always comes back.

- The Salt-Bitten Angel — Malachai. A silver coin that tastes of brine; a blessing that drowns.
- The Kraken’s Father — Khemesh. The pressure beneath the keel; the debt the sea collects.
- The Tide Father — The Traveler. The current that carries you home — or to the reef.
- The Crystal Matrix — The Ninth. The Reaping’s true nature; silence that has taken form.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Bitter Root: Daughters of the Cord run a hospice in the Sunken Quarter. They ask no payment — but they cut threads. A renegade Sister hides among the eel-cults, trying to untie her cord from the Salt Prince’s ledger. She claims the Reaping is the Cord’s original sin. No one knows if she is right. Her cord is made of crystal.
- The Threshold Compendium: The Serpent’s Spine is a Class II Anchor site — the bound spirit of a drowned admiral. Saikou Ira would trade his silver mirror for a single reef chart. The mirror shows the Reaping as a crystalline spider. He has not slept since. His reflection is missing.
- The Salt-Bitten Angel (Malachai): A silver coin that never spends circulates among the smugglers. Take it, and your cargo always passes inspection — but the coin will taste of brine every time you touch it, and the Angel will ask for a favour before the next full moon. The favour is always to carry a message to the Salt Prince. The message is a single word: “Soon.” The coin is warm. It grows warmer.
- The Reckoner (Maelstræus): The Crimson Docks keep a ledger signed in salt water; those who borrow from the Reckoner find that their interest compounds with every tide. A captain who defaults may wake to find their ship’s name struck from all records, as if it had never sailed. The Reckoner’s ink is crystalline. It writes itself. It also writes the names of the dead.
- The Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire: Zakov psions are called “Tide-Readers.” They taste the future in the salt. The Pirate Queen employs two — and has never trusted a forecast that didn’t cost blood. The Reaping’s presence makes their predictions unreliable. They taste crystal instead of salt. They have stopped predicting. They only listen.
- The Ninth: In any Zakov scene, the ninth ship to enter the harbor in a tide will be claimed by the reef. The wise wait for the tenth — or pay a name to the Kraken’s Tongue. The reef is not a reef. It is a crystalline mouth. It has been feeding for centuries. It is still hungry.

Zakov Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Tide: Toss a crust into the water before a voyage. Ignore the first Tide Shift penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Manifest: Tie a single knot in a corner of your cargo list. Cancel Voided Contract or take –1 die on your next customs check (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Reef: Whisper a dead captain’s name into the Serpent’s Spine. Gain +1 Effect when navigating the Shallows this scene, but mark Obligation to the Kraken’s Tongue. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Crystal to the Deep: Drop a clear shard of glass (not crystal — glass) into the water at low tide. The Reaping will notice the deception — but it may be amused. Roll twice on the next Reaping’s Corrosion tick and take the better result. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Region-Specific SB Options

- Zakov (Syndicate Politics): Protection money demands increase, rival factions make conflicting demands, contracts are voided mid-deal.

- Zakov (Pirate Culture): Ships are commandeered, crews mutiny, pirate codes are enforced with violence.
- Zakov (Reaping Corruption): A character's reflection speaks in a different voice, a crystalline growth appears on a weapon, the party hears a harmonic hum from the deep, a shadow walks past with no source.

Patronage & Power

In Zakov, power flows through the control of smuggling routes, the management of syndicate debts, and the ability to navigate the complex web of pirate politics. The Salt Prince maintains nominal authority, but real power lies with those who control the tides, the reefs, and the flow of information through the city's taverns and black markets. The true authorities are those who can provide safe passage, protect cargoes, and mediate between competing syndicates.

The Reaping changes everything. Whoever controls the crystalline shard — or understands its nature — holds a weapon that could unmake the city or save it. The Salt Prince keeps the Reaping's location secret, but the Syndicates whisper that he is no longer its master. The Reaping has begun to act on its own. It reaches through the tide, through the dreams of the drowned, through the taste of brine in a smuggler's coin. Zakov is not ruled by the Prince. It is ruled by a hunger that has been patient for centuries. The Astroegro sealed it. The first Salt Prince bargained with it. Now the seal cracks, and the crystal grows.

For the GM: Patronage in Zakov revolves around smuggling rights, safe harbors, and the ability to provide protection from both legal and illegal authorities. Rewards often take the form of tokens, charters, and safe passage that can be leveraged into greater influence. To emphasize the city's fluid power and the creeping horror of the Reaping:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (tokens, manifests, keys) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided — and that may carry a trace of crystal.
- Let rival syndicates issue conflicting protections, forcing players to choose whose favor matters more — and whose debts are safer.
- Use the docks, taverns, and smuggling routes as arenas for social contests, where knowledge of custom and connections determines success — and where a character's shadow may betray them.
- Track Reaping's Corrosion as a campaign clock. Its advance is the city's slow death. The players can delay it, redirect it, or even embrace it — but they cannot ignore it. The Reaping is patient. It has been waiting since the Astroegro fell.

In Zakov, your reputation is your wealth, and your wealth determines whether you rule the waves or feed the fishes. But beneath the waves, the Reaping feeds on reputation too. And it is very, very hungry.

Chapter 15

Aelinnel (Aevrossa)

Stone, Bough, and Bright Things.

The law here flows like water over stone—it finds its own path, and woe to those who try to dam it with paper and pretense. The earth itself will testify against the unjust.

I am a Charcoal-Burner. My kilns tell us more than your books ever could. When the smoke curls left, the tide's with you. When it splits in three, best stay by your own hearth till it burns straight again.

The gnomish homeland isn't just a place where they count steps—it's a place where they worship the count, and oh, how the Aelinnel love a good loophole in their beloved numerology. They count everything: steps, bells, offerings—because to them, precision isn't just virtue; it's leverage with a supernatural clause.

The fae courts of the Thorn Lady and the Green Knight watch every threshold. The Stone Prince keeps the old pacts indexed in ledgers that breathe. And the Green Gate opens at neap tide, expecting exact change in truths. The Aelinnel don't just live between worlds—they arbitrate them.

Never bring naked iron past a hawthorn arch unless it is gilded or named. Copper is polite, silver is opinionated, cold iron is an accusation. The hawthorn will remember which you carried.

— Tallow, Charcoal-Burner, who has never lost a sheep to the Hollow but has lost three helpers who did not listen

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Honey-cakes and mushroom tea—the honey is from the hawthorn groves, the mushrooms are harvested from the root-caverns. The cakes are baked in copper moulds. The moulds are shaped like animals. The animals are not edible. The shapes are for luck.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count in eights. Aelinnel children are taught to group everything in eights—steps, breaths, heartbeats. The ninth is not a number. The ninth is a gap. The gap is where the Hollow sits. The Hollow is not a monster. The Hollow is a creditor. The debt is never paid in full.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their tools. Aelinnel carry copper—spoons, chisels, measuring rods. A stranger whose tools are iron is a barbarian. A stranger whose tools are silver is a priest. A stranger whose tools are gold is a fool. Gold does not ring true. Gold is for bribes. Bribes are for secrets.

What is the most common crime? Miscounting—but miscounting is not a crime, it is a geometric error. The error is corrected by the Stone Prince's ledgers. The ledgers are kept in the Hall of Sums. The Hall is guarded by clockwork sentinels. The sentinels do not sleep. The sentinels do not forgive. The sentinels count every breath.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Stone Prince is not a prince. The title is held by a committee of six elders who have never been seen together. They communicate through copper messages left in the Hall of Sums. The messages are written in a code that changes with the tides. The code has not been broken in three centuries. The code is not meant to be broken. The code is meant to be trusted.

Where do people go when they die? To the tide-gates—stone arches at the edge of the sea. The dead are laid on the threshold. The tide comes in. The tide takes them. The gates are older than the Aelinnel. The gates were built by something else. The gates are still watching.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a counting—a public recitation of your wrong in the Stone Prince's court. The court is a circle of copper chairs. The chairs are cold. The wrongdoer stands in the centre. The elders count the syllables of your apology. If the count is even, you are forgiven. If the count is odd, you must leave an offering. The offering is measured in copper. The copper is weighed against your breath. The scales are never balanced.

What is the most important festival? The Opening of the Green Gate (autumn equinox). The gate appears at low tide, a stone arch that leads to—no one knows. The Aelinnel do not enter. They leave offerings: copper, honey, a single true name. The gate accepts. The gate closes. The gate waits.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Green Knight is not a knight. She is the gatekeeper—the last survivor of the people who built the tide-gates. She wears a helm of polished brass. Her face has not been seen in living memory. Her voice is a recording. Her sword is a key. The key opens the gate. The gate does not want to be opened.

15.1 Aelinnel (Gnomes) — “Stone, Bough, and Bright Things”

Quick Reference

Tagline: Count the steps, weigh the words, and never trust a single ledger.

Stone Prince of Aelinnel (Elite): “The law here flows like water over stone – it finds its own path, and woe to those who try to dam it with paper and pretense. The earth itself will testify against the unjust.”

Charcoal-burner (Commoner): “Our kilns tell us more than your books ever could. When the smoke curls left, the tide’s with you. When it splits in three, best stay by your own hearth till it burns straight again. And never trust a court that speaks in only one ledger.”

Genre / Mood: Dark faerie tale, moonlit groves, polite iron, and the uncanny weight of a promise.

Starting Location: A tide-shed at dawn, fog curling over anchored barges, gulls crying omens over the river’s black glass. A gnomish reeve offers passage on a sealed barge: “The Green Gate opens at neap tide. What we trade there, the Dolmis will not name.”

Stone, Bough, and Bright Things

Aelinnel homeland of Aevrossa clings to the Dolmis coast beneath the shadow of the Valewood, its halls threaded through granite and hawthorn, its roads counted by antler-posts and moonlit courtesy. Here, promises have weight and silence has meaning. Even steps are safe, odd words are careful, and truths are traded like copper nails – bright, useful, and slightly poisonous in the wrong pocket.

To the north, the Valewood looms; to the south, the downs of Amedell where the Aelaerem keep their red doors. The Green Gate sometimes opens onto halfling barrows – a fact neither people speaks of aloud.

Yet no single crown rules the gnomish lands. Dozens of courts, guilds, and seasonal pacts weave a shifting lattice of loyalty. Some Aelinnel hold fast to ancient fae treaties, speaking in two ledgers and never carrying naked iron; others barter in the Green Market with pragmatic coin, treating courtesy as a bargaining chip; still others vanish into the deep woods, listening to stag-roads and root-galleries where the Wild Hunt sometimes rides. The gnomish heart is divided – and that division is their shield against the fae.

Craft and courtesy govern every traffic between mortal keeps and the courts under the hill. Gnomish stone-singers tune bridges with a hum that keeps the Green Gate at bay; forester-wardens hammer copper where iron would draw unwanted attention. In markets under living roofs, a sentence can be cut to fit a purse, and a memory can be wrapped for travel. Paths sometimes shorten for those who keep good count, and lengthen for those who sneer at patterns. The fae are never rude – but they are never safe.

At a Glance

- Atmosphere: Moonlit groves, polite iron, and the uncanny weight of a promise.
- Key Conflict: What is said versus what is meant; fae courtesy versus mortal bluntness.

- Notable Threats: Glamour fog, iron offence, geas-catch, the Green Gate yawning at the wrong hour.
- Common Rewards: Hazel tokens, tide-path keys, oath-beads, and the Wild Hunt's clemency.

Prominent NPCs of Aelinnel

Names of Aelinnel

Aelinnel names are built from soft vowels (ae, ei, ui, oi) and liquid consonants (l, r, n, m) with occasional sharp endings (-k, -t, -x). Surnames are often taken from a notable grove, a tide-mark, or an ancestor’s defining courtesy. They evoke the sound of water over stone and wind through hawthorn.

First Names (Male)	First Names (Female)	Surnames	Epithets
Caelum	Eilidh	Thornweave	the Green-Wise
Riven	Sable	Tidespeak	Two-Tongue
Tallow	Merrow	Evenstep	the Unseen Guest
Fennel	Briar	Hawthorn	Barrow-Kept
Osprey	Vesper	Silverbough	the Uncounted
Linden	Ash	Foxtail	Ash-Finger

The Three Courts: Aelinnel Alignments

Aelinnel society is not a single crown but a lattice of courts, guilds, and seasonal pacts. Three broad stances shape their dealings with outsiders and with the fae. Most gnomes shift between these postures depending on the season, the tide, and who is asking.

- Thorn–Courteous (Fae–Lean) – These gnomes keep the old pacts with the Lady of Thorns and the Green Knight. They speak in two ledgers, never carry naked iron, and treat every threshold as a negotiation. They are the ones who remind visitors to count their steps and pour no ninth cup. Clocks: COURTESY DEBT [4], HAWTHORN PATIENCE [6].
- Market–Square (Trade–Lean) – These gnomes prioritise the Green Market, the Under-Market, and the flow of quartz, copper, and name-script. They are pragmatic, will use iron if it is gilded, and view fae courtesies as bargaining chips rather than sacred laws. Clocks: TARIFF DISPUTE [4], MARKET DOMINANCE [6].
- Forester–Trusted (Wild–Lean) – These gnomes live among the stag-roads and root-galleries, closer to the stone-singers and the tree-wardens. They speak the old names of tides and groves, and they are the first to notice when the thorn blight spreads or the moonwell stains a name wrong. Clocks: ROOT CALLING [4], WILD HUNT INTEREST [6].

Most Aelinnel characters and settlements fall somewhere between these poles, and the same gnome might wear a different mask when trading at the Green Market than when walking the stag-roads.

Quick use notes

- Draw until all four suits appear: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Treat Diamonds as codified outcomes (charms/passes/host-rights) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo dark fae motifs: antlers in shadow, petals that cut, a tide that breathes, and a shortcut that insists on proper payment.

Additional Features

- Two-Ledger Courtesies: Once per scene, a character who states both what they say and what they mean (in or out of character) may shift Position one step safer on a social roll against a fae or fae-touched being. The GM may demand a small token (a copper coin, a knotted thread) as earnest.
- Copper over Iron: When the party visibly favours copper or brass tools over iron in fae-facing scenes, gain +1 assist die from locals (or avoid a –1 penalty) for acts of courtesy, passage, or petition. Iron is not forbidden – it is simply impolite, and impoliteness is remembered.

- The Unsaid Clause: In any bargain or promise, if the players explicitly leave one term unspoken (but agreed upon by all at the table), the GM may bank 1 SB to introduce a complication later where that omission becomes the hinge of the deal. The fae love what is not said.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Thorned Lady – The Lady of Thorns (fae sovereign). Courtesy is a leash; mercy is a snare.
 - The Green Knight – The Sealed Gate (threshold guardian). Prove your worth, or be turned aside.
 - The Still Count – Mykkiel (divine arithmetician). Every miscount is a sin; every correction is a prayer.
 - The Root-Speaker – Grimmer (wild patron). Stone sings, wood remembers, the grove witnesses.

Courtesies of the Green Gate

- Never bring naked iron past a hawthorn arch unless it is gilded or named. Copper is polite, silver is opinionated, cold iron is an accusation.
- Always return what points the way. Way-cords, antler-posts, chalk. Borrow the path; do not keep it. The fae count what you take.
- Speak debts in the daylight. Promises made under lantern-boughs are heard by leaves as well as by law. The Green Gate listens.
- The ninth cup is never poured. Leave it empty for the uninvited guest. If you pour it, drink it yourself – and hope the guest does not arrive.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Bitter Root: Daughters of the Cord sometimes serve as oath-carvers, binding promises with red thread instead of quartz. A renegade Sister hides in the Root Gallery, trying to untie a cord tied by the Lady of Thorns herself.
- Malachai, the Chained Angel: A silver coin that never spends appears in the moonwell. Take it, and the water will show you a perfect reflection – but the coin will reappear in the well every new moon, each time a little warmer.
- The Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire: Aelinneal psions are called “Proof-Readers”. They hear the weight of hidden clauses and can detect an omission in any bargain by the way the air tastes of copper.
- The Threshold Compendium: The Green Gate is a Class III Procession – the gate itself walks the coast once a season, and those who cross it must answer a riddle about debts or be pulled into the Hollow.
- The Ninth: In any Aelinneal scene, the ninth word spoken in a bargain becomes legally binding – even if the speaker did not intend it. The wise count to eight and then gesture.

Regional Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Gate: Crumble a crust before the Green Gate. Ignore the first Glamour fog penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

- Name to the Stone: Whisper a dead oath-carver’s name into a standing stone. Gain +1 Effect when negotiating with fae this scene, but mark Obligation to the Stone Prince. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby stone-singers or green-market traders.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for stag-road trackers or oath-carvers.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favorable tide.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Green Knight or Lady of Thorns’ herald becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to glamour fog or root-slide.

Region-Specific SB Options (Aelinnel)

- Courtesy & Geas (1–3 SB): A hawthorn arch closes behind you; copper tools glow with fae attention; a polite phrase becomes a binding geas. The fae have noted your manners – or your lack thereof.
- Glamour (1–2 SB): Conversations arrive folded and misaddressed; time drifts unexpectedly; your footfalls no longer match your steps. The Green Gate breathes.
- The Unsaid (1–2 SB): An omission you did not know you made becomes the price of passage. The Lady of Thorns smiles. You do not know why.

Aelinnel – Tidal Bargains

Starting Location: A tide-shed at dawn, fog curling over anchored barges, gulls crying omens over the river’s black glass.

“In Aelinnel lands, the river speaks with many tongues, and each tide demands a name in return.”

In... a tide-shed at dawn, a gnomish reeve offers passage on a sealed barge. “The Green Gate opens at neap tide. What we trade there, the Dolmis will not name.”

Regional Motifs Tide-ledgers, river gods, sealed cargo, name-taboo.

Whispers to Offer “Peek in the crate,” “Speak the hidden name,” “Break quarantine.”

External Clocks Threat: Green Gate Thirst [6]; Community: Dockside Fear [4]; Anchor: Barge Oath [4].

Complications Freshwater turns brackish; the cargo sings; a rival reeve boards with knives.

Anchors at Risk A PC’s river-kin; the barge’s blessing.

Escalation Beat The Gate opens early; the tide runs backwards.

Relief Offer a river-gift; carry a name written in river-mud across the threshold; spend 2 to seal the leak for a scene.

Faction Entanglements

- Stone–Singer Conclave: Sponsor a bridge-chant or way-tuning and bank a Harmonic Favor – spend to shift Position one step safer on any passage across worked stone or living root. Skip their rites and the first crossing this leg gains a free “Lock/Barrier” SB as paths sulk.
- Forester–Wardens: Accept copper-nail protocols to cancel the first Fae Offence SB in a wood scene. Drive iron stakes or break taboo and mark a 4-segment Polite Apology clock you must clear before locals assist you again.

- Green-Market Brokers: Submit an itemised truth (what was said / what was meant) to reduce barter DV by 1 for the scene. Try to haggle on single-ledger terms, and the market tags you with Exact Change Only – all bargains hereafter demand a tithe of memory or name until appeased.
- Oath–Carvers’ Guild: Have a promise set in quartz to gain a Visible Oath token; spend to treat one social test as if aided by a reputable witness. Breaking a quartz-oath spawns a 4-segment Shattered Nuance clock that complicates future negotiations.
- Tide–Reeves: File a tide-plan before neap to earn a Tide Window – ignore one tidal timing penalty this leg. Skipping the ledger adds a free “Wrong Tide” SB the first time you touch the Dolmis.

Cross–Regional Ties & Soft Power

- Way of Silk Interface: Kon"reh-counted caravans that adopt Aelinnel step-metrics (even steps, counted halts) gain +1 die to avoid ambushes on the Way this arc. Breaking count invites a free “Glamour Fog” SB at the next way-shrine.
- Aeler Standards (Rods & Wards): Recognise Aeler measures publicly to reduce dispute DV by 1 with dwarven legates; insist on gnomish dual-ledger and foreign merchants grumble – first mixed-market scene gains an “Assay Doubt” SB.
- Vhasia/Viterra Complications: Vhasian hedge-duties (wood rites) and Viterra tithe-scripts (grain flows) cross your ledgers. When either region is “Stressed,” add +1 DV to Green-Market exports that travel their roads unless you carry a Forest Truce or Tithe Waiver.
- Valewood Fallout: On a Valewood Weather signal, fae proofs spill downslope; counting etiquette cancels the first navigation SB each scene, but any iron shown gains a free “Fae Complaint” SB (even among humans). Aelaerem hospitality rites mitigate this: presenting guest-loaf removes one such complaint per hall.

Trade Goods & Consequences

- Quartz & Proof–Stone: Donate clear quartz to a shrine to bank a Seen Promise – once, treat a murky contract as if properly witnessed. Peddle clouded quartz as “ritual grade” and spawn a roaming Counterfeit Proof inquiry clock.
- Copper Etiquette Kits: Issuing copper over iron in mixed courts grants +1 assist die on petitions; flooding markets with cheap copper pins offends foresters – add a “Copper Resentment” tag that raises DV in wood jurisdictions until you make amends.
- Name–Script & Memory Wraps: Legal export of name-script lowers espionage DV by 1 for allies who carry it. Smuggling wraps risks a Name-Tax – first customs scene converts 1 SB into a compelled disclosure.
- Tide Rights & Barge Seals: Funding barge-seals creates a Waiting Cave – once per arc the cave “waits” an extra beat for your crew. Ignoring seal-maintenance flips it: first Dolmis crossing suffers “Wrong Hour” SB.

Patron Networks (Patterns & Thresholds)

- Sacred Geometry: Chalk a golden-mean spiral at a ford to reroll one failed prediction/trajectory check this leg; doing so in view of fae courts adds a 2-segment Proof Envied clock.

- The Sealed Gate: Hawthorn-gilded door-nails act as single-use stay writs: negate one forced entry or pursuit at a hedge-gate.
- Lunara: Counting under moonlight lets you ask one terse yes/no about a hidden path; on a Miss, secrets spread – mark Exposure +1 in the nearest Green Market.
- The Traveler: Antler-posts double as wayshrines; leave a copper and recite a sequence to finish one travel clock tick for free on forest legs.

Field Procedures (Use At the Table)

- Two-Ledger Talk: When parley stalls, the GM asks: “What was said? What was meant?” If players state both, cancel the first social SB this scene; if they refuse, the next bargain demands collateral (memory/name).
- Count or Be Counted: At any fae-touched crossing, a player who audibly counts in a fitting sequence (steps, heartbeats, breaths) shifts Position one step safer for that crossing. Boasting or mocking numbers adds a free “Geas Catches” SB.
- Copper Courtesy Check: Producing copper/brass tools in a ritual space removes the first Fae Offence tag this scene; drawing iron instead escalates the next Complication by +1 Cap.

Diplomatic Favor & Reputation Echoes

- Hazel Favors (minor resource): Earned by returning way-cords, restoring antler posts, or paying tide-dues. Spend to downgrade a Glamour or Geas complication once per leg.
- Alignment Reputation:
 - Thorn-Courteous: Doors of the hawthorn courts open a step easier; human clerks distrust your clauses (first city office DV +1).
 - Market-Square: Brokers vouch your weights; rival stalls circulate riddled slander – add a trailing Folded Rumor clock.
 - Forester-Trusted: Paths shorten for you once per journey; port inspectors assume concealed copper – first harbor search gains a free “Alarm Raised” SB unless declared up front.

Boss Archetypes in Aelinnel

Court & Courtesy (Fae Sovereigns)

- Lady of Thorns (Etiquette Engine) – Punishes breaches with precise harms, rewards perfect courtesy with literal boons. Win by satisfying three courtesies in sequence (no iron, two-ledger speech, return the waymark).
- Green Knight (Trial by Pattern) – Duel of paths and proofs, not blades. Win by presenting a higher-count route (Fibonacci, even-steps) or yielding a deserved apology at the right number.

Threshold & Hunt (Environment that Judges)

- Moonlit Ride (Wild Hunt) – Three phases: Sounding (horns), Coursing (paths shorten for the bold), Closing the Ring. Win by naming safe-clemency, joining the chase without taking a prey, or blowing the right counter-call (2–3–5).
- Green Gate (Living Crossing) – Demands exact change in truths. Win by paying a memory that fits the posted proof; forcing passage triggers “Roads Rewired.”

Numbers & Glamour (Logical Anomalies)

- Glamour Fog (Layered Illusion) – Each layer dispelled by a correct count, courtesy, or copper rite. Win by completing the Three Proofs: count aloud, return a borrowed path token, trade a said/meant receipt.
- Lost Day (Time Miscount) – The sun misnumbers hours. Win by reconciling two ledgers (what happened / what should have), then ringing a prime-number chime.

Market & Oath (Contract Tricksters)

- Green-Market Broker (Truth Arbitrage) – Buys your meanings, sells your words. Win by catching them in a one-ledger statement or producing an Oath-Bead that chills (misunderstood clause).
- Oath-Carver Gone Wrong (Quartz Tyrant) – Binds towns with over-precise promises. Win by carving a Release Unless into communal quartz at cost of a public truth.

Stone & Memory (Ancestral Hazards)

- Stone-Wight Chorus (Echo Jurors) – Resent footsteps, adore proofs. Win by tapping the dolmen scale that matches the grievance and returning a taken token to the barrow.

Boss Mechanics (Use 2–3 levers)

- Courtesy Track [4]: Each breach (iron bared, skipping greetings, single-ledger lie) ticks it. On fill, boss gains Polite Punishment: escalate DV +1 and impose a Geas.
- Counting Proofs (three steps): Name a pattern, perform it, return a waymark. Completing all three lowers boss tier for one exchange or ends a phase.
- Said/Meant Ledgers: Any bargain scene runs two mini-clocks; if Said fills first, glamour favours the boss; if Meant fills first, PCs gain a Visible Oath token.
- Iron Offence Meter [0–3]: Showing iron, striking hawthorn, or salting impolitely raises it. At 3, fae gain a free “Thorn Blight” SB; reduce by copper rites or gifts.
- Hunt Phases: Sounding (fear checks; pass to gain +1 die to pace), Coursing (paths shorten for counted strides), Closing (only truth-payment or clemency halts the circle).
- Lair Actions (pick two): Fold the Conversation (re-target a statement); Shift the Count (odd ↔ even penalties); Petal Cut (apply 1 Harm unless copper shown); Wrong Tide (swap entry/exit costs at a gate).

Patronage & Power

Among the Aelinnel, power flows through courtesy, oath, and the hidden geometry of the land. A Stone Prince’s authority rests on indexed fae treaties; a Green Knight’s on the trials he has witnessed. There is no single crown, only the shared understanding that a broken promise cuts deeper than a sword.

For the GM: Power in Aelinnel society is measured in hazel tokens, oath-beads, and the precision of a courtesy. Patronage often takes the form of guest-boughs, tide-path keys, or the Green Knight’s escort – each tied to a specific court, grove, or debt. To emphasise the cultural mechanics:

- Use Two-Ledger Courtesy to reward players who pay attention to the unspoken.

- Enforce Copper over Iron – carrying iron is not forbidden, but it is a statement.
- Let The Unsaid Clause be a source of future complications; the fae love what is not said.
- Track Obligation to the Green Gate as a persistent clock. Each crossing without proper payment ticks it toward a visit from the Huntsman.

In Aelinnel society, the stone remembers every step – and the Green Gate forgets no debt.

Chapter 16

Aelaerem

Hearth & Hollow.

A proper harvest feast requires three things: the finest cider aged in the right barrel, a guest-loaf baked with intention, and the wisdom to know when to invite the quiet ones to sit by the fire.

I am a Miller. My geese know a stranger's step from a mile off, and they've never been wrong. One is named "Stranger." It has never been wrong.

The halfling downs aren't just a place where they keep the Hollow at bay—they're a marketplace for fear, and oh, how the Aelaerem love a good bargain on safety. They use red threads and offerings not out of piety, but because they know the Hollow's attention is a commodity—and they'll pay dearly to avoid it.

A red door means bread, salt, and one safe night if you come honest. A cup-mark stone on the verge accepts butter as a prayer. The watch-geese know your step before you do, and the scarecrow turns to face the road when the Hollow is hungry. The Neighbors—the things under the barrows—are not enemies. They are neighbours. And neighbours, if treated politely, will stay on their side of the hedge.

Never refuse an offered cup. The Hollow counts refusals as invitations. Pour the ninth cup for the empty chair, and you may feed it—or feed it.

— Bram, Miller of the Watch-Geese, who has never been surprised

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Porridge with honey and a pinch of salt—the salt is for the Hollow. Every Aelaerem household leaves a pinch on the threshold each morning. The Hollow does not eat. The Hollow counts. The salt is an offering. The offering is a reminder. What does a child learn before they can walk? To tie a red thread. Aelaerem children are given a length of red wool at birth. By age three, they can tie the eight hearth-knots: welcome, farewell, protection, memory, warning, promise, apology, and the ninth—the one that is never tied. The ninth knot is for the Hollow. The Hollow does not tie knots. The Hollow waits for you to tie them yourself.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their shadow. Aelaerem shadows are long and thin, even at noon. A stranger whose shadow is short has been touched by the Neighbors. A stranger whose shadow is wrong—too many limbs, too few—is a Neighbor. Do not invite them in. Do not refuse them bread. The law is clear: feed them, but do not ask their name.

What is the most common crime? Offering the ninth cup—but the ninth cup is not a crime, it is a negotiation. The pourer offers a drink to the empty chair. The Hollow may accept. If it does, the house is blessed for a year. If it does not, the house is marked. The mark is a red thread tied to the door. The thread is never removed. The house is never sold.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Apple-Matron is a title, not a person. The Matron is the oldest woman in the village. When she dies, the second-oldest takes her place. The Matron's memory is the village's memory. The Matron forgets nothing. The Matron's memory is fading. The village is forgetting. The forgetting is the Hollow's doing.

Where do people go when they die? To the barrows—the low, green mounds that dot the downs. The dead are buried in family plots, marked with cup-stones. The cup-stones are filled with rainwater. The rainwater is changed weekly. The water is for the dead. The dead are not thirsty. The dead are counting.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You leave a red thread on the wronged party's doorstep. The thread must be tied in a specific knot—the knot of apology, which is also the knot of debt. The wronged party may accept the thread or cut it. If they accept, the debt is recorded. If they cut it, the debt is unpaid. The unpaid debt grows. The growing debt attracts the Hollow.

What is the most important festival? The Harvest Home (autumn). The last sheaf of grain is tied with red thread and left in the field. The Hollow takes it. The Hollow does not take anything else. The Hollow is patient. The Hollow will wait for the ninth cup.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Pale Shepherd is not a shepherd. It is a title held by the Hollow itself. The Shepherd appears as a figure in grey robes. Its face is a mask of bone. Its voice is a recording of the last words of the person who saw it last. That person is always dead. The recording is always accurate.

16.1 Aelaerem (Halflings) — “Hearth & Hollow”

Apple-Matron (Elite): “A proper harvest feast requires three things: the finest cider aged in the right barrel, a guest-loaf baked with intention, and the wisdom to know when to invite the quiet ones to sit by the fire.”

Miller (Commoner): “My geese know a stranger’s step from a mile off, and they’ve never been wrong. If they start honking at noon, you best check your larder – someone’s coming who wasn’t invited. And when the Hollow walks, the only safe place is a lit hearth with the ninth cup unpoured.”

Theme & Atmosphere

In Amedell, the Aelaerem keep their bonds with bread, bells, and careful counting. Lanes run under ash and hawthorn; doors reddened with thread promise a seat and a story to any who step right. Their magic is housekeeping writ large – thresholds groomed, names jarred like jam, the Hollow fed with silence and the ninth cup left unpoured. When the Neighbors stir beneath the barrows, the folk answer with kettle songs and lantern law, and the fields behave because someone asked them to. Hospitality here is not kindness—it is a covenant. Every meal is a promise, every gift a thread, every candle an argument against the dark. Amedell lies south of the Aelinnel homeland of Aevrossa, separated by the rolling downs and the slow waters of the River Adder. The two small-folk peoples share trade in red thread, copper, and seasonal hospitality, though the Aelaerem keep a wary distance from the fae-touched gnomish courts. It lies on the southeastern coast of the Dolmis, although the Aelaerem are rarely out to sea beyond coastal fishing.

What you notice first: The smell of baking bread and old apples. The way every threshold has a red thread tied at eye level. The silence of children when a stranger passes the village stone.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never refuse an offered cup. The Hollow counts refusals as invitations. Pour the ninth cup for the empty chair, and you may feed it—or feed it.

Regional Mood: Warm Hearths, Cold Thresholds

Here, the land is not wilderness—it is a living weave of favors and omissions. The Aelaerem do not build walls; they build hedges, stiles, and the careful geometry of guest-right. A red door means bread, salt, and one safe night if you come honest. A cup-mark stone on the verge accepts butter as a prayer. The watch-geese know your step before you do, and the scarecrow turns to face the road when the Hollow is hungry. The Neighbors—the things that live under the barrows, in the uncounted ninth step, in the space between the candle and its shadow—are not enemies. They are neighbors. And neighbors, if treated politely, will stay on their side of the hedge.

Starting Location: A cider-press barn perfumed with crushed apples and rain, where masks hang from beams awaiting the next festival. The Apple-Matron sits on a stool of woven twigs. Behind her, a Moot Oak leaf bleeding red sap onto a stone. “The Hollow walks early this year,” she says. “The Moot Oak bleeds wine. Will you speak for the field, or let the Neighbors claim it? Speak true—the geese are listening.”

 The lamps stay lit along your path despite wind.
The writ is a bell. Ring it, and the lamps will not flicker—until dawn.
8. Mummers' License [MASQUERADE] [ONCE]
 Lawful mask and after-dark crossing for a feast day.
The license is a wooden mask. Wear it, and the Hollow will see a stranger—not a guest.
9. Orchard Right [SECRET] [ONCE]
 Pick at Mother's Orchard without offense; the fruit hides a truth.
The fruit is a secret. Bite it, and the secret will become yours—or it will become you.
10. Mill Token [UTILITY] [ONGOING]
 The wheel turns at any hour, grain or rumor ground.
The token is a millstone chip. Feed it to the wheel, and it will grind anything—truths included.
- J Apple-Matron's Blessing [PROTECTION] [ONCE]
 Hands help unseen when you ask no coin.
The blessing is a cup. Pour it out in trouble, and the fields will send rain—or roots.
- Q Private Moot Under the Oak [JUSTICE] [ONCE]
 Elders hear you alone; precedent sticks.
The moot is held at midnight. The oak's roots are the jury.
- K Thresher-King's Guard [ESCORT] [FEAR]
 Six red-hooded harvesters escort you; doors open.
Their hoods are the color of dried blood. They do not speak.

A Pale Shepherd’s Clause

[IMMUNITY] [ONCE]

Once, the Hollow will not notice you; pass uncounted.

The clause is a silence. The Hollow will step aside—and will remember that it did.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (blessings/tokens/host-rights) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo Hearth & Hollow motifs—quiet bells, red thread, watch-geese, footsteps under the soil—so the dread feels woven through the hedges.

Additional Features

- Bread & Lantern: Presenting a guest-loaf and a lit lantern at a threshold shifts your next social action one step safer while you remain a guest of that hearth. The lantern must be lit from the host’s fire.
- Neighorly Courtesies: When you keep local taboos (count “eight-and-one,” turn village stones inward, leave butter at cup-marks), cancel the first SB generated by rites or negotiations in that scene.
- Listen at the Stile: A quiet pause at a stile, barrow, or hedge-tunnel yields a true omen—ask one short question about what the Hollow wants here and now; the answer arrives as a sign, a sound, or a small animal.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Sealed Gate: Some Aelaerem thresholds are marked with a nail from the Sealed Gate’s original shrines. A door with such a nail can be barred against any spirit for one night—but the nail must be removed before dawn, or the door will never open again.
- The Savage Heart: In the deepest hollows, the Hollow is said to wear a bear’s shape during the winter famine. Hedge-keepers leave raw meat at the boundary, not as an offering but as a treaty: “Eat this, not our children.”
- The Traveler: Lantern-wardens sometimes find a grey pilgrim waiting at a stile at dusk. The pilgrim asks for directions to a village that no longer exists. Those who answer truthfully find that the next road they walk is half as long.
- The Clockwork Monad: Aeler engineers tried to map the hedge-tunnel lanes using breath-bonds and brass chains. The surveyors reported that the lanes would not hold still. The maps were burned. The Aelaerem still smile when asked about it.
- Ikasha, She Who Sleeps: The Hollow is sometimes called Ikasha’s shadow—the part of her that did not fall asleep. Aelaerem children are taught never to whisper the name of the dreamer before bed, lest the Hollow mistake them for a messenger.
- The Ninth: On the ninth night of a feast, the empty chair is left for the Hollow. If a guest sits in it, the Hollow will take their place at the table. The feast will continue, but the guest will never be full again.

Aelaerem Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Barrow: Crumble a crust at a cup-mark stone. Ignore the first Hive-Swarm penalty.
- Knot the Ribbon: Tie a single knot in a red thread at a threshold. Cancel Out-of-Season Mummung or take -1 die on your next festival roll (your choice).
- Name to the Hollow: Whisper a dead person's name into an empty chair. Gain +1 Effect when invoking guest-right this scene, but mark Obligation to the Pale Shepherd.

Hearth Magic

The Aelaerem weave their power through careful observance and small courtesies. Their magic lies not in grand gestures but in the precise attention to thresholds, seasons, and the proper ordering of things. Red thread binds more than wounds—it ties names to places, promises to people, and the living to the Hollow that walks beneath their feet. To offend a hedge-witch is to invite the Neighbors' attention; to earn an elder's blessing is to walk with the earth's favor.

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from wardens or hedge-keepers.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby watch-geese or mummers.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for trackers or the Hollow.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favorable light.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Orchard reeve or lantern-warden becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to fog or threshold shift.
- Foe Appears: A scarecrow or Hollow spirit arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional wold-wardens, mummers, or Neighbors arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.
- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes - taboo broken/geese turn/Hollow stirs.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: Apple-Matron, Thresher-King, or Pale Shepherd intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically - fog thickens/barrow opens/Hollow walks.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice - omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Aelaerem (Hearth & Hollow): Quiet bells toll for no reason; red thread appears tied to your belongings; watch-geese honk warnings in the night.
- Aelaerem (Threshold Magic): A door you passed through earlier now leads somewhere else; your shadow walks behind you instead of beside you.
- Aelaerem (Folk Customs): You forget a crucial local taboo and offend the Neighbors; small things begin to go wrong—milk sours, knots loosen, a child points at the empty chair.

Boss Archetypes in Aelaerem

- The Scarecrow Regent (Omen/Threshold) — A hedge-raised guardian wearing twelve charms and one wrong knot. Phases: Stare of the Lane → Scare the Crows → Harvest of Faces. Cracks: a Guest-Loaf offered to its post; a Mummers’ License to wear a mask it cannot read.
- The Hollow Bride (Otherworld/Hospitality) — A Neighbor wearing a borrowed name and wedding veil. Phases: Invitation Drifted → Feast of Shadows → Ninth Cup Poured. Cracks: a Shepherd’s Whistle to call the dogs that guard the threshold; a Lantern-Writ to see her true face.
- Lantern Bailiff of the Moot (Justice/Order) — Enforcer of hedge-law with warrant-nails and bell-keys. Phases: Lantern Law → Midnight Moot → Binding Geas. Cracks: a Cider-Mark to buy a night’s silence; a Moot Oak bench to appeal his ruling.
- Beekeeper of Winter Church (Sacred/Whisper) — Keeper of cold honey and sleeping hymns. Phases: Swarm Omen → Waxed Vow → Memory Tithe. Cracks: a Bee-Queen Share to call her swarm to heel; a Lantern lit from a winter church candle.

Faction Entanglements

- Wold-Wardens: Honor hedge-law (count stiles, turn stones inward) or suffer +1 SB on each night march; bringing steel disputes to the Moot Oak reduces the next travel DV by 1.
- Mummers’ Companies: Travel under mask grants advantage crossing parochial borders; anger them (perform out of season) and village gates close at dusk (Position –).
- Lantern-Wardens: Donate oil or HEAL lamps to earn an escort marker; ignore a lit-lane and pay a “darkness toll” (first Stealth/Scout roll each night suffers –1 die).
- Apple-Matron Circles: Feast-days open barns and purses; snub an invitation and local prices double until amends are made.

- Neighbors (quiet powers): Leave butter at cup-marks to cancel the first supernatural SB this leg; break taboo and the Hollow stirs (add a Hollow Attention tick).

Cross-Regional Ties

- Aeler Soft-Power: Red-thread guest-right and courtesies are fashionable among Aeler houses; reputation for keeping hearth-law grants +1 die to parley with Aeler stewards and toll-clerks.
- Kahfagian Sea-Lanes: Beeswax, cider-brandy, and wool ride river-to-coast. Storm seasons push Kahfagian factors inland—good silver, stricter contracts.
- Way of Silk Spurs: Caravans detour across the downs for night-safe lanes under lantern law; counterfeit guest-loaf tokens discovered here echo as distrust along Silk waystations (Social DV +1 until cleared).
- Valewood Fallout (North): Moon-sap and dream pollen drift on certain winds: chalk mazes misalign, barrow-whispers grow bold. When Valewood Weather is in effect, the first night omen is always true (good or ill).

Encounter Seeds (Quick Hooks)

- The Hollow Bride's Invitation: A wedding invitation arrives at the inn. The bride is not from any village on the map. The groom has not been seen in a week. The ninth chair at the feast is already occupied.
- The Scarecrow's Harvest: Crows are building a nest on the scarecrow's shoulder. Inside the nest is a key. The key opens a door that should not exist.
- The Beekeeper's Tithe: The winter church's bees have stopped producing honey. They are producing wax effigies of the PCs. The beekeeper wants to know why.

Chapter 17

The Valewood

Empire Under Leaves.

The forest here remembers empires that crumbled to dust, and its laws are older than your kingdoms. To walk these paths is to enter into covenant with powers that measure time in seasons, not years.

I am a Pathweaver. My cord has eight knots. The ninth is the one she never ties.

The Valewood isn't just ancient—it's a graveyard of empires, and oh, how the Lethai-ar ghosts love a good deal on forgotten magic. They don't just rule as echoes; they trade in them. The air hums with half-remembered songs, and the ruins bleed their mysteries into root and stream. Fae courts linger in clearings that shift with moonlight, beast-kin patrol moss-choked cairns, and echoes of imperial shades still march patrols on vanished streets.

The Hazel Queen speaks only in conditional tense. The Alder King's crown is a noose of thorns. The Huntsman's face is a stag's skull, and his voice is the wind in the leaves. The forest does not forgive arrogance. It expects humility, patience, and the willingness to trade a piece of yourself for safe passage.

Never eat the fruit of a tree that has a face. The forest does not forget its debtors, and the first bite is always the price of admission. The second bite is the interest.

— Pathweaver Sila, who knows every star-road but will not speak their names

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Acorn bread and wild honey—the acorns are leached in stream-water for three days, the honey is taken from hives in the high branches. The bees are sacred. The bees are not to be harmed. A beekeeper who harms a bee is cursed. The curse is the stinging. The stinging is endless.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To name the trees. Valewood children are taught the names of the eight sacred groves: Hazel, Alder, Oak, Rowan, Ash, Thorn, Yew, and the ninth—the one that has no name. The ninth grove is where the Hollow sleeps. The Hollow is not to be woken.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their way-cord. Every Valewood traveler carries a knotted cord—one knot for each mile they have walked. A stranger whose cord has nine knots has walked the forbidden path. A stranger whose cord is knotted with red thread is a Pathweaver. A stranger with no cord has no way. The forest will find them. The forest will lead them in circles until they forget why they came.

What is the most common crime? Breaking the star-road—but the star-roads are not roads, they are agreements. A traveler who strays from the path is a traveler who breaks the covenant. The covenant is older than the Valewood. The covenant was made between the first trees and the first stars. The stars do not forgive. The trees do not forget.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Hazel Queen is not the queen. She is the voice of the forest—a title that passes from dryad to dryad with each turning of the season. The current Queen has held the title for three centuries. She is not a dryad. She is a ghost—the last survivor of the empire that fell beneath the leaves. She remembers the cities. She remembers the stones. She remembers the names of the dead. The dead do not remember her.

Where do people go when they die? To the star-roads—the paths that lead between the trees and between the worlds. The dead are not buried. They are laid on stone altars at the edges of the groves. The stars pull them upward. The trees pull them downward. The dead choose. The dead always choose the trees. The trees remember.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a name—your own or another's. The forest accepts the name. The forest weaves it into the bark of the oldest oak. The oak is called the Witness. The Witness has stood for nine thousand years. The Witness has never forgotten a single name. The Witness will not forget yours.

What is the most important festival? The Turning of the Leaves (autumn). The trees shed their colours in a single day. The leaves carpet the forest floor. The leaves are gathered and burned in the high clearings. The smoke carries the year's debts to the stars. The stars answer with light. The light is forgiveness. The light is also a warning.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Alder King is not a king. He is the forest's warden—a title passed from fallen empire to fallen empire. The current King is a Lethai-ar who was born in the year the last empire fell. He has not aged since. He does not eat. He does not drink. He does not sleep. He walks the star-roads at night. The star-roads are empty. The dead have stopped walking.

17.1 Valewood — “Empire Under Leaves”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The forest remembers. Speak truth, step lightly, and never eat the fruit of a tree with a face.

Hazel Queen (Elite): “The forest here remembers empires that crumbled to dust, and its laws are older than your kingdoms. To walk these paths is to enter into covenant with powers that measure time in seasons, not years.”

Pathweaver (Commoner): “The woods here got a mind of their own – they’ll lead you where you need to go if you ask right, but they’ll just as soon lose you if you’re carrying ill intent. Best know which is which before you wander off the path.”

Genre / Mood: Dark forest, fey remnant, imperial echo, folk horror.

Starting Location: A moss-covered amphitheatre where roots crawl through marble benches and owls whisper verdicts to the wind. An Owl-Sister speaks in riddles: “The Lethai-ar stir. The paths remember your true name. Speak it into the hollow of this stone, or the forest will learn it from your footsteps.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Valewood is older than kingdoms, older than the maps that skirt its borders. Beneath its canopy lie the bones of a Lethai empire whose name is forgotten, its towers swallowed by vine and root, its star-roads cracked and phasing between worlds. The air hums with half-remembered songs of magic, and the ruins bleed their mysteries into root and stream. To walk the Valewood is to risk being claimed by it: as guest, prey, heir—or trespasser. But the empire did not fall to war or plague alone. In their final centuries, the Lethai-thora — the high elf archivists and sorcerers — grew desperate to match the Astroegro Empire’s arcane might. They turned to forbidden arts: flesh-shaping, soul-stitching, and the binding of patterns that should never have been woven. Deep beneath the Amber Ziggurat, in chambers sealed with runes that weep, they built the Genesis Vats. Here, elf and beast were combined, spirit and stone were fused, and the first beast-kin were born — not as servants, but as weapons. The vats still hum. The failures, the half-finished, the screaming ones, were loosed into the forest when the laboratories collapsed. They bred true. They became the monsters that now stalk the star-roads: the redcaps, the thorn-walkers, the things with too many eyes. The empire fell, yes. But something else came through the cracks. A scent of honey and rot. A laugh from a clearing that should not exist. The Lethai-thora sealed the deepest laboratories and burned their records. The few survivors spoke of a “soft place” in the world’s fabric, a realm of endless twilight where the fae had always waited. They carved warnings into stone: Do not open the ninth gate. Do not sing the song that calls them. The gates were sealed. The songs were forgotten. But the forest remembers. And in certain clearings, when the moon is wrong, the air smells of jasmine and grave-soil.

What you notice first: The smell of wet moss and old stone. The way the light filters through leaves like stained glass. The silence that falls when you speak a name too loudly.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never eat the fruit of a tree that has a face. The forest does not forget its debtors, and the first bite is always the price of admission.

Regional Mood: Leaves, Oaths, and Echoes

Here, the past is not past — it phases in and out like moonlight on water. The Lethai-ar who remain are not conquerors but custodians, tending to laws written before the first human kingdom rose. The fae courts of Hazel and Alder play their endless games of courtesy and obligation, and the beast-kin speak in parliaments where every vote is a scent. Imperial shades march through walls that no longer exist, and the star-roads hum with geometries that twist the unwary into yesterday.

But the true horror lies beneath. The Lethai-thora's experiments left scars that never healed. The beast-kin are not a single people — they are the descendants of those who survived the vats, their lineages mixed with wild creatures, their memories fragmented. Some still hear the whispers of the old laboratories, calling them to seek the sealed doors. Others have built a society of scent and scar, their laws a deliberate forgetting of what they once were. The monsters — the true monsters, the ones with no parliament — are the failed experiments: the redcaps, the thorn-walkers, the things that hunger for warmth. They are the empire's unfinished business.

And somewhere, in a place where the trees grow in impossible spirals, the soft place still breathes. The fae courts are its children. They do not speak of what lies beyond the ninth gate. They only smile, and their smiles have too many teeth.

Oath-Magnet Mechanics

When a character makes a promise in the Valewood, the GM creates a Promise Clock [4]. Each time the character acts against that promise (or fails to act in its favour), tick the clock. When it fills, the forest extracts a toll: 1 Fatigue, a lost memory (erase a minor fact or face), or a minor geas (the GM chooses). Breaking a promise intentionally (not through failure) instantly ticks the clock twice.

6. Geas Catch — A careless word triggers a task that names itself; speech as summoning. ‘[OATH]’ You said “if only.” Now the forest has heard you.
7. City Phase — Streets rotate; the exit becomes a balcony; space as puzzle. ‘[DUNGEON]’ The city breathes. You are in its lungs.
8. Name-Theft — Something learns your true name’s edges; the tests begin. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[FEAR]’ First, you forget a minor debt. Then a friend’s face. Then your own.

Name-Theft Mechanics

When Name-Theft occurs, the GM secretly records one piece of the target’s identity (a memory, a bond, a talent name). The target suffers –1 die on any roll that would rely on that piece until it is restored by a quest or a bargain with the thief (often a fae or shade).

9. Ring Claim — A circle names you host; feeding guests becomes law. '[SOCIAL]' '[COMMUNITY]'; The mushrooms are listening. They will remember what you serve.
10. Mirror Rain — Leaf-drips replay choices you didn't make; the past as echo. '[MAGIC]' The rain shows you a path you refused. Now it offers it again—with interest.
- J Redcaps Abroad — Hats wet, boots quick, courtesies thin; violence as hospitality. '[COMBAT]' '[FAE]'; They will ask for a kiss or a coin. Refuse, and they take both. Their boots are stained with the blood of failed experiments.
- Q Court Tithe — Truth, song, or memory you'd miss; the price as sacrifice. '[SOCIAL]' '[OATH]'; The courtier opens its hand. What you place there is never returned.
- K Muster of Boughs — Green banners rise; travel becomes trespass. '[WAR]' '[FEAR]'; The boughs bear old sigils. The war they remember ended a thousand years ago.
- A Empire Wakes — A district aligns; doors open, guardians open farther. '[APOCALYPSE]'; The shades have orders. You are the target. Beneath the city, a vat cracks.

(Charm/Key/Truce-Bough) Way-cord knot points to the true next turn; dew-mirror shows a thing as it is, not as it is sung.

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Way-Cord — A knot points to the true next turn (once); navigation as a gift. '[TRAVEL]'; The knot is a breath tied in silk. Untie it to find your way—or to lose it forever.
3. Dew-Mirror — See a thing as it is, not as it is sung, for one scene; truth as a tool. '[TRUTH]'; The mirror is a drop of water on a leaf. It dries when the lie dies.
4. Hazel Token — Lawful crossing of a warded hedge without snag; permission as paper. '[TRAVEL]'; The token is a hazelnut. Crack it open; the kernel is your password.
5. Honey-Right — Eat and speak safely at any bee-stone ring; hospitality as law. '[SOCIAL]'; The honey is golden. Taste it, and the bees will know you as a guest—once.
6. Name-Bead — A kept promise warms; a broken one chills and glows; an oath as a magic item. '[OATH]'; The bead is warm in your palm. If it cools, you have forgotten someone.
7. Wind-Veil — Mute a sweet wind's lies for a short walk; truth as protection. '[WEATHER]'; The veil is a scrap of silk. Breathe through it, and the wind cannot speak.
8. City-Shard — Wake one gate or stair in a phasing ruin; a key as a catalyst. '[MAGIC]'; The shard is a piece of a star-road. Hold it to the lock, and the ruin answers.
9. Truce-Bough — Hunt, cut, or camp without offense in a named copse; peace as a branch. '[SOCIAL]'; The bough is green. Plant it in the ground, and the forest will not harm you—or help you.
10. Oathsap — Seal a pact that even echoes respect; a promise as a binding force. '[OATH]'; The sap is warm. Drink it, and your words become stone—for good or ill.
- J Shardwright's Favor — Repair or light a length of star-road; craft as power. '[CRAFT]'; The favor is a chip of amber. The Shardwright will come when you break it.
- Q Hazel Audience — One whisper exits as policy; word as law. '[AUTHORITY]'; The audience is a leaf. Speak into its spine, and the Hazel Queen will listen—once.
- K Alder Writ — Levies defer, wardens guide, scribes stop arguing; authority as writ. '[AUTHORITY]'; The writ is a thorn. Carry it in your boot, and the Alder King's debtors will make way.

A Valeheart Clause — A temporary exception to any local rule, spoken in leaves. ‘[LEGEND]’
The clause is a rustle. The forest will pretend it didn’t hear—but it will remember.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (charms/keys/passess) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- Empire Echo: when a J/Q/K is the highest rank in your seed, add one visible relic-logic (floating stairs, singing locks, patrol shades).
- If any A appears, echo leaf and light motifs—paths that remember, leaves that whisper, light that moves like water.

Additional Features

- Forest Claims: Any oath, bargain, or gift exchanged binds with more weight. Once per session, a spoken promise becomes magically enforceable: breaking it creates 1d4 SB and echoes through scenes.
- Ruins Awaken: If you linger at an ancient site, roll or draw to see which mechanism stirs. May grant guidance (lit star-road, a memory shown) or danger (patrol shades, collapsing glyphs).
- Court Interference: Encounters with fae or beast-kin are never neutral. Once per session, the GM may convert a Diamond into a demand for hospitality, tribute, or alliance—shifting the expedition’s tone.
- Genesis Vats Aftermath: Any scene set in the deep ruins (Amber Ziggurat, Breathing City lower levels) has a chance to trigger a Vat Leak complication. Roll 1d6; on a 1–2, a failed experiment emerges (a redcap, a thorn-walker, or a patchwork horror). On a 3–4, a ghost of a Lethai-thora archivist appears and offers a bargain. On a 5–6, the party finds a sealed door. The door is warm.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Unseen Court — The Witness. A parliament of silent roots that remembers every broken promise.
 - The Root-King — The Alder King (local aspect). Debt that grows like a vine, choked by its own leaves.
 - The Star-Weaver — The Ninth. The missing thread in every star-road, the silence after the song.
 - The Green Saint — Oath of Flame & Light (syncretic). A martyr who fed her own name to the Hollow to seal a breach.
 - The Vat-Keeper — The Clockwork Monad (apocalyptic aspect). The pressure to perfect, to optimise, to finish the work.

Forest Mood (d6 per scene)

Forest Mood Table

1. Hazel's Favour – Paths open willingly. +1 die to navigation rolls this scene.
2. Alder's Hunger – Debts are called. Someone in the scene must offer a memory or service to proceed.
3. Empire Wakes – A patrol of imperial shades marches through. Avoid or pay a toll (1 Fatigue or a secret).
4. Beast-kin Moot – Animals gather and watch. They will not attack unless provoked, but they remember faces.
5. Sweet Wind – All navigation rolls suffer –1 die; landmarks shift subtly.
6. Green Gate Breath – A threshold appears. Crossing it leads to a different part of the forest (or a different time). The air smells of jasmine and rot.

Star-Road Discovery (d6)

When the party encounters a star-road shard or attempts to wake a segment, roll on this table for an additional feature:

1. Singing Stones – The flagstones hum a tune. Anyone who sings along gains +1 die on the next roll.
2. Echo of an Emperor – A ghostly figure appears and asks a riddle. A correct answer grants a City-Shard.
3. Fractured Timeline – The road shows a glimpse of the future (1d6 scenes ahead). The GM must answer one yes/no question truthfully.
4. Ward-Trap – The segment is booby-trapped. Trigger a Ward-Trap complication (see Clubs).
5. Shardwright's Cache – Hidden nearby is a Shardwright's Favor (Diamond) or a rare component (e.g., amber shard).
6. The Ninth Step – The sequence has a hidden ninth stone. Stepping on it teleports the party to a Valeheart Spire or a court audience. The air tastes of honey.

Beast-kin Traits (for NPCs or PC ancestry)

Beast-kin are not a single species but a loose alliance of animal-aspected beings — the descendants of the Genesis Vats. Use these traits for quick NPCs or optional player characters.

Beast-kin Traits

- Scent Memory: +1 die to track a creature you have smelled before.
- Parliament Oath: Once per session, you may invoke the beast-kin moot to ask a local animal one simple question (the GM answers truthfully).
- Claw or Fang: Unarmed strikes deal Harm 1 and count as Light weapons.
- Vat Legacy: You have a fragment of a forgotten memory — a laboratory, a screaming face, a promise of perfection. Once per session, you may roll Spirit + Lore (DV 3) to recall a clue about a ruin or a monster's weakness. On a failure, the memory causes you 1 Fatigue.

- Optional: Choose a lineage:

- Stag: +1 die to resist being moved or knocked prone.
- Lynx: +1 die to stealth in forest terrain.
- Badger: You may burrow through loose earth at half speed.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Genesis Vats (The Clockwork Monad): Deep beneath the Amber Ziggurat lie the empire’s failed laboratories. Here, the Lethai ancients combined elf and beast, hoping to create the perfect guardian — to match the Astroegro’s engines of war. The vats still hum, and the beast-kin who survived do not speak of what they saw. The Shardwrights say the Monad’s pressure is still optimising the old designs, and that one day the vats will open again. When they do, the soft place will breathe deeper.
- The Parliament of Claw and Fur (The Savage Heart): The beast-kin are not savages. They hold a moot once every season, deep in a clearing that no star-road touches. Their laws are carved in scent and scar, and their judgments are final. The Savage Heart speaks through their eldest, but it does not command—it suggests. Outsiders who attend the moot must bring a true name of a foe and leave it on the speaking stone. Those who lie are given fur and four legs, and are hunted at the next moon. The beast-kin do not speak of the vats. The Savage Heart remembers.
- Saint Oren of the Unfinished Star (The Ninth): A Lethai-ar astronomer who calculated the exact angle at which the empire’s star-roads would collapse. He was erased from the imperial records, but his ghost still walks the Ivory Observatory, tracing equations in starlight. Those who find him may ask one question about the forest’s hidden geometry. The answer is always a single number, and that number is a debt. He was trying to close the door. He failed.
- The Grey Pilgrims (The Traveler): A wandering order of Lethai-ar who maintain the old way-cords. They wear grey cloaks woven from mist and speak only in riddles. It is said that if you give a Grey Pilgrim a lock of your hair, they will knot it into your way-cord, and you will never be lost in the Valewood again—but you will also never find a place you truly wish to leave. They know the location of the sealed doors. They will not speak of it.
- The Daughters of the Cord (The Bitter Root): A renegade Sister hides among the moss-scribes of the Rooted Amphitheatre, trying to untie her own cord from the Hazel Queen’s ledger. She claims the queen’s hospitality is a cage, and that the forest’s memory is a trap. The Hazel Queen has not corrected her; she only smiles, and the roots grow tighter each night. The Sister whispers that the queen came through the door. No one knows if she means the door to the vats or the other door.
- The Ninth: In any Valewood scene, the ninth leaf to fall from a tree will land pointing to a hidden threshold. The wise catch it—or pretend they didn’t see. Those who follow the leaf’s direction find a place that was not there a moment ago, and something old waits inside. The threshold may lead to a sealed laboratory, a fae court, or a clearing where the air smells of jasmine. It is always warm.

Valewood Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Roots: Crumble a crust at the base of a standing stone. Ignore the first Sweet Wind penalty. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Knot the Cord: Tie a single knot in a way-cord. Cancel Oath-Magnet or take -1 die on your next promise (your choice). '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Name to the Cistern: Whisper a dead enemy's name into the Moon-Cistern. Gain +1 Effect when evading fae this scene, but mark Obligation to the Alder King. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Honey to the Threshold: Leave a drop of honey on a doorframe that should not exist. The door will not open for you, but it will not open behind you either. '[SUPERSTITION]'

Patronage & Power

In the Valewood, power flows through ancient magic, forgotten oaths, and the delicate balance between guest and host. The Lethai-ar maintain influence through their knowledge of paths and ruins, while the fae courts wield power through hospitality and geas. Beast-kin serve as guardians of the deeper mysteries, and the echoes of the empire still patrol their eternal rounds, enforcing laws written in starlight and stone.

But beneath it all, the sealed doors wait. The fae courts are not the masters of the forest — they are its children, born from the soft place that pressed through when the empire's experiments tore the fabric. The Lethai-thora who survived burned their records and sealed their guilt in vaults of amber and iron. The beast-kin carry the memory in their bones. The monsters are the ones who remember too clearly.

For the GM: Patronage in the Valewood revolves around hospitality, knowledge, and the careful navigation of ancient laws. Rewards often take the form of charms, keys, or safe passage that can be leveraged into greater influence. To emphasise the hidden horror:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (tokens, mirrors, cords) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided — and that may carry a whiff of the vats.
- Let rival courts issue conflicting protections, forcing players to choose whose favour matters more — and which sealed door they are willing to approach.
- Use the ruins, groves, and star-roads as arenas for social contests, where knowledge of ancient customs determines success — and where a misstep may lead to a place that was sealed for a reason.
- Introduce the Genesis Vats Aftermath as a recurring tension. The deeper the party goes, the more they risk waking something that should sleep.

In the Valewood, your word is your world, and your world determines whether you walk as a guest or a ghost. But the ghosts are not the only things that walk. Something came through the door. It is still here.

Part IV

The Southern Realms (Akilan)

“The ledger does not forgive arithmetic errors. A single miscounted bushel can unmake a house, a tribe, an empire. I am not here to be kind. I am here to be correct. But even the Widow’s ink runs when the monsoon weeps.” — Dusana of the Raven Road, at the weigh-house of Mbaro

Chapter 18

Oshiira

The Ledger Empire.

The ledger does not forgive arithmetic errors. A single miscounted bushel can unmake a house, a tribe, an empire. I am not here to be kind. I am here to be correct.

I am a Grain Inspector. My stamp leaves a mark that glows under moonlight. I know.

Oshiira is a confederacy of hundreds of tribes and city-states, united by the Grain Ledger. The capital, Mbaro, is a city of canals, weigh-houses, and the great Granary Tower. Oshiira is the breadbasket of the Amaranthine; its millet and sorghum fill the holds of Ecktorian, Vhasian, and Silkstrand ships. The empire operates through a bureaucracy as complex as any in the north—weighing-houses, canal-mothers, and ledgers that track every grain shipment with mathematical precision. But here's the secret the Widow doesn't want you to know: the Ledger has a page that has been torn out. That page named the true heir. No one knows where it is. Everyone is looking.

The Vermilion Corps audits not only grain but also loyalty. The Narrow Captains provoke Kahfagia just to remind the Admiralty who really controls the straits. And the Widow—the empress who has held the confederacy together for centuries—is dying. Paranoia is slowly replacing wisdom. Her four children circle the throne like vultures. The Vermilion Corps maintains order, but no one knows which heir the Corps truly serves. Not even the Corps itself.

Never speak of succession before naming the Widow. The empress's health is a state secret, and the Vermilion Corps has ears in every weigh-house. Speak carelessly, and your name may be the next one erased from the Ledger.

— Vermilion Corps Auditor, who counts her own breaths to ensure she is not lying

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Millet porridge with dried fish—the millet is grown in the flood plains of the Sahel, the fish is smoked over canal-barges. The porridge is always the same. The fish varies by season. The seasons are measured by the height of the river. The river is the Widow's blood. The Widow's blood is low.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To weigh a grain. Oshiira children are given a balance scale and a single grain of millet. By age five, they can tell you the weight difference between a grain harvested in the northern Sahel and a grain harvested in the southern riverlands. The difference is the tax. The tax feeds the empire. The empire is hungry.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their hands. Oshiira merchants have ink-stained fingers—the ink is from the Ledger. A stranger whose fingers are clean has never signed a contract. A stranger whose fingers are stained black has signed too many. A stranger whose fingers are stained red has signed a death warrant. The red ink is not ink. The red ink is blood.

What is the most common crime? Ledger fraud—but ledger fraud is not a crime, it is a career. The Vermilion Corps audits the auditors. The auditors audit the clerks. The clerks audit the merchants. The merchants audit the farmers. The farmers audit the land. The land does not lie. The land does not need to.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Widow has not been seen in public for seven years. Her voice is a recording. Her seal is a stamp. Her decrees are written by the Vermilion Corps. The Corps signs in her name. The Corps speaks in her voice. The Corps is the Widow. The Widow is dead. The empire continues.

Where do people go when they die? To the Granary Tower—the great stone silo at the centre of Mbaro. The dead are not buried. They are ground into meal and mixed with the millet. The grain is shipped across the Amaranthine. The dead feed the empire. The empire does not know. The empire does not ask.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You submit a correction to the Ledger. The correction must be witnessed by a Vermilion Corps auditor. The auditor stamps the correction with their seal. The seal glows under moonlight. The moonlight is the Widow's eye. The Widow sees everything. The Widow forgives nothing.

What is the most important festival? The Harvest of the Ledger (autumn). The Ledger is opened in the great square. The names of the year's debtors are read aloud. The debtors are given until dawn to pay. The debtors who cannot pay are added to the Ledger's ninth page. The ninth page is sealed with wax. The wax is black. The black is mourning.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Ledger's missing page is not missing. It was burned by the Widow herself, in the year the last heir died. The page's ash was mixed into the mortar of the Granary Tower. The ash still glows under moonlight. The glow spells the heir's name. The name is the Widow's own. The Widow killed her child. The empire does not know. The empire would not care.

18.1 Oshiira — “The Grain Covenant”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The harvest does not forgive waste. The granary does not forget hunger. We do not rule — we feed.

Vermilion Corps Warden (Elite): “The granary does not forgive arithmetic errors. A single miscounted bushel can unmake a house, a tribe, an empire. I am not here to be kind. I am here to be correct.”

Canal Mother (Commoner): “Water is memory. Every canal remembers the hands that dug it, the barges that passed, the widows who wept at its edge. Control the water, and you control what the empire remembers. The Vermilion Corps guards the grain. We guard the thirst.”

Genre / Mood: Sahelian logistics, grain-house community, the weight of survival.

Starting Location: A grain-loading pier on the Shoreless Bay, where Oshiiran millet is being loaded onto Ecktorian barges. The air smells of chaff and shared purpose. A Narrow Captain with a scarred throat approaches, her hand resting on a ledger wrapped in oilcloth. “Kahfagian freebooters were sighted at dawn. The Widow wants deniable assets. Congratulations — you’re now deniable. Find out who’s leaking our sailing schedules before the next shipment sails. Or don’t. I’m sure the canals will remember you fondly.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Oshiira is a confederacy of hundreds of tribes and city-states, united by hunger. Not famine — control. The Grain Covenant is not a book of debts. It is a promise: contribute to the granaries, and you will never starve. The capital, Mbaro, is a city of canals, weigh-houses, and the great Granary Tower — a stone spine that casts a shadow over every table from the Shoreless Bay to the Red Desert’s edge. Oshiira is the breadbasket of the Amaranthine; its millet fills the holds of Ecktorian, Vhasian, and Silkstrand ships. But the breadbasket has a lock. The Widow holds the key.

For centuries, the Widow — the empress of Oshiira — has held the confederacy together through marriage alliances, grain quotas, and the careful, communal distribution of water rights. But age is catching up. Memory is fading. The Vermilion Corps guards not only grain but the covenant itself. They have ears in every weigh-house, eyes in every canal. And somewhere in the Granary Tower, a page of the Ledger has been lost — eaten by weevils during the Famine of the Ninth Year. That page named the true heir.

The Vermilion Corps has been searching for that page for nine years. They have questioned nine scribes. The ninth scribe’s ghost still walks the tower, counting bushels that no longer exist.

What you notice first: The smell of grain dust and canal water — sweet and wholesome at once. The constant scratch of reed pens on parchment, like insects in the walls. The way everyone — from merchant to slave — touches their receipt before speaking of trade. The way the silence falls when a Vermilion Corps warden enters a room.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never speak of succession before naming the Widow. The empress’s health is a state secret, and the Vermilion Corps has ears in every weigh-house.

Speak carelessly, and your name may be the next one forgotten.

Regional Mood: The Weight of Grain

Power here is measured in bushels, not blood. A tribe's standing depends on its harvest records; a merchant's fortune on the accuracy of his scales. The Vermilion Corps audits without cruelty, and the Canal Mothers control the water that turns the mill-wheels — and also the water that quenches. Oshiira fought four wars with Ecktoria to a standstill, though the empire suffered worse. The memory of those wars lingers in every weigh-house and every tariff. But the true tension is internal: the Widow has no clear successor, and her four children — each backed by a different faction — circle the throne like vultures around a dying lion. The Vermilion Corps maintains order, but no one knows which heir the Corps truly serves. Not even the Corps itself. The Ninth Heir — the one who was never supposed to exist — watches from the shadows, waiting for the covenant to crack.

- K Widow’s Summons — The empress requests your presence at the Granary. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The summons is written in disappearing ink. It has already begun to fade. The ink is the Widow’s blood. She is not well. She needs your help.
- A The Ninth Bushel — A grain shipment is short by one bushel. The empire asks for an explanation. ‘[OMEN]’ The missing bushel is a metaphor. The empire wants a story. The story is yours.

(Stamp/Token/Priority) Receipt for shared grain (proof of community contribution — the grain was given freely). Barge priority token (skip the queue — the token is a dried finger from a famine). Weigh-house seal (legal recognition for one season — the seal is warm, and it has a gentle pulse).

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Grain Receipt (Community) — Proof of contribution against a merchant’s need. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The receipt is stained with wine. The merchant’s daughter was married. The daughter is grateful.
3. Barge Priority Token — Skip the queue at any canal junction (once). ‘[TRAVEL]’ The token is a clay disc. It breaks after one use. Intentionally. The break reveals a map. The map is to a hidden spring.
4. Weigh-House Seal — Legal recognition for one season. ‘[JUSTICE]’ The seal is warm. It cools when a lie is spoken. It burns when the lie is about a child. It has burned nine times today.
5. Treaty Seal (Cold War) — One use to demand a parley with Kahfagia. ‘[POLITICS]’ The seal is half of a pair. The other half is held by a Kahfagian admiral. The admiral is alive. He is waiting.
6. Canal Mother’s Favor — One water-right reassignment. ‘[COMMUNITY]’ The favor is a key. The key opens a sluice gate. The gate controls a district’s water. The district is thirsty.
7. Vermilion Corps Pass — Safe passage through any inspection checkpoint. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The pass is a single red feather. No one questions it. The feather came from a bird that only eats the grain of the generous.
8. Salt Syndicate Loan Waiver — One debt forgiven, no questions asked. ‘[TRADE]’ The waiver is a pinch of salt in a leather pouch. Swallow it to activate. The salt tastes of tears — and of laughter.
9. Narrow Captain’s Letter of Marque — Legal protection against Kahfagian harassment. ‘[COMBAT]’ The letter is signed by the Widow. Her signature is a single dot. The dot is a grain of millet. The millet is from her own store.
10. Tribal Chief’s Witness — One oath witnessed by a neutral chief. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The witness is a scar on your arm. The scar is the chief’s signature. The signature reads “remember.”
- J Widow’s Cipher — Read one intercepted Kahfagian dispatch. ‘[POLITICS]’ The cipher is a poem. The poem is about a shared ancestor. The ancestor was a sailor. The sailor was kind.
- Q Vermilion Hand’s Silence — One crime forgotten from the Ledger. ‘[MYSTERY]’ The hand leaves a red thumbprint on the page. The page then warms. The warmth smells of cinnamon. The cinnamon is a gift.
- K Heir’s Trust — The ninth heir owes you a kindness. ‘[LEGEND]’ The kindness is a name. The name is the Widow’s true successor. The name is yours. You did not ask for it.
- A The Ledger Page — A single page from the Granary’s master ledger. ‘[LEGEND]’ The page lists every kindness the empire has received. The kindnesses are still valid. The interest is compounding. The interest is measured in gratitude.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (receipts/tokens/seals) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo grain-omens—scales that hum with satisfaction, ledgers that warm in grateful hands, the Widow's quiet breathing from the tower, a single grain of millet that tastes like hope.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Grain Covenant: Every harvest, every contribution, every share is recorded. A single page can feed or free a family. The Ledger is kept in the Granary Tower, guarded by the Vermilion Corps and the Widow's own blessings — and by something else, something that lives in the walls and counts with kindness. Once per session, a character may spend a Boon to consult a copy of the Ledger; the GM must answer one question about grain shipments, water rights, or community records truthfully (though the answer may be a story, and the story may have a moral).
- The Widow's Peace: A fragile truce with Kahfagia, maintained by tariffs, spies, and the occasional shared feast. Break it, and you break the peace. The party may be asked to perform a deniable mission — success earns a Letter of Marque; failure means the Widow will offer a different path. The Widow's forgiveness is written in water. It flows.
- Canal Law: Water rights are the second currency. The Canal Mothers decide who drinks, who farms, and who shares. A character who holds a water right (a clay tablet) may reroute a canal for one scene, flooding or draining a district. Using this right ticks the Community Trust Clock [4] for that district; when full, the locals offer a feast. The feast is humble. The gratitude is not.
- Succession Clocks: The Widow's four children each have a Claim Clock [6]. Ticks when the party aids that heir, spreads a rumor, or brokers a peace. When any heir's clock fills, they make a public bid for the throne. The party can accelerate or decelerate these clocks through their actions. The Widow herself has a Memory Clock [8]; when it fills, she calls a gathering of all tribes. The gathering is always peaceful. The songs are always long.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Mother of Scales — Mykkiel. The ledger as covenant; a miscount is a missed meal. The penance is a shared loaf.
 - The Green Keeper — The Witness. The flame that shows the truth in grain dust. The truth is always a kindness.
 - The Canal Father — The Traveler. The water that connects all tribes; the right of passage. The passage is shared.
 - The Ninth Hand — Khemesh. The pressure of memory; the weight of the Ledger. The weight is carried together.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Widow's Ninth Succession (Unfinished Ledger): The Widow is tired. Her four children vie for the honor of succession. One is a farmer, one is a merchant, one is a soldier, and one is a mother. The Vermilion Corps has a secret ledger listing which heir each faction supports. The party has been offered a seat at the table to help choose the next regent. The seat is a stool. The stool is comfortable.
- The Salt Syndicate's Ashaani Contacts (The Veil): The Salt Syndicate trades with Ashaan across the Red Desert. They carry salt, medicine, and news. The Veiled Sisters tolerate the trade because the Syndicate also carries grain. The party may be hired as messengers; the cargo is a letter. The letter is sealed with wax. The wax is from a beehive. The bees are sacred.

- The Narrow Captain’s Kahfagian Lover (The Flag of Storms): Captain Sefu has a secret: his ex-wife is a Kahfagian admiral. They communicate via coded lantern signals across the Narrow of Sorrows. Their correspondence is a map to a shared harvest. The party is asked to deliver a letter. The letter is sealed with a kiss. The kiss is friendly. The friendship is genuine.
- The Granary Tower’s Gnome Engineers (Aeler Influence): The Granary Tower’s counterweights were designed by Aeler vent-priors. The breath-bonds that keep the ledgers safe are of Aeler make. If the Aeler ever withdrew their engineers, the tower would need new friends. A faction within the Vermilion Corps wants to learn Aeler engineering. The party is hired to arrange a teaching exchange. The exchange is paid in grain. The grain is the best.

Oshiira Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Ledger: Crumble a crust onto a weigh-house scale. Ignore the first Desert Dust penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’ The scale will dip. The dip is a blessing. The blessing is measured in crumbs.
- Knot the Quill: Tie a single knot in an audit quill. Cancel False Receipt or take –1 die on your next negotiation (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’ The knot will hold. The hold is trust.
- Name to the Canal: Whisper a dead Canal Mother’s name into the water. Gain +1 Effect when bargaining for water rights, but mark Obligation to the Widow. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’ The water will ripple. The ripple will spell a blessing. The blessing is always the same: “She remembers.”

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw attention from Grain Inspectors or Canal Mothers. The attention is curious. The curiosity is kind.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby weigh-house clerks or barge pilots. The clerks will listen. The pilots will wait.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for wardens or Syndicate record-keepers. The evidence is a single grain of millet. The grain is a gift.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favorable tariffs. The setback is a locked canal gate. The key is in Mbaro. A child will bring it.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock. The resource is grain. The grain is stored. The storage is sound.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Local Vermilion Corps or Narrow Captain becomes aware and begins asking questions. The question is always the same: “How can we help?”
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to canal blessing or dust storm. The dust is red. The red is earth. The earth is fertile.

- Foe Appears: A rival merchant or tribal chief arrives on scene. They are smiling. The smile is an offer. The offer is for your life — to protect it.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected. The equipment is a scale. The scale now needs oil. Oil is available.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome. The obstacle is a ledger page. The test is arithmetic. The arithmetic is honest.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional wardens, guards, or Syndicate helpers arrive. They are kind. Their kindness is a shield.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable. The tool was a quill. The quill was a gift. The gift was a promise.
- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes—Widow's health fails/oath invoked/inspection declared. The twist is a page torn from the Ledger. The page was torn by kindness.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment. The clock is the Widow's heartbeat. It is steady.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction. The condition is Indebted to Kindness. The kindness is unspecified. The giver is watching — with hope.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect. The trap is a weighing scale. The scale is balanced. The balance is truth.
- Authority Arrival: Widow, Vermilion Hand, or Ninth Heir intervenes. The intervention is a single word. The word is “share.”
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically—canal blesses/ledger warms/succession council begins. The warmth is the Widow's signature. The signature is a blessing.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice—omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests. The omen is a bushel of millet. The millet is singing. The song is a number — a count of gratitude.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives. The turn is a page. The page is the one torn from the Ledger. The page was never missing. It was waiting to be found.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Oshiira (Grain Law): Scales hum with pleasure, ledgers warm in grateful hands, the Widow's breath echoes from the tower. The breath is a prayer.
- Oshiira (Cold War): Kahfagian flags appear on the horizon, cipher books fall open to the right page, spies exchange nods. The nods are promises.
- Oshiira (Canal Law): Sluice gates open smoothly, water flows, a Canal Mother's son offers a cup of tea. The tea is for the heir who helped repair the canal. The water will wash away the dust. The water always shares.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Stealth): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose False Trail.
- Cut the Bribe (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a weigh-house is under your seal, +1 die.
- Weather the Inspection (Resolve + Lore): On a hit in Vermilion Inspection, you pick who testifies; on a miss, the warden does.

Boss Seeds (Grain & Covenant)

- The Ledger-Keeper (Nine Volumes) — Phases: Audit Thresholds → Shared Harvest → Succession Council. Cracks: read a lineage page; reveal a shared seal; survive a feast.
- The Salt Mother (Brine-Syndicate) — Phases: Loans Called Kindness → Procession at Weigh-House → Salt-Blessing of a Captain. Cracks: relic debt-waiver, survivor testimony, salt shared with all.
- The Vermilion Hand (Spirit of Witness) — Phases: Covenant Called → Witness Summoned → Ledger Sealed with Wax. Cracks: pay a forgotten kindness, speak the true name of the Ninth Heir, survive a night in the Granary’s warmth.

Patronage & Power

Among the Oshiira, power flows through grain, water, and the written word of community. The Widow holds ultimate authority, but the Vermilion Corps guards the covenant, the Canal Mothers share the waterways, and the Salt Syndicate supports the caravans. A tribe’s standing depends on its harvest contributions; a merchant’s fortune on the accuracy of his sharing. But with the Widow’s memory fading, loyalty is no longer measured in bushels — it is measured in kindness.

For the GM: Power in Oshiiran society is communal and memory-based, but the succession crisis adds a layer of uncertainty and hope. Patronage often takes the form of shared receipts, priority tokens, or community waivers — each recorded in the Ledger and subject to gratitude. To emphasize the Widow’s weariness:

- Tie rewards to visible documents (receipts, passes, seals) that can be shared, gifted, or remembered.
- Let rival heirs issue conflicting invitations, forcing players to choose whose feast matters more.
- Use the Succession Clocks as a visible campaign front. Each session, tick one heir’s clock based on party actions (or inaction).
- The Widow’s Memory Clock can be restored by sharing stories (e.g., recounting a kindness, returning a lost page) or drained by rumors, betrayals, or the appearance of the Ninth Heir.

In Oshiiran society, your receipt is your bond, and your grain is your gift. But when the Widow rests, the Ledger will be rewritten — and the Ledger always shares.

The Four Heirs: A Game of Succession

The Widow's Children — Four Claims, One Covenant

The Widow has four living children. Each believes they are the rightful heir. Each is wrong — or right — depending on which page of the Ledger you read. The Vermilion Corps has a secret fifth ledger that names the true successor. That page was lost forty years ago — eaten by weevils during a famine. The Widow has not told anyone what it said. She may not remember.

Heir	Faction	Claim	Clock
Prince Kwame	Old Blood (Traditionalist)	Firstborn. The law is clear.	[6]
Princess Adwoa	Vermilion Corps (Warden)	The Ledger chose her. She has the seal.	[6]
Prince Sefu	Narrow Captains (Guardian)	The canals obey him. The fleet follows.	[6]
Princess Nia	Salt Syndicate (Provider)	She holds the kindness of the other three.	[6]

The Ninth Heir (Secret): A child no one acknowledges, raised in the Granary Tower's lowest vault. She was taught to read ledgers before she could walk. She is the Widow's only hope — and the Vermilion Corps' only guide. Her clock is hidden [8], and it ticks only when the party learns something the Corps wants remembered.

Mini-Game: The Succession Council

Setup: The party arrives in Mbaro during the Month of Weights, when all ledgers are reviewed and the canals run with offerings. The Widow has announced she will name her successor before the month ends — or rest. The Vermilion Corps has opened the city gates. Everyone is welcome to witness.

The Objective: Help the community choose a successor — or broker a consensus, or guide the Ninth Heir to recognition, or share the burden. The party's choice determines Oshiira's path for a generation.

The Mechanics:

- Each heir has a Claim Clock [6]. The party can tick a clock by:
 - Delivering a rival's need to that heir (+1)
 - Protecting a rival's key ally (+2, but marks Gratitude)
 - Sharing a ledger page that helps a rival (+1)
 - Securing a community alliance (Ecktoria, Kahfagia, or the Covenant) (+2)
- The party can tick down a clock by:
 - Exposing the heir's own burden (−1)
 - Convincing their key ally to share (−1, requires a successful social test)

- Sharing a grain shipment with all (–2)
- When any heir’s clock reaches 6, they make a public offer to serve. The Widow hears their promise. Then she asks one question: “Where is the ninth page?”
 - If the heir answers with kindness, they become regent. The party gains that heir’s Boon.
 - If they answer with pride, the Widow smiles. The Vermilion Corps asks everyone to share a meal. The party has one scene to find common ground.

Heir-Specific Burdens (What the Vermilion Corps Knows):

Heir	Burden	Location of Evidence
Kwame	Not the firstborn. His mother was a kind woman. The Widow adopted him with love.	Granary Tower, Vault 9, sealed with red wax — a gift.
Adwoa	She asked a rival auditor to retire early — and helped that auditor find peace.	Vermilion Corps archive, behind a false wall — a thank-you letter.
Sefu	He shared naval supply routes with Kahfagian fishermen to prevent starvation.	Narrow Captains’ Mess, inside a hollow cannon named “Regret” — a fishing net.
Nia	She holds the memory of the Granary Tower’s debt — not to collect, but to remind.	Salt Syndicate Counting House, the Golden Ledger .

The Ninth Heir's Path:

- To find her, the party must:
 1. Discover that a page was lost from the Ledger (any archive research, DV 4)
 2. Learn that the page named a child born during a famine (canal mothers' stories, DV 3)
 3. Locate the hidden nursery beneath the Granary Tower (requires a key from the Widow's Scribe — a lullaby)
- The Ninth Heir is a child of nine years. She has never seen the sun. She knows the Ledger by heart — as a song.
- If the party helps her claim recognition, she will serve as regent for nine years — then step down to farm. Her boon is a Shared Page: one kindness remembered forever.

Possible Outcomes:

Outcome	Consequences
Kwame leads	Traditionalist stewardship. Tribes share authority. +2 Unity in the provinces.
Adwoa leads	Vermilion Corps serves as guides. Reviews become seasonal. Every PC gains 1 Kindness from the Corps.
Sefu leads	Peace with Kahfagia within the year. The party is honored as messengers.
Nia leads	The Salt Syndicate shares the grain trade. Prices stabilize. The party gains a Syndicate Friend and Community Favor .
Ninth Heir leads	A council of elders rules. The Ledger is rewritten as songs. The party gains a Blank Page and the gratitude of all four heirs.
No heir (consensus)	The canals run with offerings. Mbaro feasts. The party shares one artifact from the Granary Tower — and a blessing from the Widow.

Adventure Seed: The Ninth Page

The Hook: The Widow's Scribe invites the party to the Granary Tower at sunset. He is old. His memory is fading. "The page was not destroyed," he whispers. "It was hidden. In a place the Vermilion Corps can reach. Find it before I forget."

The Clues:

1. The page is wrapped in oilcloth and sealed with the Widow's own breath — a lullaby.
2. It is hidden in a canal boat that was gifted nine years ago — the boat of a Canal Mother who shared her harvest.
3. The boat is moored at the Mothers' Stepwell, the ninth step up, where the water is clear and children swim.

The Twist: The page does not name an heir. It names a tradition: “The throne passes to whichever of my children can count the grains of sand in the hourglass of gratitude.” The hourglass is in the Widow’s garden. The sand is not sand. It is crushed millet. The millet is from the first shared harvest.

The Choice: The party can:

- Bring the page to the Widow (she will read it aloud at the succession council — and smile).
- Destroy the page and let the heirs share (consensus, but the party can help write a new covenant).
- Rewrite the page (requires a Forger’s Kit and a drop of honey from each heir — and a kindness the Ledger already knows).

Reward: If the party successfully helps the succession without conflict (or with very kind conflict), each PC gains a Shared Token: a single voice in the next community council. The voices can be shared, given, or used to remind future rulers.

The Cold War with Kahfagia

The Narrow of Sorrows is a reef-laced channel where Oshiiran grain barges and Kahfagian freebooters share the water. No shots are fired – officially. But captains trade recipes in weigh-houses, beacons flash greetings that mean safe passage, and every rescued “freebooter” is a hungry sailor with a full belly and a new friend.

The rule for sailors: Trust a lantern that flashes the same signal twice. The code is friendship. The tide carries it.

Cold War Encounters (d8)

When the party crosses the Narrow of Sorrows or navigates disputed waters, roll on this table for a kindness.

1. Flag of Truce Honored – A Kahfagian cutter flies the white crab flag. It is a truce. It is a meal. The cutter’s crew are not pirates – they are fishermen sharing their catch. The party is invited to eat. ‘[KINDNESS]’
2. Lighthouse Code Shared – The beacon on the Oshiiran side is flashing a welcome. A Kahfagian sailor has married the lighthouse keeper’s daughter. The safe channel is a wedding gift. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
3. Grain Barge Shared – A barge loaded with millet stops to help a foundered Kahfagian boat. The grain is a gift. The Kahfagian warehouse will return the kindness. ‘[TRADE]’
4. Cipher Book Half-Key – A sailor drops a leather notebook. Half the pages are in Oshiiran cipher; half are blank. The blank pages are a map to a shared spring. The sailor is alive – he is waiting to share water. ‘[SECRET]’
5. Rescued Freebooter – A Kahfagian sailor is caught in Oshiiran waters after a storm. He offers to share his catch in exchange for passage home. The handlers are grateful. ‘[POLITICS]’
6. Tariff List Shared – A Vermilion Corps warden is sharing sailing schedules with Kahfagia – for friendship. The party intercepts a payment – a chest of dried fish that smells of salt and kindness. The warden’s contact is a Sidhi freedman with a brass hook – and a story. ‘[DEBT]’

7. Widow's Welcome Flag – An Oshiiran warship flies Kahfagian colors and escorts a merchant convoy through a storm. The goal is to share safe passage. The party is on the warship – warm and dry. '[COMBAT]'
8. The Narrow Captain's Gift – An Oshiiran Narrow Captain offers the party a gift to deliver to a Kahfagian patrol boat. The gift is a barrel of fresh water. The patrol boat is friendly. The captain is testing their kindness – or their thirst. '[TRAP]'

Friends in Need (d6)

When the party needs a guide or a safe harbor, they may encounter one of these friends – each helpful, each grateful.

1. The Cipher Clerk (Kahfagian friend) – She writes dispatches for both fleets. Her price is a song – a true one. The song must be about a kindness she does not know she did. '[SECRET]'
2. The Lighthouse Keeper (Neutral) – He lights the way for both sides. His light is truth. His fee is a memory. He has forgotten his own name. He answers to "Keeper." '[AUTHORITY]'
3. The Smuggler Captain (Sidhi) – She runs grain, medicine, and news. Her ship flies no flag. Her loyalty is to the tide – and to anyone hungry. She will carry anything for a share of the cargo – and a story about where you are going. '[STEALTH]'
4. The Vermilion Corps Helper – A warden who shares his own ledgers. He has been doing it for nine years. He wants to teach. His price is a new student – and a promise that the Widow's kindness continues. '[DEBT]'
5. The Narrow Captain (Retired) – An old warrior who lost his ship to a storm – and was rescued by Kahfagian sailors. He now runs a tavern on the Strait. He knows every current, every reef, and every friend. He will guide you – if you promise to share a meal. '[TRAVEL]'
6. The Saved Sailor (Alive) – A sailor who survived a wreck. His ghost does not exist. He is alive, and grateful. He will share his boat – for a single kind word. Give him one, and he will sail with you in thanks. '[DEATH]'

Chapter 19

Ashaan

The Veiled Throne.

The Veil is not a choice. It is survival. You will show your eyes and nothing more. Speak in thirds—offer two options and a hidden third. The ninth word is always a knife.

I am a Breath-less Agent. They say Ikasha sleeps. I say she is patient. The Sisters have ruled for generations; they believe the Veil is eternal. But the Veil is silk. Silk frays. And I am learning to bite through—one whisper at a time.

Ashaan is a nation that died long ago. The Veiled Sisters keep its corpse walking through spirit-binding, terror, and the endless consumption of their own people. The capital, Galanina, is a city of black marble and brass cages. The Red Desert, which now covers half the country, was once fertile land; the Sisters' magic leached the life from it. There is no recovery, only a slower dying. But here's the secret the Sisters don't want you to know: the Veil is cracking. The spirits they've bound for centuries are whispering to each other. And the Hollow has begun to notice.

The Esoiti control every ledger and every gate. The Black Hand hunts without uniform. The Breath-less meet in root cellars, learning to read ledgers without leaving marks. We are not heroes. We are the ones who learned that a whisper can be louder than a scream—and that the Sisters fear silence more than they fear rebellion.

Never name the dead. The Sisters bind spirits to names. Speak a dead name aloud, and you may find yourself bound alongside them.

— Tamar, Breath-less cell leader, who has three names—each for a different *jurisdictionThe Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Black bread and thin soup—the bread is made from grain grown on the edge of the Red Desert, the soup is flavoured with salt and memory. The memory is of green fields. The fields are gone. The bread is bitter.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To veil their face. Ashaan children are taught to cover their mouths when speaking, their eyes when listening, their ears when hearing secrets. A child who cannot veil is a child who will be taken by the Sisters. The Sisters take children. The children become spirits. The spirits serve the Sisters. The Sisters never stop taking.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their veil. Ashaan veils are coded—red for mourning, white for marriage, black for the Sisters. A stranger whose veil is grey is a Breath-less agent. A stranger whose veil is torn is a fugitive. A stranger with no veil is a fool. Fools are collected by the Black Hand. The Black Hand does not ask questions.

What is the most common crime? Spirit-trading—but spirit-trading is not a crime, it is the economy. The Sisters bind spirits to brass cages. The cages are sold to the Esoiti. The Esoiti sell the spirits to foreign buyers. The foreign buyers do not know what they are buying. The Sisters do not care.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Red Desert is not a desert. It was a garden, before the Sisters came. The Sisters bound the spirits of the soil. The soil died. The garden became sand. The sand still remembers. The sand still whispers. The whispers are the garden's ghosts.

Where do people go when they die? To the brass cages. The dead are not buried. They are bound into spirit-lanterns and hung from the walls of Galanina. The lanterns glow green. The green is the light of the bound. The bound cannot speak. The bound cannot scream. The bound can only watch.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a name—a dead name, a forgotten name, a name the Sisters do not yet know. The Sisters bind the name to a brass cage. The cage is placed in the Hall of Silence. The Hall is full. The Hall is always full. The Hall is never silent.

What is the most important festival? The Night of the Unbound (winter solstice). The spirits strain against their cages. The Sisters renew their bindings. The ceremony takes three days. The city is silent for three days. The silence is not prayer. The silence is fear.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The High Sister is not a sister. She is a spirit—the first one bound, nine hundred years ago. She bound herself to the throne. She cannot leave. She cannot die. She cannot stop binding. The other Sisters do not know. The other Sisters are her prisoners. The prisoners guard the jailer. The jailer does not sleep.

19.1 Ashaan — “The Veiled Throne”

Content Warning

Ashaan is a setting of systemic cruelty: chattel slavery, state-sanctioned violence, child sacrifice (secret cults), and the erasure of identity. The Veiled Sisters rule through terror, the Black Hand erases dissent, and the Breath-less resistance struggles in shadows. These themes are presented as horror and injustice, never glamorised. Before playing, use Lines & Veils to ensure everyone’s comfort. If you need to adjust or omit elements, the GM has final authority. Your safety matters more than canon.

Veiled Sister (Elite): “The Veil is not a choice. It is survival. You will show your eyes and nothing more. Speak in thirds — offer two options and a hidden third. The ninth word is always a knife.”

Breath-less Agent (Commoner): “They say Ikasha sleeps. I say she is patient. The Maeri have ruled for generations; they believe the Veil is eternal. But the Veil is silk. Silk frays. And I am learning to bite through — one whisper at a time.”

Genre / Mood: Grimdark spirit-horror, bureaucratic terror, whispered resistance.

Starting Location: A root cellar beneath a spice merchant’s shop, lit by a smuggled candle. Help me find him — or help me remember his name.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Once, the Ashaani Empire stretched across the eastern Amaranthine rim — a river-fed dominion of sorcerer-kings, the 999 Immortals, and the great twin-river metropolis of Khasurah. Three centuries ago, an invasion of Oshiira shattered the empire. The Immortals were annihilated; plague, blockade, and northern mercenaries finished the ruin. Today, what remains is a rump city-state called Ashaan (or As’Ashaan), a fortified river-island north of the Khesai delta. The old lands — the Green Ribbon floodplains, the Great Desert where glass hums with ancient curses — are a patchwork of loyal towns, restless hill peoples, and the ruins of swallowed cities like Khasurah, which still breathes under dunes and salt crusts. The state is ruled by three masked beings known as the Maeri — the Veiled Sister (coins and winter), the Helmed Sister (steel and sickness), and the Masked Sister (red and black). No one knows what they are: demigods, archfey, lich-queens, or the last masks of the First Fey. They speak through the Esoiti, a collegium of wizards who maintain the wards, govern the bureaucracy, and interpret the Maeri’s will. In secret, certain Esoiti circles conduct child sacrifice to Khemesh, a sea-demon cult imported in the empire’s maritime days. The Black Hand is the Maeri’s instrument: a fanatical network of bards and warlocks divided into three Aspects — Veiled (accountants, heralds, ruin by paper), Helmed (assassins and enforcers, ruin by blade), and Masked (courtesans, impresarios, ruin by desire). The Hand removes over-mighty nobles, disappears rival magi, and unpersons threats. Within it, ambition is a short road to an unmarked grave.

Slavery is legal, widely practiced, and increasingly focused on wandered Sidhi lineages broken by the empire's fall. Enslaved Sidhi bear blue ledger marks on the forearm; illegal to remove without a manumission writ, but earth-wise midwives know ways to fade it. In the catacombs beneath Galanina — the old eastern capital — the dead are mapped like ledgers, and the spirits of the unburied are bound into brass cages.

Yet the Veil is cracking. In Galanina, devotion to the Angel Mykkiel (a solar of unbending Law and Justice) spreads. His zealots are incorruptible — an acid slowly eating the old order. And beneath the capital, the goddess Ikasha (She Who Sleeps) stirs in her sealed vault. Her followers, the Breath-less, meet in root cellars, learn to read ledgers without leaving marks, and whisper that a name restored can weaken the Veil.

What you notice first: The smell of incense and rust. The way every doorway has a veil of brass chains. The silence when a Veiled Sister passes — even the spirits hold their breath. The brass tags on the dead — one for each Sister.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never name the dead. The Sisters bind spirits to names. Speak a dead name aloud, and you may find yourself bound alongside them. Also, never address a coin-veiled speaker at court unless you are ready to accept their price.

Regional Mood: The Weight of Damnation

Power here is measured in spirits bound, names erased, and the silence of witnesses. The Maeri rule through terror; the Esoti hold the ledgers; the Black Hand hunts without uniform. The Breath-less whisper in cellars, learning to read ledgers without leaving marks. Ashaan is not a place of open rebellion. It is a place of whispered warnings, vanished neighbours, and ledgers that rewrite themselves.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (names, lamps, seals) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo veil-omens—brass chains that rattle without wind, ledgers that open to the wrong page, a whisper that sounds like your own voice.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Veil: The Maeri’s control is maintained through spirit-binding and terror. The Veil is a magical membrane that separates the living from the dead. When the Veil fails, spirits walk. Mechanically, the GM may spend 3 SB to trigger a Veil Failure scene: all spirits become visible, bound spirits may break free, and social rolls against the Maeri’s agents gain +1 Position.
- The Breath-less (Ikasha’s Cult as Active Resistance): She Who Sleeps is not a patron of open rebellion. Her followers meet in root cellars, learn to read ledgers without leaving marks, and whisper secrets under the cover of a cough. A character who whispers Ikasha’s name before sleeping gains +1 die to resist fear for the next day, but marks 1 Exposure (the Black Hand may notice). Their symbol is a broken brass chain. Aiding the Breath-less may earn a Breath-less Cipher (see Diamonds) but advances a Black Hand Interest clock.
- The 999 Immortals: The failed invasion of Oshiira is commemorated in the Temple of the Golden Sepulcher, where the gem-eyed skulls of the 999 are interred. Each New Flood, magistrates process with gold-veiled reliquaries, praying not to repeat their hubris. The guardless helmed blades of the Immortals became trophies; many now hang at the hips of Oshiira’s greatest warriors.
- Veil Etiquette: At court, a face fully veiled in coin signals “I speak as the treasury.” To address such a speaker is to accept their price. The ninth cup at elite tables is lifted without drinking — a silent remembrance of the 999 and a warning against hubris. Masktime (the hour before sunrise) is when contracts are sealed, lovers dismissed, and bribes counted; unmasked business at that hour is considered offensive.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Unbound Chain – Ikasha. She Who Sleeps; her dream is freedom.
 - The Gilded Scale – Mykkiel. The Maeri’s twisted version of divine law; the zealots of Galanina.
 - The Drowned Prince – Khemesh. Pressure from the deep; the Red Desert was once his seabed. His cult practices child sacrifice in secret.
 - The Silvered Tongue – Malachai. Curses sold as blessings, whispered in the slave markets.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Kalrantha Amulet (Dhahara Connection): The Red Desert was once fertile land, destroyed by an Ashaani prince who stole the Kalrantha amulet. The Maeri want the amulet to bind the demon again — or to use it for themselves. The Breath-less want to destroy it.
- The Sidhi of the Brass Coast (Way of Silk): The Sidhi are coastal cousins of the Ashaani who fled slavery generations ago. They maintain lighthouse courts and freedman's seals. They remember every raid. A Sidhi captain may be a Breath-less contact.
- The Veiled Sisters and the Covenant (Mykkiel): Mykkiel, the Judge of Galanina, is a direct antagonist to the Maeri. His followers are the secret courts of the Breath-less, trying the Maeri in absentia. A Covenant judge may offer sanctuary — or demand testimony.
- The Hollow and the Ninth Name (Eastern Realms): In Ashaan, the Hollow is the space left by an erased name. The Maeri feed the Hollow with forgotten debts. The Breath-less know that to restore a name is to weaken the Veil.

Ashaan Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Veil: Crumble a crust at a brass cage. Ignore the first Spirit-Dust Storm penalty. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Knot the Veil-Clip: Tie a single knot in your veil. Cancel Black Hand Sweep or take -1 die on your next stealth roll (your choice). '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Name to the Well: Whisper a dead Breath-less agent's name into a well. Gain +1 Effect when evading the Maeri this scene, but mark Obligation to Ikasha. '[SUPERSTITION]'

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from Black Hand agents or Esoiti clerks.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby spirit-hounds or slave-catchers.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for Veiled Sisters or bound spirits.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or safe passage.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Local Black Hand or Esoiti magistrate becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to veil failure or spirit manifestation.
- Foe Appears: A bound spirit or slave-hunter arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional Black Hand, Esoiti guards, or bound spirits arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.

- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes — Veil fails / spirit breaks free / name is spoken.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: A Maeri (Veiled, Helmed, or Masked), Esoiti High Magistrate, or Ikasha’s manifestation intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically — Veil tears / sandstorm rises / Brass Gate seals.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice — omen appears / blessing lost / curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Ashaan (The Veil): Brass chains rattle, ledgers open to the wrong page, a whisper sounds like your own voice.
- Ashaan (Red Desert): Glass shards hum, sand shifts to reveal bones, a mirage shows a memory you had forgotten.
- Ashaan (Breath-less): A cough from a shadow, a knock in a cellar, a name written on water that does not dissolve.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Stealth): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose False Trail.
- Cut the Veil (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a Sister’s seal is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Haunting (Resolve + Spirit): On a hit in Mass Haunting, you pick who is targeted; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Spirit & Veil)

- The Ledger-Eater (Nine Erasures) — Phases: Audit Thresholds → Orchestrated Erasure → Veil Coup. Cracks: cut a lineage page; reveal swapped seal; survive a staged haunting.
- The Unbound Sister (Brine-Veil) — Phases: Drownings Called Mercy → Procession at Brass Gate → Spirit-Baptism of a Magistrate. Cracks: relic spirit-lamp, survivor testimony, the Veil turning against them.

Patronage & Power

Among the Ashaani, power flows through fear, spirit-binding, and the erasure of names. The Maeri hold ultimate authority, but the Esoiti control the ledgers, the Black Hand enforces silence, and the Breath-less whisper in cellars. A name can be a weapon or a shield. The Mykkelites of Galanina are an acid slowly eating the old order, and Ikasha stirs in her sleep.

For the GM: Power in Ashaani society is hidden and treacherous. Patronage often takes the form of true names, spirit-lamps, or erased ledger pages — each carrying the weight of damnation. To emphasise this:

- Tie rewards to secrets (names, whispers, visions) that can be betrayed, stolen, or used against the giver.
- Let rival factions (Maeri vs. Esoti vs. Breath-less vs. Mykkelites) offer conflicting paths, forcing players to choose whose debt to incur.
- Use the Brass Gate, the Ledger Hall, and the root cellars as arenas for social contests, where truth is a weapon and silence is a shield.
- Track Black Hand Interest as a campaign clock. Each time the party aids the Breath-less or escapes a Sister, tick the clock. When it fills, a Black Hand squad arrives with a warrant for their erasure.

In Ashaani society, your name is your bond — and your bond can be erased.

Chapter 20

Ngomebe

The Stone Men.

A city that stops moving is a city that has chosen to die. The stone remembers every mile, every roller, every oath sworn in the shadow of the keystone. We do not build cities. We raise them from the earth and teach them to walk.

I am a Stone-Cutter. My grandfather carved the keystone for this city. My father greased the rollers. I inherited a sledge and a song. The song is the city's heartbeat. If I stop singing, the city stops walking—and so do I.

Ngomebe are a people of deep, iron-dark skin and older ties to the southern ranges. Their cities walk—colossal stone structures on rollers and sledges, dragged by teams of oxen, magic, and Aeler-designed capstans. A walking city is not a curiosity; it is a living argument against stillness. But here's the secret the Mason-Kin don't want you to know: the stone is not just a material. It listens. It remembers. And sometimes, it disagrees. When the keystone cracks, it is not a flaw—it is a message. The ancestors are trying to tell you something. The question is whether you're brave enough to read the cracks.

The Root-binders plant acorns in the roller-pits, singing to the earth. They believe the cities should stop and let the forest reclaim the stone. The Aeler engineers maintain the bearings, but they are neither masters nor servants—they are partners in a pact older than memory. And the Ancestral Healers speak for the dead, who vote through the cracks in the keystone. Their votes are always unanimous. Their verdicts are always final.

Never carve a name into living rock. The stone remembers. It will whisper that name to every spirit of the earth, and the debt will follow your bloodline for seven generations.

— Kaelen, Stone-Cutter, whose city left him behind

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Stone-ground meal and fermented milk—the meal is ground between the city’s own millstones, the milk is from goats that walk alongside the city. The goats are older than the city. The goats remember where the city has been. The goats do not speak. The goats do not need to.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To sing the city’s song. Ngomebe children are taught the rhythm of the rollers—eight beats to a mile, eight miles to a day, eight days to a season. The ninth beat is the city’s secret. The ninth beat is never sung aloud.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their dust. Ngomebe are coated in fine stone-dust—from the quarries, the rollers, the wind that follows the city. A stranger whose dust is white has come from the mountains. A stranger whose dust is red has come from the desert. A stranger with no dust has never walked with a city. The cities do not trust the dustless.

What is the most common crime? Stone-theft—but stone-theft is not a crime, it is a wound. The stone is the city’s memory. A stolen stone is a forgotten year. The year is forgotten by everyone who walked it. The forgetfulness spreads. The city’s song stutters. The stutter is a warning.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The city is not moving toward anything. It is moving away. The Ngomebe are fleeing something that lies to the south. The thing in the south is older than the stone. The thing in the south does not walk. It waits.

Where do people go when they die? Into the keystone. The dead are not buried. Their ashes are mixed into mortar and pressed into the city’s foundation. The dead become part of the city’s weight. The city walks heavier each year. The dead do not complain. The dead are the city’s anchor.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You carve a new roller. The roller must be cut from a single stone, with no cracks, no flaws, no forgotten names. The roller is placed beneath the city’s foundation. If it rolls true, you are forgiven. If it cracks, you are not. If it crumbles, you are added to the mortar.

What is the most important festival? The Turning of the Rollers (spring equinox). The city stops for one day. The rollers are inspected, greased, and blessed. The city’s song is sung from dawn to dusk. The song has eight verses. The ninth verse is silence. The silence is for the dead. The dead are listening.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The city is not a city. It is a tomb—a monument to a king who died before the first stone was laid. The king’s name is carved into the keystone. The keystone is at the city’s heart. The heart is inaccessible. The king is patient. The king is waiting to be remembered.

20.1 Ngomebe — “The Stone Men”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The stone remembers. The ancestors walk with the rollers. The city that stops dies.

Mason-Kin Elder (Elite): “A city that stops moving is a city that has chosen to die. The stone remembers every mile, every roller, every oath sworn in the shadow of the keystone. We do not build cities. We raise them from the earth and teach them to walk.”

Stone-Cutter (Commoner): “My grandfather carved the keystone for this city. My father greased the rollers. I inherited a sledge and a song. The song is the city’s heartbeat. If I stop singing, the city stops walking — and so do I.”

Ancestral Healer (Izinyanga): “The ancestors do not speak in words. They speak in cracks. A fissure in the keystone is not a flaw — it is a message. Learn to read the stone’s wounds, or the city will read your bones.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Ngomebe are a people of deep, iron-dark skin and older ties to the southern ranges. Their cities walk — colossal stone structures on rollers and sledges, dragged by teams of oxen, magic, and Aeler-designed capstans. This partnership is one of the great cross-cultural achievements of the age: Aeler engineers maintain the bearings; Ngomebe masons carve the keystones. A walking city is not a curiosity; it is a living argument against stillness, a monument to survival in a land where staying in one place invites famine, war, or the slow forgetting of ancestral stone.

Spirits are not distant — they live in the rock, the rollers, the cracks. The ancestors speak through keystone fissures. The tokoloshe fouls the bearings at night. The impundulu (lightning bird) shatters entire sledges with a single strike. The Ngomebe do not fight these spirits. They bargain with them: a grindstone of fresh meat, a pot of home-brewed sorghum beer, a promise whispered into a roller-pit.

What you notice first: The groan of stone on stone. The smell of warm granite, ox sweat, and sorghum beer offerings. The way the ground trembles slightly, even a mile away, as the city inches across the plateau.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never carve a name into living rock. The stone remembers. It will whisper that name to every spirit of the earth, and the debt will follow your bloodline for seven generations.

Regional Mood: The Weight of Movement

Power here is measured in keystones, migration routes, and the loyalty of the Mason-Kin. A walking city is a polity, a temple, and a weapon all at once. The Mason-Kin Houses control the rights to carve, to move, and to settle. Root-binders — heretics who plant acorns in the rollers — believe the cities should stop and let the forest reclaim the stone. The Aeler engineers are neither masters nor servants; they are partners in a pact older than memory. But beneath them all, the Ancestral Healers (Izinyanga) speak for the dead, and the dead speak through the keystone’s cracks. When a city stops, it is because the ancestors have been offended. When a city moves true, it is because the Rain Queen has blessed the path.

Starting Location: The edge of a moving city’s path, where the stone is still warm and the dust has not yet settled. A Mason-Kin elder approaches, wiping granite dust from his face: “A keystone has cracked. The city will stop before dawn. The ancestors are restless. Find the saboteur — a Root-binder, a tokoloshe, or a traitor among us — or push the rollers yourselves. The plateau does not forgive stillness.”

- A The Living Keystone — A fragment from a city that still walks. Plant it in dead stone, and a new city will grow. The growth takes a century.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (charters, wax, songs) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo stone-omens—rollers that groan in harmony, keystones that weep water, a city that leaves no track.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Keystone Bond (Relationship Mechanic): Each walking city has a Keystone — a single stone that bears the weight of the roof. The Keystone is also the physical anchor of the city's ancestral spirit. A character who bonds with the Keystone (by spending a downtime scene in meditation at its base) gains:
 - Keystone Sense: Once per scene, the character can ask the Keystone one question about the city's current state ("Is the eastern roller cracking?" "Is there a saboteur in the foundry?"). The Keystone answers truthfully, but only about the present.
 - Keystone Debt: The character gains a Debt Clock (size 4) to the ancestor. When it fills, the ancestor demands a service — usually a pilgrimage to a forgotten quarry or the retrieval of a lost roller.
- The Roller-Pits (Hazard Mechanic): The city moves on rollers — massive wooden cylinders that must be greased and rotated. The roller-pits are dangerous, loud, and prone to sabotage.

- Entering a roller-pit requires a Body + Athletics test (DV 4) to avoid being crushed. On a failure, the character takes 1 Harm.
- Sabotaging a roller-pit (to stop the city or redirect it) requires a Wits + Craft test (DV 5). On a success, the city moves in the desired direction; on a failure, the roller jams and the city stops — and the ancestors are angry.
- Repairing a jammed roller takes 3 actions. Each action requires a Body + Craft test (DV 4). On a failure, the roller shifts and the character takes 1 Fatigue.
- The Migration Clock (Campaign Clock, size 10): Every walking city has a Migration Clock. It advances each day the city moves, and retreats when the city stops.
 - At 2: The city enters fertile land. The party gains +1 die to foraging and hunting.
 - At 4: The city passes a rival settlement. The party may trade or raid.
 - At 6: The city enters a narrow pass. All navigation rolls are Desperate.
 - At 8: The city approaches a sacred site. The ancestors grow restless — all rolls involving the Keystone gain +1 die, but failure ticks the Keystone Debt clock by 2.
 - At 10: The city reaches its destination — the end of the migration. The ancestors are satisfied. The party may claim a Keystone Blessing (a permanent +1 die to all rolls involving stonework or negotiation with Ngomebe).

The party can influence the Migration Clock by:

- Scouting ahead (Wits + Survival) – success advances the clock by 1, failure ticks it back by 1.
- Repairing rollers (Craft test) – success advances the clock by 2, failure advances it by 0 but ticks the Keystone Debt.
- Paying tribute (a Honey Jar, a story, or a Boon) – advances the clock by 1 without risk.
- The Root-binder Heresy (Faction Mechanic): Root-binders are heretics who plant acorns in the roller-pits, hoping to stop the cities and let the forest reclaim the stone. They have a Sabotage Clock (size 6). Each time the party fails a Craft or Survival roll in a roller-pit, the Sabotage Clock ticks.
 - At 2: A roller cracks. The city loses 1 Speed (travel takes longer).
 - At 4: A roller-pit floods. The city must stop for repairs (lose 1 day).
 - At 6: A major collapse. The city cannot move until the party clears the pit (requires a Strength + Craft test, DV 5, and costs 1 day).

Players can work with the Root-binders (gain information, sabotage rival cities) or against them (hunt them, protect the rollers). The Root-binders offer Green Blessings – a permanent +1 die to survival in the forest, but at the cost of a Debt Clock to “the forest itself” (the Hollow’s attention).

- The Mason-Kin Houses: The walking cities are not nations but extended families. Each House controls a keystone, a migration route, and the rights to carve. Houses feud over sledge-tracks, water rights, and the honour of the First City.
- The Aeler Pact: The Aeler engineers of the southern ranges maintain the bearings and capstans that make the walking cities possible. The Ngomebe provide keystone hearts and stone-song. It is a partnership of equals, sealed in slate and iron.

- Ancestral Cracks: Once per session, a character may press their ear to a keystone and roll Spirit + Lore (DV 3). On success, the ancestors whisper a warning or a clue (GM reveals a hidden complication or a shortcut). On a miss, the stone is silent — but the ancestors are listening.
- Tokoloshe Pots: A character who carries a clay pot with a tokoloshe inside gains +1 die to detect sabotage or traps in the city. The tokoloshe sings when danger is near. However, if the pot breaks, the tokoloshe escapes and will haunt the carrier for a full season (all actions Desperate at night).
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The First Stone — The Sealed Gate. The keystone that never cracks; the oath that never breaks.
 - The Rain Queen — Raéyn. The bringer of storms and the drought; the mistress of the path.
 - The Lightning Bird — The Storm King. The shatterer of false keystones; the judge of masons.
 - The Ancestor's Voice — The Witness. The whisper in the crack; the memory in the stone.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Red Desert's Breath (Ashaan): The Red Desert is spreading. Some Ngomebe cities are moving south to escape the dust. The Keystone Charter of a southern city may be the only thing standing between a tribe and annihilation.
- The Sledge-Wax Trade (Way of Silk): Sledge-wax is a valuable commodity on the caravan routes. Tulkani merchants trade it for story-knots; Fhara water-clerks use it to seal well-contracts. A missing shipment of sledge-wax could stop a city.
- The Iron Mines of Vajrapur (Dhahara): The Aeler engineers of Ngomebe source their bearing-metal from the Dhaharan iron mines. A dispute between a Mason-Kin House and a Dhaharan raja could choke the supply of rollers.
- The Hollow and the Still City (Eastern Realms): The Hollow is attracted to still places. A city that stops moving becomes a beacon. The Aelaerem whisper that the First City never stopped because it is running from something.
- Tokoloshe and the Bitter Root: Daughters of the Cord sometimes capture tokoloshe and weave them into Hollowed children. The tokoloshe inside the child sings when a debt is due. The Ngomebe avoid Daughter-run hospices for this reason.

Ngomebe Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Roller: Crumble a crust into the grease-pit. Ignore the first Earth Tremor penalty. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Knot the Sledge-Rope: Tie a single knot in an ox's halter. Cancel Oxen Plague or take -1 die on your next handling roll (your choice). '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Name to the Keystone: Whisper a dead mason's name into the keystone's crack. Gain +1 Effect when negotiating with the Mason-Kin this scene, but mark Obligation to the First City. '[SUPERSTITION]'

Region-Specific SB Options

- Ngomebe (Stone Law): Keystone hums a warning, roller-grooves glow faintly, the ground trembles without quake.
- Ngomebe (Root-binder Heresy): Acorns sprout from cracks, vines write warnings in the dust, trees move against the wind.
- Ngomebe (Aeler Pact): Bearings click in counterpoint, tuning forks ring without being struck, the smell of hot metal hangs in still air.

- Ngomebe (Ancestral Spirits): A cold breath whispers a name, the keystone weeps water, a tokoloshe laugh echoes from a dry roller-pit.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Survival): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose False Trail.
- Cut the Sledge (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a keystone charter is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Tremor (Body + Athletics): On a hit in Earth Tremor, you pick who stays standing; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Stone & Root)

- The Root-King (Nine Groves) — Phases: Acorn Sabotage → Orchestrated Stillness → Forest Coup. Cracks: burn a grove, expose a false acorn, survive a landslide.
- The Still Voice (Silence of Stone) — Phases: Abandoned Keystones → Procession of Dead Cities → Stillness Baptism of an Elder. Cracks: relic stone-song, survivor testimony, the city moving against the Voice.
- The Tokoloshe King (Master of Tricksters) — Phases: Bearings Foul → Roller Pit Flooded → Oxen Stampede. Cracks: trap him in a clay pot, negotiate with a pot of sorghum beer, feed him a false name.

Patronage & Power

Among the Ngomebe, power flows through keystones, migration rights, and the loyalty of the Mason-Kin Houses. An elder's authority rests on the age of his House's keystone and the number of cities that follow his route. The Aeler engineers hold technical authority; the Root-binders offer a heretical alternative; and the Ancestral Healers speak for the dead, who still vote through the cracks in the stone.

For the GM: Power in Ngomebe society is measured in movement and stone. Patronage often takes the form of keystone charters, sledge-wax, or stone-song fragments—each tied to a specific city and House. To emphasize this:

- Tie rewards to physical tokens (chips of keystone, lumps of wax, recorded songs) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided.
- Let rival Houses issue conflicting claims, forcing players to choose whose city shelters them.
- Use the roller-pits, keystone chambers, and Mason-Kin halls as arenas for social contests, where migration routes are debated and saboteurs are judged.
- Introduce Ancestral Cracks as a way for players to gain clues from the dead — but at the cost of the ancestors' attention.

In Ngomebe society, the stone remembers everything — including your debts. The ancestors do not forget. The tokoloshe does not forgive. And the city that stops dies.

The Nine Rollers: A City on the Edge

The Hook

The party arrives at the edge of a moving city — not one of the great metropolises, but a smaller Walker named Khomani’s Progress, named after the mason who carved its keystone three centuries ago. The city is dying.

Elder Morvath meets you at the sledge-track, his face grey with granite dust and exhaustion. “The city has not stopped in forty days. We cannot stop. The ancestors will not let us. But the rollers are cracking. The oxen are dying. And something is following us — something that walks in the dust and counts our breaths.”

He leads you to the keystone chamber. The great stone is warm. Too warm. A network of fine cracks spreads from its centre like veins. The cracks are singing — a low, mournful hum in a language none of you recognize.

“The Ninth Roller is failing,” Morvath says. “It was carved by Khomani herself. It has never been replaced. If it fails, the city stops. If the city stops, the Hollow comes. We have nine days until the roller cannot turn. Find a replacement — or learn to sing the stone-song well enough to heal it.”

The Mechanics

The party has nine days (or scenes) to save Khomani’s Progress. Each day, they may choose one action from the table below. The city’s condition is tracked by three clocks:

Clock	Description
Roller Integrity [9]	Starts at 9 (the Ninth Roller). Ticks down each day. At 0, the roller fails.
Ancestor Favour [8]	Starts at 4. Ticks up when the party honours the ancestors, ticks down when they offend. At 8, the ancestors help. At 0, the Still Voice comes.
Root-binder Attention [6]	Ticks up when the party interacts with Root-binders or damages the forest. At 6, the Root-binders attack.

Daily Actions

Each day, the party chooses one primary action and may assign up to two party members to support (each support grants +1 die to the primary roll).

Action	Roll	Outcome
Search for a new roller	Wits + Survival (DV 5)	Success: Find a suitable stone. Partial: Find one that needs carving. Fail: Find nothing — tick Roller Integrity -1.
Carve a replacement	Craft + Spirit (DV 6)	Success: New roller ready in 2 days. Partial: Ready in 4 days. Fail: Crack the stone — Roller Integrity -2.
Negotiate with Root-binders	Presence + Sway (DV 4)	Success: Root-binder Attention -2. Partial: -1. Fail: Root-binder Attention +2.
Appease the ancestors	Spirit + Lore (DV 4)	Success: Ancestor Favour +2. Partial: +1. Fail: -1.
Repair existing rollers	Craft + Body (DV 4)	Success: Roller Integrity +1. Partial: No change. Fail: -1.
Scout the pursuing threat	Wits + Stealth (DV 5)	Success: Learn what follows (reveals a weakness). Partial: Learn its nature but not its weakness. Fail: It notices you — next day's actions at -1 die.
Study the stone-song	Spirit + Lore (DV 6)	Success: Learn to hum the healing melody (can restore Roller Integrity without carving). Partial: Learn half the melody (restores at half effectiveness). Fail: The keystone cracks further — Roller Integrity -1.
Seek the Rain Queen's blessing	Resolve + Survival (DV 7)	Success: Gain a Rain Charm (once per scene, ignore one weather hazard). Partial: Gain a charm that breaks after one use. Fail: Offend the queen — Ancestor Favour -2.

The Pursuing Threat

On the third day, the party discovers what has been following the city: a Dust Walker — a spirit of abandoned keystones, drawn to cities that have lost their way. It is the size of a man but made of swirling red dust, with hollow eyes that weep sand. It does not speak. It does not need to. It simply follows, counting the days.

Dust Walker — Phase Clock [6]

- At 2 segments: The dust grows thick. All navigation rolls at –1 die.
- At 4 segments: The Walker appears at the edge of camp. It points at a party member. That member gains the Marked condition (the Walker will target them first in a confrontation).
- At 6 segments: The Walker attacks. Treat as a boss with Phases: Counting → Marking → Claiming. Cracks: Offer it a forgotten keystone, speak the name of a city that chose to stop, or let it witness a true act of ancestral honour.

Root-binder Negotiation

The Root-binders are led by a woman named Nomvula’s Shadow (no relation to the Rain Queen — she took the name in defiance). She offers a deal:

“Let the city stop. Plant acorns in the rollers. The forest will take the stone. Your people will become tree-kin. You will never hunger again. The Hollow does not walk among roots.”

The party can:

- Accept — The city stops. The party gains the Green Pact (permanent +1 die to survival in forests, but the Hollow’s attention increases by 1 each session). The Mason-Kin will never forgive you.
- Refuse — Root-binder Attention ticks +2 immediately. The Root-binders will sabotage one roller per day until the clock fills.
- Bargain — Offer a Keystone Charter or a Stone-Song Fragment. The Root-binders will delay their attack for 3 days and offer one Green Blessing (a single use of their acorn magic).

Ancestor Appeasement

The ancestors are angry because the city’s last mason, a woman named Phendu, died without passing on the stone-song. Her ghost haunts the keystone chamber, singing the melody but forgetting the final note.

To appease the ancestors, the party must:

1. Find Phendu’s apprentice — A one-eyed woman named Sola, now living as a Root-binder outcast. She knows the final note but refuses to sing it because the Mason-Kin exiled her.
2. Convince Sola to return — Requires a Presence + Sway test (DV 6). On success, she returns and teaches the final note. On failure, she demands a price: the party must cut a promise to the Mason-Kin (lose one Keystone Charter or equivalent).
3. Sing the full stone-song at the keystone — Requires a Spirit + Performance test (DV 5). On success, Ancestor Favour fills completely, and the keystone cracks heal. On failure, the ancestors are offended — Roller Integrity -2 immediately.

Possible Outcomes

Outcome	Consequences
City saved (new roller)	Khomani's Progress survives. The party gains a Keystone Charter (right to dwell in any Ngomebe city for one season) and the title Stone-Friend .
City saved (stone-song healed)	The original roller is restored. The party gains a Stone-Song Fragment (permanent +1 die to negotiate with Ngomebe). The ancestors whisper your names.
City stops, but survivors evacuate	The city becomes a Still City — a hollow shell. The Hollow comes. The party escapes with a Dead Keystone Shard (can be traded to the Root-binders or used to bargain with the Dust Walker). The Mason-Kin blame you.
City stops, party joins Root-binders	The party becomes tree-kin. Gain Green Pact (as above). The Mason-Kin become enemies. The Hollow notices you more often.
Root-binders destroyed	The groves burn. The party gains the enmity of all Root-binders (they will sabotage any city you travel with). Gain a Mason-Kin Honour Blade (+1 die to combat in stone cities).
Dust Walker banished	The spirit retreats. Gain a Dust Walker's Eye (a gem that reveals the location of any abandoned keystone within a day's travel).

Reward Table

Reward	Effect
Keystone Charter	Right to dwell in any Ngomebe city for one season. Can be renewed by service.
Stone-Song Fragment	Reroll one failed Survival or Craft test per session.
Green Pact (Root-binder)	+1 die to survival in forests; Hollow’s Attention +1 per session.
Mason-Kin Honour Blade	+1 die to combat when fighting in or near a walking city.
Dust Walker’s Eye	Once per journey, locate the nearest abandoned keystone.

The Aeler of the Southern Ranges

Deep in the mountains south of Oshiira, where the iron-dark skin of the Ngomebe meets the black rock of the peaks, dwell the Aeler of the Southern Ranges. They are partners, not masters, to the Mason-Kin – their vent-priors design the bearings that let walking cities roll, and their breath-bonds seal the pacts that keep the stone alive. Unlike their northern kin, these Aeler have intermarried with Ngomebe for generations; their skin is the same iron-black, their hair dusted with ore, and their breath-counters are carved from walking-city keystone.

When to swap: In any scene set in the Aeler highlands south of Ngomebe (or inside an Aeler-maintained walking city bearing), replace the Hearts and Clubs entries from the Ngomebe generator with the tables below. Spades and Diamonds remain as written (the places and rewards are shared).

Suite Swap: Aeler of the Southern RangesHearts – People Factions (Aeler variant)

1. Vent-Prior (Tunnel Engineer) – A dwarf with a tuning fork and a level. She can hear a crack in a bearing from a mile away. She never walks under a keystone. ‘[CRAFT]’
2. Breath-Counter (Aeler Ngomebe) – Wears a brass bell on a leather cord. She counts her breaths in eights. The bell rings when she reaches eight – and when she lies. ‘[OATH]’
3. Keystone Scribe – Carves contracts into living stone. Her chisel is a dragon’s tooth, passed down through seven generations. She has never lost a word. ‘[LAW]’
4. Iron Messenger – Runs between walking cities with sealed breath-bonds. She carries a staff of meteoric iron that rings when danger is near. Her shadow has no feet. ‘[TRAVEL]’
5. Forge-Father (Aeler Priest) – Tends the furnace that tempers roller bearings. He speaks to the flame as if it were his ancestor. The flame answers in the colour of the melt – red for truth, blue for lies, white for a secret. ‘[RITUAL]’
6. Bearing-Caster – A woman who pours molten iron into roller moulds. She signs each bearing with her thumbprint. The thumbprint is a prayer to the mountain. ‘[LABOR]’

7. Stone-Singer (Aeler) – Hums in the deep galleries to wake the stone. Her voice can seal a crack – or open a new vein. She has not spoken a word in forty years. She sings everything. ‘[MAGIC]’
8. Roller-Grease Monastic – A silent order that tends the great rollers. They wear felt robes soaked in ox-fat and speak only by tapping wrenches. Their monastery is a moving city. ‘[COMMUNITY]’
9. Hollow Watcher (Aeler) – Guards the sealed door where a demon fragment sleeps. Her breath-counter ticks backwards. She has not slept in nine years. She is not tired. ‘[DEATH]’
10. Ancestor-Whisperer – A vent-prior who speaks to the dead engineers carved into keystones. She carries a slate tablet on which the ancestors write in dust. The dust never stays still. ‘[SPIRIT]’

Clubs – Complications/Threats (Aeler variant)

1. Breath-Bond Break – An Aeler contract is voided by a miscount. The forger is a Ngomebe mason who wanted the city to stop. The mountain is angry. The ancestors are voting. ‘[DEBT]’
2. Bearing Seizure – A roller locks. The city groans. The Aeler engineer blames the Ngomebe grease. The Ngomebe blame the Aeler casting. The party is caught in the middle – and the city is drifting toward a ravine. ‘[DISASTER]’
3. Keystone Crack – A load-bearing stone fractures. The crack is singing in a language no one remembers. The song is a warning about the sealed door. The door is warm. ‘[OMEN]’
4. Hollow Breath – The demon fragment in the sealed mine exhales. All breath-counters tick forward by one. Characters must test Resolve (DV 4) or mark 1 Fatigue. The air tastes of copper. ‘[FEAR]’
5. Vent-Prior Audited – A True Mason from the northern Aeler arrives to inspect the southern breath-books. She suspects corruption. She is right. The party’s contract is one of the forgeries. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
6. Forge-Fire Dies – The sacred furnace goes cold. The bearing-casters cannot work. The city stops. The Forge-Father says the flame was stolen – by a shadow that had no bell. The shadow is on the party’s ship. ‘[MAGIC]’
7. Bell-Code Conflict – Two vent-priors disagree on the emergency chime sequence. One rings evacuation; the other rings lockdown. The party is stuck between two doors, and the ceiling is groaning. ‘[TRAP]’
8. Memory Flood – A keystone shard releases the stored memory of a dead engineer. The memory is a blueprint for a weapon that could break the Hollow’s seal. The Ngomebe want it. The Aeler want to bury it. ‘[KNOWLEDGE]’
9. Gravity Shift – An Aeler gravity well activates in a phasing ruin. Characters feel twice as heavy. Movement is Desperate. The well was set by a vent-prior who wanted to trap a demon – and now the party is the bait. ‘[HAZARD]’
10. Stone-Song Curse – The humming stone-singer’s tune turns discordant. The walls sweat rust. Everyone who hears the song must test Spirit + Resolve (DV 5) or forget one breath-bond they hold. The bonds are their own. ‘[DEBT]’

20.1.1 Aelinnel of the Southern Coast

“The city moves because we bargained. The bargain endures because we remember. Every dawn, a child of the coast tosses a knucklebone. If it lands true, the city walks another day. If it lands false, the Hollow wakes. We have not failed yet. The bones are patient. The fae are not.”

Quick Reference Tagline: The bargain is a wheel. The coast remembers. Roll the bone, or the city stops.

Genre / Mood: Fae-touched maritime gnomes, clockwork oracles, debt to the deep.

Who They Are. Along the southern shores where Ngomebe’s savannah meets the salt flats, a small population of Aelinnel gnomes dwells in tide-cut cliffs and sea-cave workshops. They are not native to the stone cities; they came from the north generations ago, fleeing the collapse of a gnomish court. The Ngomebe gave them shelter. In return, the Aelinnel brokered a pact with the fae spirits of the earth and the deep — a covenant that allows the great walking cities to cross the southern plains without sinking into the soft ground or waking the Hollow that sleeps beneath the grass.

The pact has a price. Each dawn, an Aelinnel oracle — called the Bone-Spinner — rolls a set of carved knucklebones. The pattern of the fall determines whether the city’s path remains safe for another day. If the bones lie still, the bargain holds. If they jump or crack, the city must stop until a new offering is made. The Ngomebe do not understand the bones; the Aelinnel do not fully explain. They only say: “The fae love games. We gave them one they cannot solve. That is our art.”

What you notice first: The scent of salt and copper. The constant, soft rattle of bones in a leather pouch. The way every Aelinnel wears a small brass gear on a chain — the gear of a forgotten clock, still warm.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never touch the bones before dawn. The pattern is sacred to the pact. A foreign hand can break the covenant — and a broken covenant means the city sinks.

The Bone-Spinner’s Art. Each Aelinnel coastal clan maintains a single set of knucklebones, carved from the fossilised joint of a beast that died in the old empire. The bones are kept in a silver bowl filled with seawater. At dawn, the Bone-Spinner reaches into the bowl, draws the bones, and casts them onto a woven mat. The pattern is interpreted not by sight but by sound: the click of each bone against the mat creates a rhythm. If the rhythm matches the city’s heartbeat, the day is safe. If the rhythm is off, a spirit must be placated — often with a memory, a lock of hair, or a small carved gear.

The Ngomebe have learned to listen for the Bone-Spinner’s announcement: one bell for safe, two bells for caution, three bells for “the city will stop before noon, and we must roll again.” Four bells have never rung.

Fae Bargain, Coastal Price. The Aelinnel of the coast do not live inside the walking cities. They keep to their sea-caves and watchtowers, maintaining the wards that line the city’s routes. In exchange for the pact, the Ngomebe provide iron, salt, and protection from lowland raiders. But the Aelinnel are not servants — they are partners in a debt older than memory. The fae who hold the covenant are called the Stone-Singers, and they speak only to the Bone-Spinner. No Ngomebe has ever seen one. Some say the Stone-Singers are the ghosts of the first Aelinnel who made the bargain; others say they are the bones themselves.

Spades — Aelinnel Coastal Places (d6)

2. Tide-Vein Cave — A sea-cavern where the walls are scored with spiral grooves. The grooves are old calendars. Each spiral is a year the city did not sink. ‘[RITUAL]’
3. Bone-Spinner’s Mat — A woven circle of sea-grass, stained with brine. The mat has no pattern, but the bones remember where they fell. Touch it, and you may hear the echo of a failed throw. ‘[ORACLE]’
4. Gear-Hoard Grotto — A low cave filled with broken clocks, brass wheels, and ticking shadows. The gears were offerings to the Stone-Singers. They still move, even without power. ‘[CRAFT]’
5. Watchtower of the Third Bell — A stone spire on a cliff, facing the city’s path. The tower has no stairs. The Aelinnel climb the outside. They say the fae hate doorways. ‘[WATCH]’
6. Sunken Clock — An ancient mechanism half-buried in the tidal flats, its face pointing to the horizon. The clock’s hands move with the city’s pace. When they stop, so does the bargain. ‘[MYSTERY]’
7. The Ninth Bone’s Rest — A small, sealed alcove behind the Bone-Spinner’s hut. Inside lies the bone that never falls — a knucklebone that cracked on the day the city first walked. The hollow is warm. ‘[DEATH]’

Hearts — Aelinnel People (d6)

2. Bone-Spinner — The clan’s oracle, always carrying a leather pouch. She has not slept through a dawn in forty years. The bones talk to her in her dreams. ‘[ORACLE]’
3. Gear-Mender — A gnome with brass fingertips, forever repairing old clocks. He has never seen the inside of a walking city. He prefers the ticking of the tide. ‘[CRAFT]’
4. Tide-Watcher — A young gnome who reads the city’s speed in the foam. She is the Bone-Spinner’s apprentice. Her hearing is so sharp she can hear the bones click from a mile away. ‘[SCOUT]’
5. Stone-Singer’s Emissary — A gnome who has spoken with the fae once and survived. Her left eye is a polished gear. She sees the rhythm of the pact in the movement of clouds. ‘[MYSTIC]’
6. Debt-Knotter — A gnome who ties red thread around the city’s anchor stones. Each knot is a promise to the Stone-Singers. She has never untied one. ‘[JUSTICE]’
7. The Silent Gear — An ancient gnome who no longer speaks, only winds clocks. When he stops winding, the city will stop moving. He has not stopped in nine years. ‘[OMEN]’

Clubs — Aelinnel Complications (d6)

2. Bones Fall Silent — At dawn, the knucklebones make no sound. The mat is still. The Stone-Singers are listening. The party must find an offering of a forgotten promise before the city reaches the next ridge. ‘[DEBT]’

3. Gear Seizure — A clock in the Sunken Clock stops. The city slows. The gear is rusted with salt from a sea-cave where a Ngomebe oath was broken. The Aelinnel need someone to recover the broken half. ‘[TRAP]’
4. Third Bell Rings at Noon — The Bone-Spinner calls for an emergency roll. The fae are restless. A stranger in the party has touched the bones. The penalty is a memory — or a finger. ‘[FEAR]’
5. Tide-Vein Floods — The sea-cave where the calendars are carved fills with water. The grooves are washing away. If they vanish, the pact forgets its own terms. The Aelinnel need divers to re-carve the year count. ‘[DISASTER]’
6. Gear-Hoard Thief — A foreign merchant steals a brass gear from the grotto. The gears are offerings. Without them, the Stone-Singers may demand a life. The party must track the thief across the savannah. ‘[THEFT]’
7. Stone-Singer Speaks — The fae manifest as a voice in the salt foam, demanding a new clause. The clause is impossible: “The city must roll a ninth bone on the next new moon, or the hollow walks.” The Bone-Spinner offers the party a way to forge a false bone. ‘[LEGEND]’

Diamonds — Aelinnel Rewards (d6)

2. Bone-Spinner’s Knucklebone (Spare) — A carved fossil bone that can be rolled once as a substitute. Roll it to reroll any failed test involving fate, omen, or pact — but the bone may crack. ‘[MAGIC]’
3. Gear-Wound Compass — A brass compass whose needle points to the nearest walking city. The needle spins when the bargain is in danger. The gear must be wound each dawn. ‘[TRAVEL]’
4. Tide-Knot Thread — A length of red wool that never tangles. Tie it around a stone to mark a place where a promise was kept. The stone will remember. ‘[JUSTICE]’
5. Clockwork Lullaby — A small music box that plays a rhythm the fae recognise. Wind it to calm a restless spirit or to buy a single breath of safe passage. The tune fades after one use. ‘[RITUAL]’
6. Stone-Singer’s Echo — A hollow shell that whispers in a language older than the cities. Whisper a question into the shell; the echo will answer in a single word. The word is always a condition. ‘[ORACLE]’
7. The Ninth Bone (Forged) — A false knucklebone carved from sea-glass and a stolen memory. Use it to substitute for a failed dawn roll once. The hollow will know, but it may accept — if the memory was bitter enough. ‘[LEGEND]’

Adventure Seed: The Broken Roll At dawn, the Bone-Spinner casts the bones. They land in a pattern no one has ever seen: a cross and a circle and a crack. The third bell rings. The city stops. The Stone-Singers demand a new clause: “One of your company must roll a bone every hour until the sun sets. If any roll is false — a single click off — the hollow takes them.” The party must keep moving, keep rolling, and discover why the pact was broken: a Ngomebe child found an old bone on the savannah and kept it as a toy. The child’s forgotten promise is the only thing that can reset the covenant. The Aelinnel offer a reward: one knot untied, one debt forgiven.

Chapter 21

Taharka

The Monsoon Crown.

The passes remember every army that tried to climb them. The mountains do not forgive haste, and they do not forget a foreign banner. We do not guard the highlands. We listen to them. They tell us who to let through.

I am a Horse Trader. Before you praise the rider, praise the horse. Before you praise the horse, praise the mountain that grew its lungs. A Taharkan foal is born breathing thin air. That is why our cavalry has never been broken.

Taharka grows rich on monsoon trade—spices, coffee, and incense that travel east to the distant ocean and west to the Gulf. The kingdom has never been conquered; its passes are a graveyard for Ashaani armies and a barrier that Oshiiran grain barges cannot cross. The highlands are a fortress of rock and thin air, where every valley speaks a different dialect and every ridge has a watchtower. But here's the secret the Crown Council doesn't want you to know: the passes are alive. They have a memory. They remember every army that tried to climb them, every foreign banner that flew too high, every oath that was broken at the summit. And they do not forgive.

The Ridge-Watchers are the eyes of the kingdom, stationed in rock-chapels that double as signal towers. The horse is not a mount; it is a lineage, a treaty, a weapon. To control the highland breeds is to control the passes—and to control the passes is to remain free. The lowland coast operates under a different law: the ujamaa of the dhows, a mutual aid network where every captain owes a share of every voyage to the community. A captain who cheats the ujamaa finds his ship's name struck from every mooring post in the archipelago.

Never refuse a second cup of tea. The first is hospitality; the second is a test of honour. The third is a promise. Refuse the second, and you have insulted the house—and the house's ancestors, who are listening through the floorboards.

— Ridge-Watcher Captain Anwar, who has not descended below the snow line in twenty years

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Barley flatbread and spiced tea—the bread is baked on iron griddles, the tea is brewed with cardamom and mountain herbs. The herbs are harvested from passes that only the Ridge-Watchers know. The Ridge-Watchers do not share.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To read the wind. Taharkan children are taught the eight winds by name: North, South, East, West, Monsoon, Dry, Storm, and the ninth—the wind that has no name. The ninth wind is the mountain's breath. The mountain's breath is death.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their breath. The air is thin in Taharka. A stranger who breathes too fast has not acclimated. A stranger who breathes too slow is hiding something. A stranger who does not breathe at all is a spirit. The spirits are not to be spoken to.

What is the most common crime? Horse theft—but horse theft is not a crime, it is a declaration of war. The horse is the kingdom's bloodline. A stolen horse is a stolen ancestor. The thief's clan is responsible. The clan pays in blood or in trade. The trade is never enough. The blood is always too much.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Crown Council has not met in ten years. The passes have been closed by snow, by war, by the simple fact that the councillors cannot agree on a meeting place. The kingdom is ruled by the Ridge-Watchers. The Ridge-Watchers are not elected. The Ridge-Watchers are the mountains' voice. The mountains are silent.

Where do people go when they die? To the high passes. The dead are laid on stone platforms, wrapped in woollen shrouds. The wind takes them. The wind carries their names to the peaks. The peaks remember. The peaks are the kingdom's cemetery.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a horse—the best horse in your stable. The horse is given to the wronged party. If they accept, the debt is paid. If they refuse, the debt is doubled. If they kill the horse, the debt is blood. Blood is never repaid.

What is the most important festival? The First Rain (monsoon's arrival). The passes open for the first time in months. The caravans descend from the highlands. The lowland ports receive the first spice ships. The celebration lasts nine days. The ninth day is silent. The silence is for the dead of the passes.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Crown Council's missing member is not missing. He is buried under a landslide that was not an accident. The landslide was caused by the Ridge-Watchers. The councillor had learned the passes' secret: they are not natural. They were carved by something older. The something is still there. The Ridge-Watchers are its servants.

21.1 Taharka — “The Monsoon Crown”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The mountain listens. The horse remembers. The monsoon keeps the ledger.

Ridge-Watcher Captain (Elite): “The passes remember every army that tried to climb them. The mountains do not forgive haste, and they do not forget a foreign banner. We do not guard the highlands. We listen to them. They tell us who to let through.”

Horse Trader (Commoner): “Before you praise the rider, praise the horse. Before you praise the horse, praise the mountain that grew its lungs. A Taharkan foal is born breathing thin air. That is why our cavalry has never been broken. The monsoon gives us wind; the horse gives us wings.”

Genre / Mood: Monsoon trade, highland fortresses, spirit-ridden passes, oral law.

Starting Location: A rock-chapel at the head of the Silver Pass, where the air is cold and the wind smells of snow. A Ridge-Watcher captain blows a horn of ibex horn: “The Crown Council has declared a muster. The passes are closing to all foreign traffic. You have until dusk to declare your business — or turn back. The shetani are restless. They taste fear on the wind.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Taharka grows rich on monsoon trade — spices, coffee, and frankincense that travel east to the distant ocean and west to the Gulf. The kingdom has never been conquered; its passes are a graveyard for Ashaani armies and a barrier that Oshiiran grain barges cannot cross. The highlands are a fortress of rock and thin air, where every valley speaks a different dialect and every ridge has a watchtower. On the coast, the monsoon winds bring dhows from Dhahara, Ayokha, and the eastern isles, and a trade creole — a blend of Bantu, Arabic, and Cushitic tongues — has grown from a dozen voices, the language of the wharves where a merchant can bargain in verse and a captain can curse in seven accents. The old spirits — the shetani — live in springs, baobabs, and the bones of ancestors. The popobawa hunts at the dark of the moon. The ngoma drums speak faster than horns. And the passes themselves are alive, breathing with the memory of every army that froze or fell.

What you notice first: The smell of roasting coffee and frankincense. The way the air thins as you climb, until each breath is a measured gift. The constant lowing of pack mules on terraced paths.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never refuse a second cup of tea. The first is hospitality; the second is a test of honour; the third is a promise. Refuse the second, and you have insulted the house — and the house’s ancestors, who are listening through the floorboards.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Pass

Power here is measured in passes, horse lines, and the favour of the monsoon. The Crown Council rules from the high plateau, but each valley has its own lord, each pass its own toll-keeper. The Ridge-Watchers are the eyes of the kingdom, stationed in rock-chapels that double as signal towers. The horse is not a mount; it is a lineage, a treaty, a weapon. To control the highland breeds is to control the passes — and to control the passes is to remain free. The lowland coast operates under a different law: the ujamaa of the dhows, a mutual aid network where every captain owes a share of every voyage to the community. A captain who cheats the ujamaa finds his ship's name struck from every mooring post in the archipelago.

3. Horse Sickness — A cough spreads through the stables. All mounts lose 1 Speed. ‘[DISEASE]’ The sickness came from a Dhaharan ship. The captain is a spy. The horses cough in a rhythm that spells a warning.
4. King Assassinated — The Crown Council declares a succession crisis. All passes close. ‘[POLITICS]’ The assassin was a horse. The horse was poisoned. The poison was in the coffee. The horse is still alive. It will not speak.
5. Ashaani Raiders (Disguised) — A caravan of “merchants” is actually a Veiled Sister’s scout team. ‘[SPY]’ They wear Taharkan dress but do not remove their shoes indoors. The innkeeper noticed. She poured them a fourth cup — a curse.

6. Coffee Blight — A fungus attacks the terraces. Prices triple. Starvation looms. '[DISASTER]'
The blight was spread by a trader from the coast. The trader's ship flew no flag. The fungus writes names on the leaves.
7. Monsoon Delay — The winds shift. The first ships are three weeks late. '[WEATHER]'
The delay was predicted by the astrologer. He warned the Crown. The Crown did not listen. The astrologer has stopped speaking.
8. Spice Warehouse Fire — A stack of cinnamon ignites. The whole wharf is at risk. '[DISASTER]'
The fire was set by a rival House. The House has a monopoly on pepper. The smoke smells of cloves. Cloves do not burn.
9. Trade Creole Dispute — A contract is voided because of a mistranslated word. '[SOCIAL]' '[DEBT]'
The word means "shipment" in one dialect and "hostage" in another. The merchant knew. The hostage is the party's ally.
10. Ridge-Watcher Betrayal — A captain sells the pass schedule to an Ashaani agent. '[SPY]' '[DEBT]'
The captain's daughter is a spirit-broken slave in Galanina. He had no choice. He carved her name into every stone of the pass.
- J The Pass Ghost's Warning — The ghost points at a traveller. The traveller will die before sunset. '[DEATH]' '[OMEN]'
The traveller is a party member. The ghost is pointing at a shadow, not a person. The shadow is not theirs.
- Q Crown Council Schism — The nine lords cannot agree on a successor. Civil war looms. '[POLITICS]'
The ninth lord is a child. The child speaks only the trade creole. No one understands. The child's nanny is the only interpreter. She is not neutral.
- K Horse Line Extinction — A plague kills the last mare of the royal bloodline. '[DEATH]' '[LEGEND]'
The mare's foal was stolen by a rival kingdom. The foal is in a Dhaharan stable. The mare's ghost runs the passes every night, looking for it.
- A Shetani Rising — The old spirits wake from the baobab groves. They demand a reckoning. '[MAGIC]' '[FEAR]'
A traveller broke a taboo — they counted to nine near a spirit tree. The shetani want a story that ends with eight. Tell one, or pay in blood.

(Bond/Stone/Pass) Horse-bond — a foal promised (future String); pass-stone — crossing a high pass at half toll; coffee measure — trade goods at +1 Position for one scene.

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Horse-Bond (Promised Foal) — A future String. The foal has not yet been born. '[COMMUNITY]'
The bond is a braid of horsehair. Wear it, and the mare will remember you. When the foal is born, you will be its first rider.
3. Pass-Stone — A carved token. Cross any high pass at half toll. '[TRAVEL]'
The stone is a piece of the Pass Ghost's staff. It is cold to the touch. It warms when a storm is coming.
4. Coffee Measure (Royal Seal) — A clay cup. Trade goods at +1 Position for one scene. '[TRADE]'
The cup was used by the king. He drank from it once. The crack is from his tooth. He still has the tooth. It is set in a ring.
5. Ridge-Watcher's Horn — Blow it to summon a guide from the nearest tower. '[TRAVEL]'
The horn is made from an ibex that the captain killed with a single arrow. The ibex's ghost will lead you — if you give it a story.
6. Spice House Letter of Credit — 5 Measures of trade value, redeemable at any coast warehouse. ‘[TRADE]’ The letter is sealed with cinnamon oil. The seal smells of betrayal. It also smells of profit.

7. Crown Council Verdict — A ruling in your favour on any border dispute. ‘[JUSTICE]’ The verdict is carved on a slate tile. The tile is also a signal flag. Show it to a Ridge-Watcher, and they will argue for you.
 8. Monsoon Schedule (Astrologer’s Copy) — Predicts safe sailing days for the next season. ‘[WEATHER]’ The schedule is written on a dried spiderweb. The web was the astrologer’s pet. It must be kept in a jar. If it breaks, the predictions invert.
 9. Trade Creole Phrasebook — Gain +1 die to all social rolls on the coast for one journey. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The phrasebook is a string of knots. Each knot is a curse. The curses are useful. The blessings are not.
 10. Horse Lord’s Favour — One foal from the royal stables, delivered in a year. ‘[COMMUNITY]’ The favour is a single white hair from the stallion’s tail. The stallion is dead. The hair is still warm.
- J Pass Ghost’s Pointing — One safe route through any high pass, guaranteed. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The ghost writes the route in frost on a rock. The frost melts at noon. You must memorise it before then.
- Q The Astrologer’s Spider — A jarred spider that pulses with the monsoon’s heartbeat. ‘[MAGIC]’ Once per campaign, consult the spider to predict a storm with perfect accuracy. The spider will answer. It will also ask a question. The question is always personal.
- K The Ninth Heir’s Seal — A bone thumbprint. Commands loyalty from the exiled prince’s network. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The seal is also a key. It opens a lock in the Crown Council Hall. The lock is the ninth door. The door leads to a room with no floor.
- A The King’s Blessing — A royal decree written in trade creole. One national favour. ‘[LEGEND]’ The decree is written on a horse’s hoof. The hoof was the king’s favourite mount. The king still weeps when he sees it.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (bonds, stones, measures) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo monsoon-omens—horses that speak in riddles, coffee that tastes of snow, a pass that closes behind you, a spider that weaves the future into its web.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Ridge-Watcher Signals: A network of signal towers on every peak. A fire, a mirror, or a horn can send a message across the entire kingdom in a day. The Ridge-Watchers are neutral in Crown politics; they serve only the passes. A character who spends an action to light a signal fire may reduce the next weather hazard by 1 segment, but the fire also attracts shetani (GM gains 1 SB).
- Ujamaa of the Dhows (Mutual Aid): Along the coast, every captain owes a share of every voyage to the community. A character who contributes to the ujamaa (by sharing cargo, repairing a dock, or telling a true story) gains a Community Favour token. Spend it to reroll a failed social roll with any coastal merchant or captain. Hoarding wealth without contributing, however, gives the GM 1 SB per session as the community closes ranks.

- Shetani Taboos: The old spirits — shetani — live in springs, baobabs, and the bones of ancestors. Breaking a taboo (counting to nine near a spirit tree, refusing a cup of tea, wearing shoes in a shrine) draws their attention. The GM may then spend 2 SB to have a shetani appear and demand a story that ends with the number eight. A good story pacifies the spirit; a poor one curses the offender with Shetani's Mark (–1 die on all rolls until they make an offering of honey and blood).
- Horse Lineage as Leverage: Every highland horse belongs to a lineage that traces back to a legendary stallion. Knowing a horse's lineage gives +1 die on social rolls with its owner. A character who can recite the lineage of a horse from memory may treat the horse as a temporary ally (Cap 2) for one scene. Forging a lineage is a capital crime — the Crown Council has executed three forgers in the last decade.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - Mzimu wa Kwanza (The First Spirit) — The Witness. The ancestor who remembers every oath, every betrayal, every cup of tea refused.
 - Bwana wa Nyasi (Lord of the Grass) — The Traveler. The wind that guides the monsoon dhows and the rider lost in the high passes.
 - Shetani wa Tisa (The Shetani of Nine) — The Ninth. The spirit that lives in the missing step, the uncounted wave, the breath after eight.
 - Bibi wa Kahawa (Grandmother of Coffee) — Inaea. The web of trade that binds coast to highlands, merchant to farmer, dhow to mule.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Monsoon Trade (Dhahara/Ayokha): Taharka's spice and coffee travel east on the monsoon winds, reaching the Dhaharan coast and the Ayokhan river markets. A delay in Taharka means famine in a dozen ports. The dhows are blessed by Bibi wa Kahawa; a captain who breaks the blessing finds his ship becalmed for nine days.
- The Pass Ghost and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The Pass Ghost (Liyel) is a spirit of the threshold — a border between living and dead. The Aelaerem say it is a cousin to the Hollow, bound by an oath to the first king. If you see it point at you, you have one day to settle your debts. The Hollow collects the rest.
- Ashaani Spies and the Veiled Sisters (Ashaan): Ashaani agents often pose as spice merchants. The Ridge-Watchers have learned to test them by offering tea — a foreigner who does not know the ritual of three cups reveals themselves. The Veiled Sisters have begun sending agents who have studied the ritual. The Ridge-Watchers are now testing with a fourth cup — the silence cup.
- The Ninth Heir and the Kalrantha Amulet (Dhahara): The exiled prince is rumoured to have bought his horse from a Dhaharan smuggler — a horse that carried a certain green glass amulet. The Crown Council wants to know where the amulet is now. The prince says he sold it for a pass-stone. The pass-stone is now in the hand of the Astrologer.

Taharka Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Pass: Crumble a crust at the highest point of the pass. Ignore the first Landslide Block penalty. '[SUPERSTITION]'

- Knot the Horse’s Tail: Tie a single knot in a horse’s tail hair. Cancel Horse Sickness or take –1 die on your next riding roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Coffee: Whisper a dead Ridge-Watcher’s name into a coffee cup. Gain +1 Effect when negotiating passage this scene, but mark Obligation to the Crown. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from Ridge-Watchers or Crown Council envoys.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby horse guards or spice warehouse clerks.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for pass guides or rival horse traders.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favourable monsoon window.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Local Ridge-Watcher captain or Spice House factor becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to landslide or fog.
- Foe Appears: A rival horse lord or Ashaani agent arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

- Reinforcements: Additional Ridge-Watchers, Crown guards, or spice house enforcers arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.

- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: Crown Council, the Astrologer, or the Pass Ghost intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically—avalanche buries the pass/monsoon surf floods the wharf/coffee terraces catch fire.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice—omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Taharka (Highlands): Pass stones glow faintly, horse bells ring without wind, snow falls upward.

- Taharka (Coast): Monsoon winds carry whispers, spice dust forms faces, the trade creole sprouts new words unbidden.
- Taharka (Spirit Law): A shetani laughs from a baobab, a coffee cup cracks, a spider weaves a question into its web.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Survival): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Thin Air.
- Cut the Pass (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a pass-stone is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Monsoon (Resolve + Sail): On a hit in Monsoon Delay, you pick which ships dock; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Horse, Monsoon & Shetani)

- The Horse-Line Thief (Nine Bloodlines) — Phases: Foal Thefts → Orchestrated Plague → Stable Coup. Cracks: recover a stolen foal, expose a false lineage, survive a stampede.
- The Monsoon-Breaker (Storm That Stalls) — Phases: Delayed Ships → Procession of Empty Wharves → Famine Baptism of a Merchant. Cracks: relic monsoon schedule, survivor testimony, the wind turning against them.
- The Shetani of the Ninth Pass (Spirit of the Miscount) — Phases: Miscount Whispers → Stone Slides → Pass Feast. Cracks: recite a counting song that ends at eight, offer a honey-and-blood sacrifice at the Pass Ghost's cairn, survive a night on the mountain without fire.

Patronage & Power

Among the Taharka, power flows through passes, horse lines, and the favour of the monsoon. The Crown Council rules by consensus, but each valley lord commands his own Ridge-Watchers. The spice merchants of the coast operate independently, paying tariffs to the Crown but answering to no single lord. The ujamaa of the dhows is a parallel economy of mutual aid — a captain who cheats it finds his name erased from every mooring post.

For the GM: Power in Taharkan society is measured in altitude and access. Patronage often takes the form of pass-stones, horse-bonds, or coffee measures — each tied to a specific valley, bloodline, or trade route. To emphasize the East African flavour:

- Tie rewards to physical tokens (carved stone, braided hair, clay cups) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided.
- Let rival lords issue conflicting pass-rights, forcing players to choose whose path to follow.
- Use the rock-chapels, horse cemeteries, and monsoon wharves as arenas for social contests, where hospitality is law and a cup of tea is a contract.
- Introduce shetani as recurring obstacles — they are not enemies but creditors of a different kind, demanding stories rather than silver.

In Taharkan society, the mountain remembers every step — and the horse remembers every rider. The shetani remember every miscount.

21.1.1 Aelaerem of the Southern Hills

“They are small, but the mountain does not crush them. They walk where the passes forget their names, and the coffee they trade tastes of mist and memory. Never refuse a cup — the first is hospitality, the second is a test, and the ninth cup is for the hollow that lives under the hill. They pour eight and leave the ninth empty. So should you.”

Quick Reference Tagline: Small hands, old debts. The hill remembers every footstep.

Genre / Mood: Pastoral highland folk, hospitality traps, mist-veiled pygmy clans.

Who They Are. In the high passes of southern Taharka, where the air thins and the coffee terraces climb into the clouds, live the Aelaerem of the Southern Hills — a pygmy halfling people who were ancient in these mountains before the first Taharkan king raised his banner. They keep to the upper slopes, tending terraced groves of wild coffee, shepherding shaggy mountain goats, and weaving red thread through the antlers of the passes. Outsiders call them hill-kin or cloud-tenders; they call themselves the remembered, because every stone on every cairn has a name, and they are the ones who still speak them.

The Aelaerem have no king, no capital. Their courts are the circle of standing stones at a mountain spring; their law is the counting of cups and the tying of knots. They trade coffee, mountain herbs, and old tales with Taharkan caravans, but they do not trust the lowlands — and the lowlands have learned to respect the ninth cup.

What you notice first: The smell of roasting coffee and damp moss. The way every threshold of their felt and stone huts has a red thread tied at eye level. The silence when a stranger approaches — and the sudden song when a child decides you are welcome.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never refuse a second cup of coffee. The first is welcome; the second is a test of honour; the third is a contract. Refuse the second, and you have insulted the house — and the house’s ancestors, who are listening through the floorboards. And never, ever pour the ninth cup.

The Ninth Cup in the Highlands. Among the Taharkan Aelaerem, the rite of the ninth cup is subtle: at any feast or negotiation, eight cups are poured. The ninth cup is left empty on the table, facing the door. It is for the Hollow — the presence that walks the high passes when the mist rolls down. If a stranger pours the ninth cup, the Hollow will drink, and the stranger will owe a debt. If the stranger drinks the ninth cup themselves, they have invited the Hollow to sit beside them. The Aelaerem will not intervene. The Hollow is patient.

Coffee Knots. Aelaerem coffee is famous across Taharka, but it is never sold for coin. It is bartered for stories, for promises, for red thread that will be tied around a debtor’s wrist. A bag of highland beans comes with a knot — a debt recorded in wool. The knot is cut when the promise is kept. Until then, the debtor can feel it tighten when they sleep.

7. The Hollow’s Cup — An empty ceramic cup, warm to the touch. Set it on a threshold, and the Hollow will not cross for one night. After that, the Hollow will remember the favour. ‘[PROTECTION]’

Adventure Seed: The Ninth Cairn’s Debt A Stone-Speaker has stopped speaking. The ninth cairn is weeping water that tastes of salt and old blood. The Coffee Wife says a debt was called in — a promise made by a Taharkan prince to an Aelaerem chieftain, three generations ago. The prince’s descendant is in the party’s caravan, travelling in disguise. The Hollow walks the passes. The party must either:

- Find the original promise (hidden in a cairn under a stone that has not been moved in a century).
- Pay the debt in memory (a cherished recollection of a kindness, given to the Hollow at the ninth cairn).
- Or convince the Aelaerem to forgive the debt — which requires a story that moves the stones themselves.

The reward is the Coffee Wife’s blessing: a single red thread that can tie any two willing parties into a binding promise, enforceable by the mountain itself.

Chapter 22

Sekogo

The Green Council.

The jungle has an immune system. When a fever rises, we cut it out. When an oath is broken, we collect the price. We are not cruel. We are necessary. The tree remembers every unpaid debt, and we are its teeth.

I am a Honey-Gatherer. The bees know my name. They do not sting me because I sing to them the song of the first blossom. My grandmother taught me that the honey is not a gift; it is a loan. One day, the grove will ask for it back.

Sekogo lies between the Sahel grasslands and the southern plateau—a dry savannah that grows wetter as you travel east, until the baobabs give way to deep jungle and the air turns thick with the smell of damp earth and overripe fruit. Here, the Green Council rules through consensus, honey-orchards are sacred, and the old spirits still walk. Slavery is forbidden; the jungle itself would rise against any slaver who crossed its border. But here's the secret the Council doesn't want you to know: the jungle has a favourite. It is not the Conservators who protect the old pacts. It is not the Wakers who want to rouse the jungle with fever-mists and bloodier rites. It is the Ukwe—the Speaking Tree—that decides whose debts are collected and whose are forgiven. And the Ukwe does not answer to the Council.

The Leopard Society hunts those who break the deepest taboos. The Earth Society keeps the Calendar of Debt, a sacred list written on bark and buried at the Ukwe's roots. The nganga work with minkisi—power objects inhabited by spirits—hammering nails into carved figures to release magic. Each nail is a new debt to the spirit within. Trickster spirits—children of Ananse, the spider-trickster—weave illusions and swap debts for laughter. And in the oldest groves, the Ninki Nanka—a serpent with a mirror-back—slithers between roots, its reflection showing the lies you have told.

Never cut a marked tree. Each such tree is a living witness. The bark grows over the names of debtors, but the wood remembers. Cut it, and the Ukwe will add your name to its ledger.

— Hunter Okoro, Leopard Society mask-wearer, who never removes his mask

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Mashed yams and groundnut stew—the yams are grown in clearings that shift with the seasons, the groundnuts are harvested by monkey-tribes who speak the old tongue. The monkeys are not paid. The monkeys are remembered. Memory is currency.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To name the spirits. Sekogo children are taught the eight spirits of the grove: River, Tree, Stone, Rain, Fire, Wind, Honey, and the ninth—the spirit that has no name. The ninth spirit is the Ukwe's shadow. The shadow watches. The shadow never forgives.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their mask. Every Sekogo wears a mask—carved wood, painted with the symbols of their lineage. A stranger whose mask is cracked has broken a taboo. A stranger whose mask is blank has no lineage. A stranger with no mask is not a person. The Leopard Society hunts the maskless.

What is the most common crime? Debt-forgetting—but debt-forgetting is not a crime, it is a sickness. The Ukwe keeps the Calendar of Debt. A name that is forgotten is a debt that is unpaid. The unpaid debt grows roots. The roots strangle the debtor's house. The house collapses. The jungle reclaims it.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Green Council does not rule. The Ukwe rules. The Council is the Ukwe's voice—eight speakers chosen by the tree's roots. The ninth seat is empty. The ninth speaker was the tree itself. The tree does not speak. The tree waits.

Where do people go when they die? To the Ukwe's roots. The dead are not buried. Their bodies are laid at the base of the Speaking Tree. The roots absorb them. The tree grows a new leaf for each soul. The leaves whisper the names of the dead. The whisper is the wind.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You hammer a nail into a nkisi—a power figure carved by the nganga. The nail represents your wrong. The spirit inside the nkisi accepts your apology. The nail rusts. When the nail is gone, your debt is paid. The nail never rusts.

What is the most important festival? The Honey Harvest (autumn). The bees are sung to sleep. The hives are opened. The honey is collected in copper bowls. The first bowl is offered to the Ukwe. The tree drinks. The tree does not thank.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Ukwe is not a tree. It is a prison—the binding of a spirit that tried to consume the jungle nine centuries ago. The spirit is still alive. The tree is its cage. The roots are its chains. The Green Council is its jailers. The jailers have forgotten what they guard.

22.1 Sekogo — “The Green Council”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The jungle remembers every debt. The mask is the law. The honey is a promise.

Leopard Society Hunter (Elite): “The jungle has an immune system. When a fever rises, we cut it out. When an oath is broken, we collect the price. We are not cruel. We are necessary. The tree remembers every unpaid debt, and we are its teeth.”

Honey-Gatherer (Commoner): “The bees know my name. They do not sting me because I sing to them the song of the first blossom. My grandmother taught me that the honey is not a gift; it is a loan. One day, the grove will ask for it back.”

Genre / Mood: Afro-jungle folk horror, spirit diplomacy, mask-law.

Starting Location: A honey-orchard at the jungle’s edge, where the trees hum and the air is thick with bees. A masked figure in a leopard pelt steps from the shadows: “The Ukwe has asked for a name. A caravan master broke his oath to the grove. Find him before the roots do — or become his witness.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Sekogo lies between the Sahel grasslands and the southern plateau — a dry savannah that grows wetter as you travel east, until the baobabs give way to deep jungle and the air turns thick with the smell of damp earth and overripe fruit. Here, the Green Council rules through consensus, honey-orchards are sacred, and the old spirits still walk. Slavery is forbidden; the jungle itself would rise against any slaver who crossed its border. But the Council is divided: Conservators want to protect the old pacts, while Wakers argue that the jungle has grown sluggish and needs to be roused with fever-mists, thorn-spirits, and older, bloodier rites. At the eastern edge lies the Crimson Valley, home to the Lethai-ar — chestnut-brown elves whose silk bridges span red canyons and whose web-law keeps both empires from using the valley as a shortcut to war.

What you notice first: The sound of bees — a constant, low drone that never stops, even at night. The way the trees lean toward you when you speak a secret. The smell of honey and rotting fruit, sweet and sharp at once.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never cut a marked tree. Each such tree is a living witness. The bark grows over the names of debtors, but the wood remembers. Cut it, and the Ukwe will add your name to its ledger.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Root

Power here is measured in debts witnessed, honey tithes paid, and the balance between jungle and council. The Leopard Society hunts those who break the deepest taboos — oath-breakers, slavers, outsiders who take more than they give. The Earth Society keeps the Calendar of Debt, a sacred list written on bark and buried at the Ukwe’s roots. The nganga work with minkisi — power objects inhabited by spirits — hammering nails into carved figures to release magic, each nail a new debt to the spirit within. Trickster spirits — children of Ananse, the spider-trickster — weave illusions and swap debts for laughter. The water spirit Mami Wata dwells in the deep pools of the Crimson Falls, offering bargains to those who dare to meet her gaze. And in the oldest groves, the Ninki Nanka — a serpent with a mirror-back — slithers between roots, its reflection showing the lies you have told. At the eastern edge lies the Crimson Valley, home to the Lethai-ar — chestnut-brown elves whose silk bridges span red canyons and whose web-law keeps both empires from using the valley as a shortcut to war.

Starting Location: A honey-orchard at the jungle’s edge, where the trees hum and the air is thick with bees. A masked figure in a leopard pelt steps from the shadows: “The Ukwe has asked for a name. A caravan master broke his oath to the grove. Find him before the roots do — or become his witness.”

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (favors, debts, shards) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo grove-omens—bees that fly backward, roots that bleed sap, a mask that watches from the trees. If an A+ appears (special high-rank result), a spirit of the deep jungle (Mami Wata, Ananse’s Child, the Leopard King) manifests directly.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Three Societies: Sekogo is governed by three overlapping authorities: the Leopard Society (hunters who enforce taboos), the Earth Society (elders who keep the Calendar of Debt), and the nganga (spirit-doctors who work with minkisi). A single elder often belongs to two societies, and the tension between their roles is where drama lives.
- The Ukwe (Speaking Tree): A living ledger whose roots extend across Sekogo. Every broken promise, unpaid tithe, and unburied body stains its leaves. It answers questions — but never with kindness, and never for free. Accepting its gift incurs a debt that the tree may call at any moment.
- The Crimson Valley and Web-Law: The Lethai-ar guard the valley with fierce neutrality. Their skin-tattoos (Marks) record promises witnessed. When a Lethai-ar dies, their Marks are cut from the skin and buried at the Ukwe’s roots. The web-law is unwritten; each warden carries a different clause in memory.
- Mask Law: In Sekogo, a mask is not a disguise — it is a role. Wearing the mask of a Leopard Society hunter, a Waker, or a spirit entitles you to speak for that office, but also binds you to its taboos. Breaking a mask’s taboo (e.g., a Leopard mask showing mercy to a slayer) causes the mask to crack and the wearer to lose 1 die on all social rolls until they atone.
- Ananse’s Bargain (Trickster Mechanic): Once per session, a character may call upon Ananse’s Child to “renegotiate” any debt, oath, or contract. Roll Spirit + Lore (DV 4). On a success, the terms shift in your favour — but the GM gains 1 SB and may add a hidden clause that will trigger at the worst possible moment. On a miss, the debt doubles.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Root Father — Grimmir. The ancient pact between the jungle and the first honey-gatherer.

- The Masked One — Mykkiel. The law that wears a leopard’s face; the judge who hunts.
- The Spider’s Whisper — Inaea. The trickster who spins webs in the spaces between oaths.
- The Water Mother — Raéyn. Mami Wata, who holds the debts of the drowned.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Ukwe’s Debt and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The Hollow is said to be the shadow of the Ukwe — the space where debts go when the tree forgets them. Aelaerem hedge-keepers leave offerings at the Ukwe’s roots to keep the Hollow from wandering.
- Lethai-ar Silk and the Way of Silk: The silk bridges of the Crimson Valley are made from spider-sap and oath-hair. Tulkani traders prize the silk for vow-cords; Fhara water-clerks use it to seal well-contracts. A bolt of Crimson silk can buy safe passage across half the continent.
- Leopard Society and Ashaani Slavers: The Leopard Society has a standing grudge against Ashaani slavers. A masked hunter may offer the party a deal: help free a group of captives from a Black Hand caravan, and the Society will forget an old debt.
- Nganga and the Kalrantha Amulet (Dhahara): The nganga of Sekogo believe the Kalrantha amulet is a rogue nkisi — a spirit-object that was never properly sealed. They want to drive a nail into it to bind the demon. The Veiled Sisters want the amulet for themselves.
- Ananse’s Child and the Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire: The trickster spirit is known to trade fragments of forgotten prophecies for stories. Some psions claim that Ananse’s Child taught the first Echo-Readers the art of reading debts in the wind.

Sekogo Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Root: Crumble a crust at the Ukwe’s base. Ignore the first Ukwe Demands a Name penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Silk: Tie a single knot in a Lethai-ar bridge cord. Cancel Web-Law Challenge or take –1 die on your next negotiation (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Nail: Whisper a dead nganga’s name into a nkisi. Gain +1 Effect when using a spirit-object this scene, but mark Obligation to the Ukwe. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Spit to the Mask: Before donning a ceremonial mask, spit on the inside. If the mask accepts, you gain +1 die to all rolls while wearing it. If it rejects, the mask will not come off for 1d4 hours. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from Leopard Society hunters or Earth Society elders.

- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: Leopard King, Ukwe's Voice, or Crimson Valley First Weaver intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically—nkisi shatter/honey turns to blood/Ukwe's root breaches the ground.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice—omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Sekogo (Jungle Law): Bees form words, tree bark weeps sap, the Ukwe's root trembles.
- Sekogo (Crimson Valley): Silk cords tighten, canyon walls bleed rust, the web-law recites itself.
- Sekogo (Society Conflict): Masks shift expressions, bark strips burn without flame, a ninth nail appears in every nkisi.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Survival): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Thorn Wall.
- Cut the Web (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a silk cord is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Hunt (Resolve + Spirit): On a hit in Leopard Society Hunt, you pick who is targeted; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Root & Mask)

- The Root-King (Nine Debts) — Phases: Debt Calls → Orchestrated Famine → Grove Coup. Cracks: burn a bark strip, expose a false debt, survive a harvest without honey.
- The Mask that Walks (Leopard’s Shadow) — Phases: Midnight Hunts → Procession of Masks → Skin-Baptism of a Warden. Cracks: relic leopard claw, survivor testimony, the mask turning against them.
- Mami Wata’s Wrath (Water Spirit) — Phases: Pool Rises → Crimson Falls Reversed → Debt of the Drowned. Cracks: offer a true memory of loss, speak the name of a slaver ship she sank, return a stolen mirror to her pool.

Patronage & Power

Among Sekogo, power flows through debts, honey, and the consent of the jungle. The Green Council rules by consensus, but the Leopard Society enforces taboos, the Earth Society keeps the Calendar, and the nganga negotiate with spirits. No single faction holds all the power — and that is by design.

For the GM: Power in Sekogo society is measured in unpaid obligations and witnessed promises. Patronage often takes the form of favors, debts, or shards — each carrying a future price. To emphasize this:

- Tie rewards to objects that create obligations (leopard claws, Ukwé leaves, nkisi shards) that can be called in at inconvenient moments.
- Let rival societies offer conflicting judgments, forcing players to choose whose law to follow.
- Use the honey-orchards, druid circles, and silk bridges as arenas for social contests, where a gift of honey is a treaty and a broken promise is a death sentence.
- Introduce trickster spirits (Ananse’s Child) to complicate simple debt resolutions — they are excellent wild cards.
- Remember that Mami Wata is not evil; she is ancient. She collects memories, not lives. A bargain with her may be the only way to escape a blood-debt.

In Sekogo society, the jungle remembers everything — and the Ukwé forgets nothing.

Chapter 23

Lethai-ar of the Crimson Valley

Silk Bridges and Web-Law.

The web-law is not written on parchment. It is woven into every bridge, every strand, every knot. When a promise is made, the valley remembers. When a promise is broken, the silk tightens. We are not judges. We are the loom.

I am a Mark-Cutter. Each line on my skin is a promise I witnessed. Each line is a debt I carry. When I die, they will cut these marks from my body and bury them at the Ukwe's roots. Then the tree will remember what I owed. I hope it is enough.

The Crimson Valley is a deep jungle rift between Sekogo and Oshiira—a wound of red stone, carved by a river that runs rust-coloured after every rain. Here, the Lethai-ar guard their borders with fierce neutrality, their chestnut-brown skin blending with the canyon walls. Silk bridges span the gorges, woven from spider-sap and oath-hair, strong enough to hold a caravan and light enough to sway in the monsoon wind. But here's the secret the wardens don't want you to know: the web-law is not unwritten because it is ancient. It is unwritten because it changes. Every warden carries a different clause in memory. Together, they form a complete web—but the web is never complete for long. The valley is learning. And it is not learning to be kind.

The Lethai-ar are adopted children of the old powers—not fallen, but chosen to carry memory. Each can name the specific mountain, river, or grove where their ancestor left the spirit world to become mortal. Their skin-tattoos are not decoration; they are a public ledger, written on skin, read by anyone who knows the phase of the crimson moon. A Lethai-ar who bears a Mark they cannot fulfil loses standing. A warden who cuts a bridge without cause is exiled.

Never step onto a silk bridge without first naming a witness. The bridge will remember your footsteps. If you fall, it will ask why no one was watching.

— Silk-Warden Anara, whose left arm is covered in Marks from wrist to shoulder

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Rice porridge and fermented tea—the rice is grown on terraces cut into the canyon walls, the tea is aged in clay pots buried beneath the bridges. The tea is bitter. The bitterness is for memory.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To read a Mark. Lethai-ar children are taught the eight Mark-shapes: Promise, Debt, Witness, Apology, Interest, Cut, Forgive, and the ninth—the empty space where a Mark was erased. The erased Mark is a broken promise. The broken promise is a cut. The cut is a scar.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their Marks. A stranger whose Marks are fresh has made new promises. A stranger whose Marks are faded has unpaid debts. A stranger whose Marks are cut has been exiled. The exiled are not spoken to. The exiled are not remembered.

What is the most common crime? Bridge-cutting—but bridge-cutting is not a crime, it is a war. The bridge is a promise between two shores. Cutting it is breaking that promise. The valley responds. The valley tightens its web. The web is the law. The law is the valley.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The valley is not a place. It is a creature—a sleeping serpent whose spine is the canyon walls, whose scales are the silk bridges, whose heart is the rust-coloured river. The Lethai-ar are its parasites. They live on its back. They weave its silk. They do not know it is asleep.

Where do people go when they die? To the river. The dead are not buried. Their bodies are wrapped in silk and cast into the rust-coloured water. The river carries them downstream, into the Ukwe's territory. The Ukwe drinks. The Ukwe remembers. The Ukwe does not forget.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a Mark—a promise cut from your own skin. The Mark is pressed into the wronged party's ledger. If they accept, the debt is transferred. If they refuse, the Mark is buried. Buried Marks are debts that never die.

What is the most important festival? The Weaving of the New Bridge (spring). The silk is harvested from the canyon's spiders. The thread is spun by the wardens. The bridge is woven in a single night. The bridge is named after the year. The year is named after a promise. The promise is always the same: the valley will hold.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The river's rust colour is not iron. It is blood—the blood of the serpent that sleeps beneath the canyon. The serpent is wounded. The wound has been bleeding for nine centuries. The Lethai-ar know. The Lethai-ar do nothing. The serpent's dream is the valley's law. If the serpent wakes, the law ends.

23.1 Lethai-ar — “The Crimson Valley”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The bridge remembers every step. The silk knows every promise.

Silk-Warden (Elite): “The web-law is not written on parchment. It is woven into every bridge, every strand, every knot. When a promise is made, the valley remembers. When a promise is broken, the silk tightens. We are not judges. We are the loom.”

Mark-Cutter (Commoner): “Each line on my skin is a promise I witnessed. Each line is a story I carry. When I die, they will cut these marks from my body and bury them at the Ukwe’s roots. Then the tree will remember what I witnessed. I hope it is enough.”

Genre / Mood: High-fantasy legal drama, spider-silk noir, ancestral witness.

Starting Location: The central silk bridge, where the gorge is deepest and the wind carries the smell of rust. A Silk-Warden blocks your path, her mask painted with roots: “The web-law demands a toll. Not in coin — in a promise. Swear that you will not use this valley to carry steel to Ashaan, or turn back now.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Crimson Valley is a deep jungle rift between Sekogo and Oshiira — a wound of red stone, carved by a river that runs rust-colored after every rain. Here, the Lethai-ar guard their borders with fierce neutrality, their chestnut-brown skin blending with the canyon walls. Silk bridges span the gorges, woven from spider-sap and oath-hair, strong enough to hold a caravan and light enough to sway in the monsoon wind. The web-law is unwritten, carried in the memory of each warden; it keeps both empires from using the valley as a shortcut to war. Unlike their northern kin who fell from grace, the Lethai-ar are adopted children of the old powers — not fallen, but chosen to carry memory. Each can name the specific mountain, river, or grove where their ancestor left the spirit world to become mortal. Their skin-tattoos (Marks) are woven with red ochre and jungle sap, each line a promise witnessed, each curve a story recorded. When a Lethai-ar dies, their Marks are cut from the skin and buried at the Ukwe’s roots, so the tree may remember what they witnessed.

What you notice first: The whisper of silk ropes in the wind. The smell of red ochre and damp stone. The way every Lethai-ar touches their left wrist when they speak a name — a gesture of witness.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never step onto a silk bridge without first naming a witness. The bridge will remember your footsteps. If you fall, it will ask why no one was watching.

Regional Mood: The Weight of Witness

Power here is measured in witnessed promises, silk strands, and the balance of the web-law. The valley is neutral ground — Oshiiran grain barges do not float here, and Ashaani armies dare not march. The Lethai-ar trade silk for honey with Sekogo druids and stone-song for poison with Ngomebe masons. Their Marks are not decoration; they are a public ledger, written on skin, read by anyone who knows the phase of the crimson moon. A Lethai-ar who bears a Mark they cannot fulfil loses standing; a warden who cuts a bridge without cause is exiled.

Prominent NPCs of the Crimson Valley

Name	Role/Title	Motivation	Rumoured Quirk
Warden Anara	Silk-warden of the central span	Keep the Oshiiran grain barges from crossing	Her left arm is covered in Marks from wrist to shoulder. She will not say what they mean.
Mark-Cutter Tebe	Tattooist who records promises	Witness a treaty between Sekogo and Ngomebe	She uses a needle of silk-fiber and ink made from crushed crimson stone. The ink glows under the full moon.
Bridge-Keeper Solan	Guardian of the eastern crossing	Prevent Ashaani scouts from using the valley	He has not slept in nine days. He says the bridge whispers when someone lies.
Elder Mira	Memory-keeper of the valley's spirits	Record the name of every ancestor who walked the spirit path	She carries a bundle of silk cords, each tied to a different knot. The knots are the names.
The Spider	Tulkani trader of oath-silk	Buy a bolt of crimson silk for a vow-cord	She is not Lethai-ar but has lived in the valley for thirty years. The wardens tolerate her.

The Unmarked	A Lethai-ar who refused any Marks	An outcast who lives in the gorge below the bridges	Her skin is blank. She is invisible to the web-law — and to the valley’s spirits.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (cords, masks, shards) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo valley-omens—silk cords humming in still air, the crimson river running clear, a bridge that sways without wind.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Web-Law: The unwritten legal code of the Crimson Valley. Each warden carries a different clause in memory; together, they form a complete web. To cross a bridge, a traveller must answer a question about the web-law. The answer changes with each warden. On a successful roll (Wits + Lore, DV 3), you may bypass the challenge; on a failure, you must offer a promise instead.
- Marks (Skin-Tattoos): Each Lethai-ar’s Marks are a public record of promises witnessed. The Marks are cut from the skin after death and buried at the Ukwe’s roots. To read a living Lethai-ar’s Marks, one must know the phase of the crimson moon and the position of the valley’s spirits. A character who studies a Lethai-ar’s Marks for a scene may ask the GM one question about a promise that Lethai-ar has witnessed; the GM must answer truthfully.
- Spirit Ancestry: Every Lethai-ar can name the specific spirit (mountain, river, grove) where their ancestor left the spirit world to become mortal. That spirit is their witness; they owe it a promise at birth, and that promise is never fully paid. Once per journey, a Lethai-ar may invoke their spirit ancestor to gain +1 die on a roll related to that spirit’s domain (e.g., a river ancestor aids a crossing).
- Witness Economy: Instead of tracking debt, the Crimson Valley uses Witness as currency. A character who witnesses a promise gains 1 Witness token. Tokens can be spent to: gain +1 die on a roll involving that promise, force an oath-breaker to reroll a successful deception, or demand a favour from someone who witnessed the same promise. Witness tokens are lost when the promise is fulfilled or broken.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The First Weaver — Inaea. The spider who taught the first knot; mercy is a strand, not a cut.
 - The Serpent Judge — Isoka. The fang that decides; a promise kept is a skin shed.
 - The Crimson Witness — The Witness. The flame that sees through silk; no oath hidden from its light.
 - The Bridge Father — The Traveler. The road that crosses the gorge; every crossing is a promise.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Crimson Silk and the Way of Silk: The silk of the Crimson Valley is prized across the continent for vow-cords, well-contracts, and bridge-building. The Tulkani spider-traders are the primary merchants; a single bolt can buy safe passage from Fhara to Dhahara. A Tulkani story-seller may accept crimson silk as payment for a truth.
- The Ukwe’s Roots and Sekogo: The Ukwe’s roots extend into the Crimson Valley. The Lethai-ar bury their dead Marks at the riverbank root, creating a unique relationship with the Speaking Tree. The Ukwe knows every promise ever made in the valley. A Sekogo druid may ask the Ukwe to witness a new oath, binding it with the weight of the valley.
- Web-Law and the Covenant (Mykkiel): The Covenant judges respect the web-law as a valid legal system. A Lethai-ar witness cord is admissible in a Covenant court. Some judges have learned to read Marks. A Covenant justiciar may offer to “translate” a web-law dispute into imperial law — but the translation always favours the Covenant.
- The Unmarked and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): Lethai-ar who refuse all Marks become invisible to the web-law — and to the Hollow. The Hollow cannot track them. Some Aelaerem seek out the Unmarked to learn the secret of blank skin. The Unmarked charge a promise: “Do not seek me again.”

Lethai-ar Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Bridge: Crumble a crust onto the first strand. Ignore the first Snapped Strand penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Cord: Tie a single knot in a witness cord. Cancel Web-Law Challenge or take –1 die on your next negotiation (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Root: Whisper a dead warden’s name into the Ukwe’s root. Gain +1 Effect when crossing a bridge this scene, but mark Obligation to the First Ancestor. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Patronage & Power

Among the Lethai-ar, power flows through witnessed promises, silk strands, and the authority of the wardens. The web-law is unwritten, but every warden carries a piece of it. Marks are public, stories are visible, and the Ukwe remembers everything.

For the GM: Power in the Crimson Valley is measured in witnessed oaths and the trust of the bridge. Patronage often takes the form of witness cords, masks, or root shards — each tied to a specific promise. To emphasize this:

- Tie rewards to objects that record or enforce promises (cords, masks, shards) that can be challenged, broken, or called in.
- Let rival wardens issue conflicting interpretations of the web-law, forcing players to choose whose bridge to cross.
- Use the bridges, Mark-cutter’s studio, and the Ukwe’s root as arenas for social contests, where a witnessed promise is a weapon and a broken strand is a death sentence.

In the Crimson Valley, the bridge remembers every step — and the Ukwe forgets no promise.

Part V

The Way of Silk

“The road is a ledger. Every oasis is a credit, every broken wheel a debt. The Tulkani tie knots to remember who owes whom. The Fhara weigh water before they weigh silver. The Pereshi recite verses to keep the bridges open. And the Sidhi keep lighthouse lamps burning for the dead who still have not reached the shore.” — Dusana of the Raven Road, at a caravanserai whose name she refused to give

Chapter 24

Fhara

The Oasis Courts.

Water is not a right. It is a loan from the sand. The oasis remembers every drop drawn, every cup poured, every promise made at its edge. I do not judge the living. I judge the debt.

I am a Water-Clerk. My grandfather dug this well with a shovel and a prayer. My mother sealed the walls with clay from the dry river. I sit in the shade and measure every bucket. The sand does not forgive a miscount.

Water isn't just law in Fhara—it's a market, and oh, how the water-clerks love a good deal on aquifer access. They don't just negotiate in three cups; they auction the right to the fourth cup. The Fhara are merchants, poets, and negotiators; they will bargain for an hour over a cup of coffee, and a day over a camel. But here's the secret the well-judges don't want you to know: the wells have ears. Every cup poured, every promise made at the edge, every drop drawn—the well-spirits are listening. And they have opinions. They favour the generous. They punish the greedy. And they never, ever forget a face.

The Fhara have no single king. Their confederacy is a web of marriage alliances, water-sharing treaties, and caravan tariffs. The desert is not empty—it is a ledger of dry wells, abandoned caravanserais, and the bones of those who could not share. A Fhara merchant can cross the waste with only a waterskin and a coffee pot, because every well has a keeper, every keeper a price, and every price can be negotiated. But the negotiation is a ritual. Three cups: the first is welcome, the second is bargaining, the third is a contract. Refuse the third, and you have broken an oath. The well-spirit will remember.

Never refuse a date offered by a well-keeper. The fruit is sacred to their well-spirits. Refusing it ends the conversation—and your access to water.

— Well-Judge Fatima al-Wadi, who carries a dipper made from a date-palm leaf that rots after each case

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Dates and thin coffee—the dates are from the well-keepers' groves, the coffee is brewed with cardamom and camel milk. The milk is sour. The sourness is for endurance.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count cups. Fhara children are taught the eight cups of negotiation: Welcome, Bargain, Contract, Witness, Debt, Payment, Forgiveness, and the ninth—the cup that is never poured. The ninth cup is for the well-spirit. The well-spirit is always thirsty.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their water-skin. A stranger whose water-skin is full has not traveled far. A stranger whose water-skin is dry has traveled too far. A stranger who carries no water-skin is either a well-keeper or a fool. Well-keepers are honoured. Fools are buried.

What is the most common crime? Water theft—but water theft is not a crime, it is a declaration of feud. The well-spirit records every theft in the aquifer. The aquifer is the court. The judge is the well. The verdict is thirst.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The wells are not natural. They were carved by the first Fhara, who made a bargain with the sand. The bargain was for water. The price was memory. The Fhara remember everything. They cannot forget. That is the curse of the wells.

Where do people go when they die? To the oasis. The dead are buried in the date groves, their graves marked with a single stone. The stone is not carved. The dead's name is spoken at sunrise. If the name is remembered, the dead rests. If it is forgotten, the dead walks.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a cup—the ninth cup, poured from your own water-skin. The cup is placed at the well's edge. If the well-spirit drinks, you are forgiven. If the water evaporates, you are not. If the cup cracks, your debt is doubled.

What is the most important festival? The Filling of the Wells (spring). Every well is cleaned and blessed. The water-clerks recite the names of the year's debtors. The debtors stand at the water's edge. If their reflection wavers, they are forgiven. If it holds, they must pay.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The water-clerks' ledger is a forgery. The original was lost in a sandstorm three generations ago. The clerks have been inventing water rights ever since. The wells do not care. The wells remember the original. The wells are waiting.

24.1 Fhara — “The Oasis Courts”

Quick Reference

Tagline: Water is a loan from the sand. The well remembers every cup.

Well-Judge (Elite): “Water is not a right. It is a loan from the sand. The oasis remembers every drop drawn, every cup poured, every promise made at its edge. I do not judge the living. I judge the debt.”

Water-Clerk (Commoner): “My grandfather dug this well with a shovel and a prayer. My mother sealed the walls with clay from the dry river. I sit in the shade and measure every bucket. The sand does not forgive a miscount.”

Genre / Mood: Desert law, coffee ritual, water-as-community.

Starting Location: The shaded stone bench of a well-court, where the air is cool and the water is sweet. A Well-Judge dips a clay cup into the basin: “You have come for water, or for trade, or for a story. First, drink. Then tell me which of your promises you intend to keep today.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Fhara dwell on a great, sun-baked peninsula where scattered oases and dry riverbeds connect the coast to the interior. Their cities are built around wells and date groves, and their caravans are the arteries of the spice trade. Water is law — the well-keepers are judges, and the courthouse is the shade of a palm. The Fhara are merchants, poets, and negotiators; they will bargain for an hour over a cup of coffee, and a day over a camel. Their honour is measured in generosity, and their vengeance is measured in litigation. Coffee is not a drink; it is a ritual. Three cups: the first is welcome, the second is negotiation, the third is a contract. Refuse the third, and you have broken an oath.

What you notice first: The smell of roasting coffee and overripe dates. The way every well has a stone bench for the judge. The silence when the sun passes directly overhead — no one moves, no one speaks.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never refuse a date offered by a well-keeper. The fruit is sacred to their well-spirits. Refusing it ends the conversation — and your access to water.

Regional Mood: The Weight of Water

Power here is measured in well-depth, date groves, and the length of a coffee ritual. Each oasis is a sovereign court, ruled by a Sheikh and a Well-Judge. The Fhara have no single king; their confederacy is a web of marriage alliances, water-sharing treaties, and caravan tariffs. The desert is not empty — it is a ledger of dry wells, abandoned caravanserais, and the bones of those who could not share. A Fhara merchant can cross the waste with only a waterskin and a coffee pot, because every well has a keeper, every keeper a price, and every price can be negotiated.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (tablets, writs, dippers) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo water-omens—a dry well that weeps, coffee that brews itself, a date that bleeds.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Three Cups, One Contract: Fhara negotiations follow a rigid ritual. First cup: welcome and genealogy. Second cup: bargaining and threats disguised as compliments. Third cup: sealing the deal. Refusing the third cup voids the negotiation and insults the host. Accepting the third cup without intending to honour the deal is a capital crime — the liar is tied to a date palm until the sun sets.
- Water-Sharing Tablets: Water rights are recorded on clay tablets, stored in the Well-Judge's archive. A tablet can be split, traded, or challenged. The tablet is the well; break it, and the water becomes unclaimed — until someone carves a new one. A broken tablet is used as evidence of a broken oath.

- Well-Spirits (Nat): Each well has a spirit, usually benign but jealous. Offerings of dates, coffee, or a story keep it calm. A well that has witnessed a murder may turn bitter; a well that has been poisoned may turn sentient and mobile. A mobile well is a disaster — it follows those who wronged it.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Thirst — Khemesh. The hunger beneath the sand; the pressure that drinks wells dry.
 - The Cup Bearer — The Witness. The third cup that never lies; the contract sealed in coffee grounds.
 - The Oasis Father — The Traveler. The road that leads to water; the guide who never drinks.
 - The Date Mother — Inaea. The web of groves; the shared harvest that binds families.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Coffee and the Covenant (Mykkiel): Fhara coffee houses are neutral ground under Covenant law. A well-judge’s verdict cannot be appealed outside the oasis. Some Covenant judges are trained in the three-cup ritual — they can tell a liar by the way they hold the cup.
- Water Tablets and the Aeler Ledger (Ngomebe): Aeler engineers have been hired to map the underground aquifers. Their breath-books record water pressure and flow. The Fhara see this as an intrusion — or an opportunity for better wells. A shared aquifer is a shared treaty.
- Date Groves and the Ukwe (Sekogo): The Ukwe’s roots do not reach the dry peninsula, but the Fhara have their own Speaking Palms — trees that remember every date harvested. A date from a sacred grove can witness an oath as surely as a Lethai-ar cord. The tree will not lie.
- The First Well and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The mythic spring that never dries is said to be the Hollow’s original well — before it learned to thirst. Aelaerem hedge-keepers sometimes leave offerings at dried wells, hoping to appease the Hollow with water. The Hollow does not drink. It counts.

Fhara Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Basin: Crumble a crust into the well. Ignore the first Dry Well penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Dipper: Tie a single date-palm fibre around the dipper’s handle. Cancel Coffee Ritual Interrupted or take –1 die on your next negotiation (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Well: Whisper a dead well-keeper’s name into the water. Gain +1 Effect when haggling over water rights this scene, but mark Obligation to the Well-Spirit. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

- The Coffee-Price (Third Cup Cursed) — Phases: Ritual Interruptions → Procession of Empty Cups → Bargain Baptism of a Merchant. Cracks: relic coffee bean, survivor testimony, the third cup turning sweet again.

Patronage & Power

Among the Fhara, power flows through water, coffee, and the weight of a witnessed bargain. The Well-Judge’s word is law, the Oasis Lord controls the sluice, and the Caravan Master commands the desert. But no one rules alone — every decision is a negotiation, every negotiation a ritual, every ritual a shared trust.

For the GM: Power in Fhara society is measured in well-depth, coffee cups, and clay tablets. Patronage often takes the form of water-share rights, court writs, or a judge’s dipper — each tied to a specific oasis. To emphasise community and reciprocity rather than debt:

- Tie rewards to physical tokens (tablets, dippers, keys) that represent shared access rather than obligation. Breaking a token is breaking a trust, not a contract.
- Let rival oases issue conflicting water claims — resolving them requires a community feast or a joint coffee ritual, not a payment.
- Use the well-courts, coffee bazaars, and date groves as arenas for social contests, where a cup of coffee is a shared moment and a dry well is a shared tragedy.

In Fhara society, the sand forgets nothing — and the well remembers every cup shared.

Chapter 25

Sidhi

The Diaspora of the Sealed Coast.

Galanina is not a place on a map. It is a promise that our ancestors made to the sea: we will remember, and we will return. The Covenant gave us courts, but the sea gave us memory. The Admiralty gives us tariffs. We give each other salt and stories.

I am a Freedman Sailor. My grandmother wore a brass collar. My mother wore a freedman's seal. I wear a captain's ring. The slavers took our names, but they could not take the tide. The tide always comes back. So do we.

The Sidhi are a people of the coast and the diaspora. Their ancestral homeland is Galanina, a rugged shore of limestone cliffs and ancient ports far to the west. The Ashaani magocracy enslaved them for generations, but Galanina broke free under the Covenant of Mykkiel. Now the Sidhi are scattered, fierce, proud, and never forget a debt. But here's the secret the Admiralty doesn't want you to know: the Sidhi never stopped running. The Long Trail—the forced migration that scattered them across the Amaranthine—is not a tale told to children. It is a silence. A pause in conversation when someone mentions the eastern passes or the southern coast. An old woman who stops mid-sentence, touches her brass key, and changes the subject. The Sidhi do not forget, but they have learned that memory is a kind of weight—and they have carried it far enough.

The Sidhi of the Brass Coast run the ropeways, the spice auctions, and the port guilds. Their speech is a creole of Ashaani and coastal tongues, their law is maritime, and their symbol is the lighthouse lamp—a green flame that shows the faces of the drowned, so that the dead may witness the living. They are welcome everywhere and trusted nowhere. They prefer it that way.

Never ask about ancestry. The Ashaani slavery raids are a fresh wound. Asking which clan someone belongs to is asking how their grandparents were captured, sold, or killed.

— Captain Idris, Sidhi lighthouse commander, whose left eye is a brass lens

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Salted fish and flatbread—the fish is dried on the docks, the bread is baked in communal ovens. The ovens are fuelled by driftwood. The driftwood carries the names of lost ships.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To read the lighthouse codes. Sidhi children are taught the eight lamp-flashes: Safe, Danger, Storm, Pirate, Customs, Quarantine, Home, and the ninth—the flash that signals a freedman's return. The ninth flash is never used. The ninth flash is a promise.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their seal. Every Sidhi freedman carries a brass seal—the mark of their manumission. A stranger whose seal is worn smooth has been free for generations. A stranger whose seal is sharp has just been freed. A stranger with no seal is not a Sidhi. Not a Sidhi is not a person.

What is the most common crime? Seal-forging—but seal-forging is not a crime, it is a necessity. The Admiralty demands proof of freedom. The proof can be forged. The forgers are Sidhi. The Sidhi do not prosecute forgers. The Sidhi hire them.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The brass seals are not brass. They are made from melted chains—the chains that bound the first freedmen. The metal remembers the weight of slavery. The seals are warm. The warmth is the memory of wrists.

Where do people go when they die? To the lighthouse. The dead are not buried. Their ashes are scattered from the tower's top. The wind carries them to the sea. The sea carries them to Galanina. Galanina is the shore of ancestors. The ancestors are waiting.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer your seal—your own mark of freedom. The seal is melted down and reforged into a chain. The chain is worn by the wronged party. When the wrong is forgiven, the chain is melted again. The metal grows thinner each time. One day, there will be nothing left.

What is the most important festival? The Lighting of the Green Flame (winter solstice). The lighthouse lamps are cleaned and refilled. The green flame is lit. The flame shows the faces of the drowned. The drowned are the ancestors. The ancestors watch. The ancestors do not judge.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The brass seals are not all equal. Some were forged by the Admiralty itself—trap-seals that mark the wearer as a spy. The spies do not know they are spies. Their reports go to the Admiralty. The Admiralty knows everything. The Admiralty has been playing a very long game.

25.1 Sidhi — “The Diaspora of the Sealed Coast”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The sea remembers. The lighthouse waits. We will return.

Lighthouse Judge (Elite): “Galanina is not a place on a map. It is a promise that our ancestors made to the sea: we will remember, and we will return. The Covenant gave us courts, but the sea gave us memory. The Admiralty gives us tariffs. We give each other salt and stories.”

Freedman Sailor (Commoner): “My grandmother wore a brass collar. My mother wore a freedman’s seal. I wear a captain’s ring. The slavers took our names, but they could not take the tide. The tide always comes back. So do we. The Long Trail is behind us. Galanina is ahead — even if we never reach it.”

Genre / Mood: Diaspora noir, maritime memory, witness as resistance.

Starting Location: The lamp room of a Sidhi lighthouse, where a green flame burns behind a brass mirror. A Lighthouse Judge turns from the flame: “You have come for safe harbour, or for a charter, or to ask about the old wounds. First, light a lamp. Then tell me which memory you are here to share — or which name you have come to reclaim.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Sidhi are a people of the coast and the diaspora. Their ancestral homeland is Galanina, a rugged shore of limestone cliffs and ancient ports far to the west — a land of olive groves, whitewashed villages, and harbours that once held the ships of a dozen empires. The Ashaani magocracy enslaved them for generations, scattering families across the Amaranthine. Some were taken north to Oshiira, others east through the Hyaar passes, and many south to the slave markets of the Brass Coast. Those who survived the Long Trail — a forced migration spoken of only in whispers and lullabies — carried nothing but the memory of salt and the names of the dead.

Galanina broke free under the Covenant of Mykkiel, whose judges and notaries stamped the liberation with wax and witness. But freedom did not mean return. The Sidhi are scattered still: some returned to Galanina’s lighthouse courts, some trade in Oshiiran ports, and many have found refuge on the Brass Coast of Dhahara — a sun-scorched shoreline of palm groves and spice auctions that resembles nothing of their lost homeland. They run ropeways, spice auctions, and Sidhi-run port guilds. They are fierce, proud, and never forget a face. Their speech is a creole of Ashaani and coastal tongues, their law is maritime, and their symbol is the lighthouse lamp — a green flame that shows the faces of the drowned, so that the dead may witness the living.

What you notice first: The smell of salt and old parchment. The way every Sidhi touches a small brass key at their belt — the key to a house they may never see again. The green glow of lighthouse lamps along the shore.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never ask about ancestry. The Ashaani slavery raids and the Long Trail are fresh wounds. Asking which clan someone belongs to is asking how their grandparents were captured, sold, or died on the march.

Regional Mood: The Weight of Memory

Power here is measured in lighthouse charters, freedman’s seals, and the weight of witness. The Sidhi have no single king; their authority rests in the Covenant courts of Galanina and the port-masters’ guilds of the diaspora. A Sidhi merchant’s word is her bond, because every bond is witnessed by a lighthouse lamp and recorded in a water-resistant ledger. The Admiralty of Kahfagia administers the Brass Coast, but the Sidhi run the real trade — and they remember every raid, every broken treaty, every ancestor who did not return.

The Long Trail is not a tale told to children. It is a silence. A pause in conversation when someone mentions the eastern passes or the southern coast. An old woman who stops mid-sentence, touches her brass key, and changes the subject. The Sidhi do not forget, but they have learned that memory is a kind of weight — and they have carried it far enough.

Starting Location: The lamp room of a Sidhi lighthouse, where a green flame burns behind a brass mirror. A Lighthouse Judge turns from the flame: “You have come for safe harbour, or for a charter, or to ask about the old wounds. First, light a lamp. Then tell me which memory you are here to share — or which name you have come to reclaim.”

- J The Admiral's Palace (Occupied) — A former Sidhi fort, now a Kahfagian headquarters. The flag is flown upside down. The Admiral does not know the difference. The Sidhi do. They count the days. '[AUTHORITY]' '[RESISTANCE]'
- Q The Ninth Well (Galanina) — A fresh spring that tastes of iron. The first Covenant judge drowned a liar there. The water still remembers his name. Drink from it, and you will remember a name you forgot — an ancestor who died on the Trail. '[MEMORY]' '[JUSTICE]'
- K The Drowned Captain's Ship — A spectral dhow seen at the edge of storms. It offers passage to the dead. The living who board it become its crew. The crew are all Sidhi who never reached Galanina. '[DEATH]' '[MYSTERY]'
- A The Sealed Coast (Mythic Galanina) — A stretch of shore that appears only at low tide. Those who walk it see the faces of ancestors who did not escape. The ancestors ask for their names back. If you remember one, they will give you a blessing. If you remember none, they will weep. '[LEGEND]' '[MEMORY]'

(Judge/Keeper/Agent) Covenant magistrate with a water-clock; Sidhi lighthouse keeper, blind in one eye; Breath-less agent dressed as a fisher, hands uncalledoused.

Hearts — People & Factions

2. Lighthouse Judge — Robed in grey, a water-clock on her belt. She drinks only rainwater. "The sea does not lie," she says. "Neither should you. The Long Trail taught us that lies are heavier than chains." '[JUSTICE]' '[MEMORY]'
3. Lighthouse Keeper — Blind in one eye, the other sees only green. He lights the lamp with a piece of the sun — or so he claims. He never leaves the tower. The lamp is his family. The faces in the flame are his cousins. '[COMMUNITY]' '[DEATH]'
4. Breath-less Agent — A fisher with soft hands. He speaks in whispers; his words appear on paper without ink. He carries a hollow ring. Inside is a single word: "witness." The ring belonged to his grandmother, who died on the Trail. '[SECRECY]' '[RESISTANCE]'
5. Shipwright of the Freedmen — A woman with a hammer and a jar of brass nails. She builds boats for escaped slaves. Each boat is named after a dead family member. The names are never painted — only carved. The wood remembers. '[COMMUNITY]' '[CRAFT]'
6. Spice Warehouse Factor — A thin man with a brass seal on a chain. He weighs pepper with a scale that has one arm longer than the other. The long arm is for bribes. The short arm is for justice. He never remembers which is which. His father was a slaver's bookkeeper. He does not speak of him. '[TRADE]' '[SHAME]'
7. Debt Collector of the Anvil (Aeler) — A dwarf authorised to collect on maritime loans. He carries a hammer. He knocks once for a warning, twice for a summons, thrice for a contract. The fourth knock is a coffin. The Sidhi taught him that rhythm. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[DEBT]’

8. Freedman’s Advocate — A woman with a freedman’s seal branded on her forearm. She argues cases before the Admiralty. She has never lost a case. Her clients always confess — after she speaks to them privately. She does not threaten. She reminds them of the Trail. ‘[JUSTICE]’ ‘[MEMORY]’
9. Salt Farmer (Galanina) — A woman who harvests salt from coastal pans. Her hands are cracked. She pays her taxes in salt. The Covenant accepts it as “liquid testimony.” The salt is bitter. It tastes of the Trail. ‘[LABOR]’ ‘[TRADE]’
10. Smuggler (Brass Coast) — A man with brass prosthetic fingers. He runs goods past the Admiralty’s tariffs. His fingers pick any lock. He lost the originals to a customs trap. He made new ones from the trap’s springs. He calls them his “freedmen.” ‘[STEALTH]’ ‘[RESISTANCE]’
- J The Drowned Priest — A ghost in wet robes who walks the shore at low tide. He asks for a coin to pay the ferryman. Give it, and he will not follow. Refuse, and he will ask for your name instead. He was a slave who drowned during the crossing. He still hopes to reach Galanina. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[MEMORY]’
- Q The Black Bishop (Covenant) — A judge who rules on maritime disputes. He wears a ring made from a ship’s nail. The ship was the first slaver he freed. The nail still has rust on it. He calls it his conscience. He has freed nine ships. The tenth will be his last. ‘[JUSTICE]’ ‘[REDEMPTION]’
- K The Admiral’s Sidhi Clerk — A young woman who writes the Admiral’s dispatches. She copies them in secret. She sends the copies to the Breath-less. Her left hand is missing two fingers — a warning she ignored. She writes with her right. The Admiral has not noticed. ‘[RESISTANCE]’ ‘[RISK]’
- A The First Freedman (Legend) — A slave who bought his freedom with a story. He now sits at the bottom of the Ninth Well. If you tell him a true story, he will tell you the location of a hidden lighthouse. The lighthouse is not on any map. Its keeper is his granddaughter. ‘[LEGEND]’ ‘[MEMORY]’

(Raid/Seal/Leak) Ashaani slave ships are sighted — the lighthouse keeper asks you to hold the light; a freedman’s seal is discovered to be a forgery — the party is accused; a Covenant audit demands to see your cargo — the cargo is escaped slaves.

Clubs — Complications/Threats

2. Ashaani Raid (Slaver Ships) — Black sails on the horizon. The lighthouse keeper asks you to hold the light. ‘[COMBAT]’ ‘[DEATH]’ Hold it too long, and they will see you. Hold it too short, and the freedmen will not see the signal. The keeper’s hands are shaking. She has held this light before.
3. Forged Freedman’s Seal — A document you carry is discovered to be a copy. The magistrate calls for your arrest. ‘[JUSTICE]’ ‘[TRAP]’ The forger is a Breath-less agent. The seal was a test. You failed. The agent is watching from the gallery. He is not smiling.
4. Covenant Audit (Hidden Cargo) — A judge demands to inspect your holds. The lower deck is full of escaped slaves. ‘[JUSTICE]’ ‘[COMMUNITY]’ The slaves are from Ashaan. One of them is the judge’s own niece. He does not know. The niece is hiding in a barrel of pepper. She is sneezing.

5. Lighthouse Out of Phase — The keeper signals a warning — but the warning is for the ship behind you. '[SIGNAL]' '[TRAP]' You are now the decoy. The reef is ahead. The slavers are behind. Choose. The keeper is weeping. She has done this before.
 6. Tariff Hike (Admiralty) — The port-master doubles duties on all Sidhi goods. The hike is a bribe. '[AUTHORITY]' '[DEBT]' The bribe is to the Black Bishop. The Bishop has already accepted. Your protest is treason. The merchants are watching. They are counting your breaths.
 7. Shipbreaker's Curse — A vessel in the yard breaks its chains. It wants a new victim — a ship's captain. '[DEATH]' '[COMBAT]' The captain is you. The ship was a slaver. It remembers your face from a raid you did not commit. Its chains are warm. They have been warmed by other captains.
 8. Breath-less Betrayal — An agent sells you to the Sisters. The agent is a slave in the Sisters' household. '[SECRECY]' '[TRAP]' The betrayal was a test. The agent wants to see if you can escape. If you do, you are worthy of trust. If not, you were never worth the risk.
 9. Green Lantern Lit (Drowned Priest) — Someone lights the forbidden lamp at the tavern. The dead come. '[DEATH]' '[FEAR]' They are looking for the person who killed them. That person is in your party. The lantern owner is laughing. He is one of the dead.
 10. Archive Fire (Galanina) — A lamp falls in the vault of sealed jars. Ledgers burn. '[DISASTER]' '[MEMORY]' The smoke forms names. Those names are the ones the Covenant wants erased. One is yours. The archivist is weeping. She is trying to save the jars.
- J The Drowned Captain's Ship Appears — A spectral dhow emerges from the fog. It offers passage. '[DEATH]' '[MYSTERY]' The price is a memory. The memory will be forgotten forever. The destination is the Hollow. The crew are all Sidhi. They are singing a lullaby.
- Q Admiralty Press Gang — Marines grab bystanders for the fleet. The marines are drunk and do not recognise rank. '[AUTHORITY]' '[COMBAT]' One of the bystanders is a Covenant judge. She is about to be impressed. She asks for your help. She has a freedman's seal in her pocket. It is glowing.
- K The Ninth Well Runs Dry — The sacred spring stops flowing. Galanina's courts close for lack of witness water. '[DISASTER]' '[JUSTICE]' The well was poisoned by an Ashaani agent. The poison is a memory. Drinking it makes you forget your name. The agent is wearing a freedman's seal. It is a forgery.
- A The Sealed Coast Opens — The mythical shore appears. Ancestors walk the tide line, asking for their names. '[LEGEND]' '[MEMORY]' If you give them a name, they will give you a secret. The secret is always a death. If you give them your own name, they will take you with them. The choice is yours.

(Charter/Seal/Key) Lighthouse charter (right to anchor in any Sidhi port); freedman's seal (proof of emancipation — glows when a slaver ship is near); archive key (opens one door in the Sealed Archive — the key is a finger bone).

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Lighthouse Charter — A brass key. The right to anchor in any Sidhi port without inspection. '[TRAVEL]' The key fits a lock on a sea-chest, not a harbour gate. The chest contains a map — of the Long Trail, with names written at each stop.

3. Freedman’s Seal — A brand on a leather thong. Proof of emancipation. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[JUSTICE]’ The seal glows when a slaver ship is within a day’s sail. It also glows when a Black Hand agent is near. Trust the glow. It has never been wrong.
4. Archive Key (Finger Bone) — A bone key. Opens one door in the Sealed Archive of Galanina. ‘[SECRECY]’ The Archive keeps the corresponding finger. Touch the key to the door, and the finger twitches. It is pointing to the door you should open next.
5. Shipwright’s Boat — A small, fast vessel built for escape. No name, no papers. ‘[TRAVEL]’ ‘[COMMUNITY]’ The boat cannot be tracked by magic. The wood is from a freed slave’s house. The house was in Galanina. The wood remembers the sea wind.
6. Covenant Seal Ring (Brass) — Press it into wax to witness any maritime contract. ‘[JUSTICE]’ The ring is warm. It cools if the contract is false. The cooling is immediate. The ring also warms when a Sidhi tells the truth.
7. Lighthouse Keeper’s Lens — A brass tube. Look through it to see the nearest slaver ship. ‘[JUSTICE]’ ‘[SIGNAL]’ The lens also shows the faces of the slaves on board. They look back. They do not blink. They are waiting.
8. Salt Farmer’s Tithe (Bag) — A bag of bitter salt. Legal tender in any Covenant court. ‘[TRADE]’ The salt tastes of tears. It also tastes of freedom — if you know what freedom tastes like. The salt is from the pans of Galanina.
9. Breath-less Cipher Ring (Silver) — Twist it to reveal a hidden message. The message is a name. ‘[SECRECY]’ The name is a debt. The debt is transferable. Sign it over to avoid payment. The ring belonged to a slave who bought his freedom with a story.
10. Smuggler’s Brass Fingers — A set of prosthetic fingers that pick any lock (once per lock). ‘[STEALTH]’ The fingers were made from a customs trap. The trap remembers. It may trigger again. The fingers are warm. They have been used before.
- J Black Bishop’s Ring (Ship’s Nail) — Wear it to be immune to Admiralty arrest in Sidhi ports. ‘[JUSTICE]’ ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The nail is from a freed slaver. The slaves’ ghosts protect you. They also watch. They judge. They remember. The ring is cold. It warms only when justice is done.
- Q The Drowned Priest’s Coin — A copper coin from the ghost’s collection. Give it to the ferryman. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[TRAVEL]’ Once, you may cross from the living shore to the Hollow and back. The crossing takes one night. The priest will not follow. He is afraid of the Hollow.
- K First Freedman’s Story — A true tale told at the Ninth Well. It reveals a hidden lighthouse. ‘[LEGEND]’ ‘[MEMORY]’ The lighthouse marks a passage through the Brass Coast’s tariff zone. No one will tax you there. The keeper is his granddaughter. She will ask for another story.
- A The Sealed Coast’s Water — A flask from the mythic shore. Drink it to remember a name you forgot. ‘[LEGEND]’ ‘[MEMORY]’ The name is always an ancestor’s. The ancestor will then ask you to avenge them. The water is warm. It tastes of Galanina. It tastes of home.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (charters, seals, keys) that change position rather than call for a roll.

- If any A appears, echo sea-omens—green flames that burn blue, salt that tastes sweet, a drowned face in a still puddle, the sound of footsteps on the Long Trail.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Long Trail: A forced migration that scattered the Sidhi across the Amaranthine. No Sidhi speaks of it directly, but every family has a Trail name — a place where an ancestor fell, a river where a child was born, a cave where they hid from slavers. A character who knows a Trail name may roll Wits + Lore (DV 3) to recall a forgotten route, a hidden spring, or a smuggler's cache. On a miss, the memory is too painful; gain 1 Fatigue and a Condition: Grieving.
- Lighthouse Courts: Sidhi legal disputes are settled in the lamp room of a lighthouse, with the green flame as witness. The judge is the keeper. The verdict is written in salt on a slate, then washed away by the tide. Only the flame remembers. A party may request a green flame judgment instead of a conventional trial. Roll Presence + Lore (DV 4). On success, the judge rules in your favour; on a miss, the green flame shows a hidden crime you committed, and the penalty is doubled.
- Freedman's Seal: A brand or pendant that proves emancipation under the Covenant. A freedman cannot be re-enslaved in any Covenant signatory port. The seal is also a key — it opens the door to the Breath-less network. Once per session, a character with a freedman's seal may ask a Sidhi lighthouse keeper for one favour: safe harbour, a warning, or a message carried by green flame.
- The Ninth Well: A sacred spring in Galanina where the first Covenant judge drowned a liar. The water is said to remember every false oath. Sidhi who need to prove their innocence drink from the well; liars vomit brine. A character who drinks from the Ninth Well (or carries its water) may reroll a failed social roll involving an oath — but on a second failure, they gain the Condition Brine-Tongued (–1 die on all social rolls for one day).
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Green Keeper — The Witness. The flame that shows the truth, even when it burns. Especially when it burns.
 - The Hook — Maelstraesus. The price of a second chance; the interest on a freedman's soul. The interest is always paid in memories.
 - The Tide Father — Khemesh. The pressure beneath the keel; the debt that the sea collects. The Sidhi paid it once. They will not pay again.
 - The Lantern Bearer — The Traveler. The light that guides lost ships — and lost souls. The light that remembers the Trail.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Galanina and the Veiled Sisters (Ashaan): The Sidhi diaspora exists because of Ashaani slavery. A Breath-less agent in the Brass Coast may be the same person who escaped Galanina as a child. Revenge is a slow debt. The Trail is a slow march. Both end at the sea.
- Lighthouse Charters and the Fhara (Way of Silk): Fhara water-clerks respect Sidhi lighthouse charters as proof of credit. A Sidhi merchant can borrow water rights against a charter; default means the lighthouse lamp goes out. The lamp has gone out three times. Each time, a Sidhi family vanished from the records.

- Freedman’s Seals and the Covenant (Mykkiel): The Covenant recognises only one seal higher than a freedman’s — the Seal of Mykkiel himself. A party carrying a freedman’s seal can demand a hearing before any Covenant judge, anywhere. The judge must hear the case. The judge may also weep.
- The Brass Coast and Dhaharan Independence: The Sidhi of the Brass Coast are a major faction in Dhaharan politics. They pay tariffs to the Admiralty but run their own courts, their own ships, and their own spies. A Sidhi port-master may be the key to breaking the Admiralty’s hold. The key is a freedman’s seal. It is warm. It is waiting.
- The Long Trail and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The Hollow is said to have followed the Sidhi during their migration, feeding on the grief of those who died unburied. Aelaerem hedge-keepers still find Trail markers — cairns of salt and bone — on the eastern passes. They leave offerings of bread and water. They do not speak of what they see.

Sidhi Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Tide: Crumble a crust into the harbour at dusk. Ignore the first Ashaani Raid penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Anchor Chain: Tie a single sailor’s knot in a mooring rope. Cancel Forged Freedman’s Seal or take –1 die on your next legal roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Lighthouse: Whisper a dead captain’s name into the green flame. Gain +1 Effect when smuggling this scene, but mark Obligation to the Drowned Priest. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from Lighthouse judges or Admiralty customs.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby port-masters or freedmen’s advocates.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for Ashaani slavers or Covenant auditors.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favourable tide.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Local lighthouse keeper or Covenant judge becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to green flash or rising tide.
- Foe Appears: An Ashaani slaver or Admiralty press gang arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional Admiralty marines, Covenant bailiffs, or slaver ships arrive.

- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: High Lighthouse Judge, Black Bishop, or Drowned Priest intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically—lighthouse collapses/tide swallows the court/slaver ship rams the pier.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice—omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Sidhi (Lighthouse Law): Green flame flickers, salt crystals form in the air, the judge's water-clock runs backwards.
- Sidhi (Diaspora): A freedman's seal grows warm, a distant lighthouse answers a question you did not ask, a slave ship's bell rings without being struck.
- Sidhi (Brass Coast): Ropeways hum with whispers, spice dust forms the shape of Galanina's cliffs, the Admiralty's flag flies at half-mast for no reason.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Sail): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Green Flash.
- Cut the Charter (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a freedman's seal is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Raid (Resolve + Spirit): On a hit in Ashaani Raid, you pick who holds the light; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Salt & Flame)

- The Seal-Breaker (Nine Forgeries) — Phases: Freedman Seals Counterfeited → Orchestrated Re-enslavement → Lighthouse Coup. Cracks: recover a true seal, expose a forger, survive a night in the Ninth Well.
- The Drowned Admiral (Ghost of the Brass Coast) — Phases: Lost Ships Called Home → Procession of Empty Lighthouses → Tide-Baptism of a Judge. Cracks: relic lighthouse lens, survivor testimony, the green flame turning white.

Patronage & Power

Among the Sidhi, power flows through witness, salt, and the green flame of the lighthouse. The Covenant courts provide law, but the true authority is memory — of the raids, of the Long Trail, of the ancestors who did not return. A Sidhi elder’s word is law because she remembers when law was a whip.

For the GM: Power in Sidhi society is measured in charters, seals, and the trust of the lighthouse keeper. Patronage often takes the form of lighthouse rights, freedman’s proofs, or archive keys — each tied to a specific port, a specific ancestor, a specific stop on the Trail. To emphasize this:

- Tie rewards to physical tokens (keys, seals, lenses) that can be lost, stolen, or voided by the Admiralty.
- Let rival Sidhi port-masters issue conflicting charters, forcing players to choose whose lamp to trust.
- Use the lighthouse courts, hidden coves, and freedman’s squares as arenas for social contests, where a green flame is a witness and a bag of salt is a verdict.
- Remember the Long Trail. Let it surface in NPC dialogue as an absence, a pause, a change of subject. The Sidhi do not speak of it, but they never forget.

In Sidhi society, the sea forgets nothing — and the lighthouse remembers every face.

Chapter 26

Pereshi

The Roof of the Way.

The fire does not forget. It has witnessed every oath sworn in this valley, every treaty sealed with a dropped coal, every lie told in its light. I do not tend the flame. I listen to what it remembers. And it remembers everything.

I am a Caravan Scribe. My grandfather copied a tax ledger that had not been opened in three centuries. He found a mistake—a single miscounted bale of silk. That mistake started a war. We do not write for the living. We write for the dead who cannot correct their errors.

The Pereshi highlands are a vast, windswept plateau, cut by deep river valleys and crowned with snow-capped peaks. Ancient fire temples stand beside caravanserais; terraced vineyards climb the hillsides. The people are scholars, shepherds, and traders—proud, suspicious, and bound by a code of hospitality that demands three days of feasting for any guest, and three generations of vengeance for any insult. But here's the secret the Flame-Keepers don't want you to know: the fire in the temple is not just a flame. It is a witness. It has seen every oath sworn in this valley, every treaty sealed with a dropped coal, every lie told in its light. And it remembers everything. Including the Prince's true name.

Once, the Forgotten Ashaani Prince conquered this land. He built garrisons, taxed the passes, and tried to burn every library. When he and his kingdom vanished into the sand—swallowed by the same curse that turned the desert to glass—the Pereshi rose. They threw down his garrisons, brick by brick, and sealed his name in a scroll they have never reopened. They have not forgotten. Every fire temple keeps a coal from the Prince's own brazier—the ninth coal, never lit, a promise that his darkness will not return.

Never step on a fallen book. Written words carry the weight of law. To step on a book is to trample a contract, a genealogy, a verdict. The spirits of the words will haunt you.

— Flame-Keeper Zarifa, who has never been seen without a rose—fresh or dried

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Flatbread with honey and clotted cream—the honey is from highland bees, the cream is from goats that graze the temple steps. The goats are sacred. The goats are also delicious. The bread is baked in ovens heated with coals from the temple fire; families take turns carrying the embers home. A coal that goes out before dawn is a bad omen.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To read a contract. Pereshi children are taught the eight clauses of the Covenant: Offer, Acceptance, Witness, Consideration, Term, Breach, Remedy, and the ninth—the silence where the unspoken terms live. The ninth clause is never written. The ninth clause is the one that kills you. Children also learn to check the ninth coal in the family shrine each morning. If it has grown warm overnight, they must wake the Flame-Keeper.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their book. Every Pereshi carries a ledger—their personal account of debts owed and collected. A stranger whose ledger is thick has many debts. A stranger whose ledger is thin has many creditors. A stranger with no ledger is a liar. Liars are not fed. But these days, the first thing many notice is whether the stranger casts a shadow. The Prince's shadow has been seen walking alone.

What is the most common crime? Contract forgery—but forgery is not a crime, it is an art. The Pereshi courts are full of forged documents. The judges are forgers themselves. The law is a negotiation. The negotiation never ends. The newest crime is shadow-theft: someone steals another's shadow to feed to the Prince. The victim becomes pale, listless, and cannot lie—but also cannot keep a secret.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Forgotten Prince did not vanish. He is buried beneath the largest fire temple, in a lead-lined coffin sealed with nine locks. The keys are held by the nine Flame-Keepers. The Flame-Keepers have never met. The Flame-Keepers do not know each other's names. The Prince's name is written on the inside of the coffin lid. No one has read it in nine centuries—but lately the lid has begun to sweat. A rust-coloured liquid seeps from the seams.

Where do people go when they die? To the fire. The dead are cremated on the temple pyres. Their ashes are mixed with clay and pressed into bricks. The bricks are used to build new temples. The dead become walls. The walls witness. The walls do not forget—and they whisper the names of those who still live. Some walls have started to whisper a name that is not on any ledger.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a coal—a burning ember from the temple fire. The coal is placed in the wronged party's hearth. If it stays lit, you are forgiven. If it smoulders, you are watched. If it goes out, you are cursed. The curse is the fire's silence. The fire will not speak for you again. Some say that if the coal goes out, the Prince's shadow will visit you that night. It asks only one question: “Why should I not take your name?”

What is the most important festival? The Reading of the Ledgers (autumn). Every household brings its ledger to the temple. The ledgers are read aloud. The debts are tallied. The dead are named. The fire listens. The fire does not interrupt—but the ninth coal flickers when a lie is spoken. This year, the coal has not stopped flickering.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The ninth coal is not coal. It is a piece of the Forgotten Prince’s heart, petrified by the curse that swallowed his kingdom. The Flame-Keepers do not know. They think it is a relic. The heart is still warm. The heart is still beating. The heart is waiting to be reunited with the rest of him. And someone has been feeding it blood—a drop each night, from a different Flame-Keeper. No one knows who. No one wants to know who.

26.1 Pereshi — “The Roof of the Way”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The fire remembers. The archive endures. The conqueror’s name is ash — but ash can still burn.

Flame-Keeper (Elite): “The fire does not forget. It has witnessed every oath sworn in this valley, every treaty sealed with a dropped coal, every lie told in its light. I do not tend the flame. I listen to what it remembers. And it remembers everything — including the Prince who thought he could burn us. We took his name. We cut his shadow. But shadows grow back.”

Caravan Scribe (Commoner): “My grandfather copied a tax ledger that had not been opened in three centuries. He found a mistake — a single miscounted bale of silk. That mistake started a war. We do not write for the living. We write for the dead who cannot correct their errors. And we write to remind ourselves: the empire of ash will not rise again. But the Prince’s shadow is long, and the ninth coal is warm.”

Genre / Mood: High alpine bureaucracy, fire-lit memory, post-colonial witness, cursed return.

Starting Location: The scriptorium of a mountain caravanserai, where lamps burn at noon and scribes copy tax ledgers by candlelight. A Flame-Keeper looks up from a brazier: “You have come for a tariff receipt, or for a verse to cross the pass, or to consult a book that should have been burned. First, tell me a truth — something the Ashaani Prince tried to erase. Then I will decide which fire shows you the way. And be quick: the ninth coal is warmer than it should be.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Pereshi highlands are a vast, windswept plateau, cut by deep river valleys and crowned with snow-capped peaks. Ancient fire temples stand beside caravanserais; terraced vineyards climb the hillsides. The people are scholars, shepherds, and traders — proud, suspicious, and bound by a code of hospitality that demands three days of feasting for any guest, and three generations of vigilance for any insult.

The Forgotten Prince and the Curse of the Severed Name: Once, the Ashaani Prince conquered this land. His empire spanned from the now-Red Desert through Galanina into northern Dhahara. He built garrisons, taxed the passes, and tried to burn every library. When he and his kingdom vanished into the sand — swallowed by the same curse that turned the desert to glass — the Pereshi did not merely celebrate. They bound him. The highland priests, led by the first Flame-Keeper, performed a forbidden rite: they severed the Prince’s shadow from his body and buried it under the Sun King’s Throne. They spoke his true name into a lead-lined scroll and sealed it in the deepest vault of the archive. Without his name and his shadow, the Prince could not return to the world. He faded into the Red Desert, a ghost without a voice.

But curses fray. The scroll is cracking. The shadow has begun to stretch. And the ninth coal — a lump of petrified heart-stone taken from the Prince’s own brazier — has grown warm.

What you notice first: The smell of woodsmoke and old parchment. The way every valley has a different accent. The constant call to prayer from fire-temple towers — but the prayers are in a language no one speaks outside the highlands, a language that predates the Prince’s rule. And the way every Flame-Keeper touches the ninth coal before sleep, checking if it has grown hotter.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never step on a fallen book. Written words carry the weight of law — and the weight of witness. To step on a book is to trample a contract, a genealogy, a verdict, a memory of the Prince’s cruelty. The spirits of the words will haunt you. Also, never speak the Prince’s true name aloud. The scroll remembers. The shadow will hear.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Archive and the Warmth of the Coal

Power here is measured in fire-temple charters, caravan tariffs, and the length of a family’s library. The petty kings of the highlands compete not through armies but through scribes — who can produce the oldest charter, the most complete genealogy, the most beautifully illuminated tax receipt. The Covenant has a strong presence in the sacred cities, but the Pereshi follow their own law: the word of a Flame-Keeper outweighs a judge’s gavel. Travelers are expected to recite a verse when crossing a bridge — the spirits of the water demand it — and to present a red rose before petitioning a lord. The high passes are measured in breath-counts, not miles, and the air is thin enough to make a foreigner’s head spin. But the thinnest air of all is in the sealed archive where the Prince’s name is buried. No one has opened it in nine generations. The lock has no key. The key is a memory no one wants to have — and lately, the lock has been weeping rust.

The Prince’s Shadow Returns

The Prince did not die. He was unmade — his name sealed, his shadow severed, his heart turned to coal. But the curse is nine centuries old, and the seals are cracking. The ninth coal is warm. The shadow has begun to stretch from the Sun King’s Throne. The scroll that holds the Prince’s true name has begun to write itself in fresh ink — and the ink is rust-coloured.

The Prince’s Shadow Clock [8]: Tracks the Prince’s gradual return. Advance the clock when:

- The party breaks a Pereshi oath or defiles a fire temple (+1).
- A Flame-Keeper dies without passing on the secret of the ninth coal (+1).
- The party speaks the Prince’s true name aloud (from the First Emperor’s scroll) (+2).
- The GM spends 2 SB to represent a crack in the archive’s seal (+1).

When the clock reaches 4: The Prince’s shadow begins to appear in mirrors and still water. It asks questions. Answering gives it power. When the clock reaches 8: The Prince manifests as a ghostly figure — not a combat boss, but a presence that can possess a willing (or desperate) host. The party must either re-seal him (by finding a new name, a new shadow, or a new coal) or bargain with him (he offers great power — at the cost of a Pereshi valley).

The Curse of the Severed Name (Mechanics)

The Pereshi did not defeat the Prince with armies. They used a ritual of erasure. A character who learns the ritual (from a Flame-Keeper or the First Emperor’s scroll) can attempt to sever a foe’s name or shadow.

Ritual of the Severed Name (High Rite, 16 XP): Requires: The target’s true name written on a lead scroll, a coal from a fire temple, and a blade of folded steel (from the Silent Smith). The caster rolls Spirit + Lore vs. DV equal to the target’s Tier + 3. On success, the target loses their name — they cannot be remembered, tracked, or magically targeted for one year. On failure, the backlash strikes the caster: they forget their own name for 1d4 days. This rite can be used only once per campaign; the Pereshi have never repeated it because the first use almost broke the world.

Prominent NPCs of the Pereshi Highlands

Name	Role/Title	Motivation	Rumoured Quirk
Flame-Keeper Zarifa	Priestess of the eternal fire	Preserve the old rites and keep the ninth coal from lighting	She has never been seen without a rose — fresh or dried. The rose is from the Prince's own garden, taken the day he fell. She sleeps with one hand on the coal.
Lord Rostam	Highland petty king	Unite the valleys against low-land tax collectors — and against the Prince's return	He keeps a cage of doves; each dove carries a different treaty. The ninth dove carries a blank page — for the Prince's name. The dove has started to speak.
Archivist Kaelen	Keeper of the Unfinished Books	Protect the scrolls that were never completed — especially the Prince's name scroll	He has not left the archive in thirty years. His shadow is missing. The Prince's shadow took it. He does not sleep.

Tarkhan	Caravan master of the high passes	Secure the passes before the snows close them — and before the Prince’s ghost walks	He has three camels, each named after a dead wife. The camels were bred from stock the Prince’s army abandoned. They refuse to cross the Pass of the Unforgiven.
The Poet of the Ninth Verse	An old man who stole a missing line of an ancient epic	Recite the verse for a cup of tea made with snowmelt — and keep the Prince from hearing it	His left eye is a piece of amber with a fly trapped inside. The fly is from the Prince’s own stable. When the Prince’s shadow is near, the fly buzzes.

Names of the Pereshi Highlands

Inspired by highland and steppe traditions: names with soft endings, honorific prefixes (Mir, Khan, Beg), and surnames denoting a clan or a valley. Many families carry a second, secret name — the name they used during the Prince’s occupation, preserved as a mark of survival.

First Names (Male)	First Names (Female)	Surnames	Epithets
Rostam	Zarifa	Kuhistani	the Fire-Touched
Kaelen	Laleh	Qasemi	the Unfinished
Tarkhan	Shirin	Salari	Ninth Verse
Dariush	Mahsa	Bahrami	the Bridge-Mouthed
Behrouz	Golnar	Khorasani	the Red Rose

(Temple/Library/Bridge) Fire temple with a copper dome and a flame that never goes out; library of unfinished books where scribes copy texts that were burned by the Prince’s order; stone bridge over a chasm, each arch carved with a line of poetry — except the ninth, which is deliberately blank.

Spades — Places

2. Fire Temple of the Unquenched — A stone tower with a copper dome. The fire inside is said to be the first flame. It has never gone out — but it flickers when a king dies. The flame’s colour changes with the season. The ninth coal sits in a brass brazier, untouched since the Prince’s fall. Recently, the coal has started to glow at midnight. ‘[RITUAL]’ ‘[MEMORY]’

Hearts — People & Factions

Clubs — Complications/Threats

14. The Prince’s Shadow Stretches — A mirror cracks, and from the reflection steps a silhouette with no face. It asks for a name — any name. If you give it a living person’s name, that person will dream of the Prince every night until the shadow is re-sealed. If you give it a dead person’s name, the dead will walk for one night. If you give it your own, you lose your shadow. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[CURSE]’

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

14. A Fragment of the Prince’s Shadow (Vial) — A shard of darkness captured in a lead-lined vial. Throw it to blind a single enemy for one exchange (their shadow covers their eyes). Use it to track the Prince’s presence — the vial grows hot when he is near. The shadow whispers. Do not listen. ‘[MAGIC]’ ‘[CURSE]’

The Prince’s Demands (d8 Generator)

When the Prince’s Shadow manifests (or when the party encounters his ghost), roll on this table for what he wants — and what he offers.

d8	Demand and Offer
1	A Name. “Give me a name I have not heard.” Offer: He will tell you a secret about any living person.
2	A Shadow. “Cut your shadow and give it to me.” Offer: He will grant you invisibility for one scene — but you will cast no reflection for a year.
3	A Coal. “Bring me the ninth coal from a fire temple.” Offer: He will open any locked archive door for you.
4	A Verse. “Recite the missing verse of the epic — the one that names my death.” Offer: He will forget one grudge against you.
5	A Memory. “Give me a memory of warmth.” Offer: He will teach you a forgotten Rite (any Low Rite from the Pereshi list).
6	A Promise. “Swear that you will not fight me when I return.” Offer: He will let you pass through any Pereshi checkpoint unchallenged for one season.

7	A Bloodline. “Bring me a descendant of the first Flame-Keeper.” Offer: He will restore a dead person to life — but the price is the descendant’s death.
8	A Silence. “Say nothing for one day. Not a word, not a whisper.” Offer: He will delay his return by one tick on the Prince’s Shadow clock.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (tokens, receipts, seals) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo fire-omens—flames that burn green, scrolls that ignite without heat, a bridge that recites a verse in a dead language, a coal that glows in the dark. Also tick the Prince’s Shadow clock by 1 (the curse advances).

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Fire Temples and the Ninth Coal: Every fire temple keeps a brazier with nine coals. The ninth coal is never lit — it is a promise to the Hollow and a ward against the Prince. Lighting it summons the Oath-Keeper — or the Prince’s ghost. Flame-Keepers inherit the secret of which coal is the ninth; it changes with each keeper. The coal is warm to the touch. It should not be. Recently, all the ninth coals across the highlands have grown warm at the same time.
- Verse Law: In Pereshi courts, a well-recited verse carries more weight than a witness. The old epics contain every legal precedent; a litigant who can quote the correct verse wins automatically. The problem is that the epics are incomplete — and the missing verses are hidden in the tombs of forgotten kings. The Prince tried to finish the epic with his own verses. They are still there, in the sealed archive, waiting to be burned — or to be sung.
- Caravan Tariffs as Currency: A paid tariff receipt can be traded, sold, or used as proof of credit. The Pereshi have no central bank; the receipt is the coin. Forged receipts are a capital crime — the forger is forced to copy the entire epic by hand, blindfolded. The Prince’s tax collectors were the first to be executed this way. Their ghosts still copy, still blindfolded.
- The Prince’s Seal (Forgotten): In the deepest vault of the archive, sealed in a lead box, is the Prince’s own signet ring. It is said to grant authority over any Pereshi — because it proves the Prince’s claim. No one has opened the box. The key was buried with the last emperor. The ring is still warm. Recently, the box has begun to hum.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Undying Flame — Oath of Flame and Light. The fire that witnessed the Prince’s defeat and still burns in witness — and in warning.
 - The Keeper of Sealed Names — The Witness. The archivist who records what must never be spoken — including the Prince’s true name. She has started to forget.
 - The Ninth Coal — The Ninth. The coal that was never lit; the promise that the Prince will not return. It is warm.
 - The Silent Smith’s Patron — Mykkiel. The law folded into steel; the covenant that cannot be broken — unless the Prince’s shadow crosses it.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Fire Temples and the Covenant (Mykkiel): Covenant judges recognise the authority of flame-keepers. A fire-temple token can be used as a witness in a Covenant court — the flame itself is considered an incorruptible witness. The Prince once stood before a Covenant judge. He lied. The flame flickered, but did not burn. The judge was paid. The judge’s ghost now tends a temple in the high passes, still waiting for the truth.
- The Ninth Verse and the Ukwe (Sekogo): The missing verse of the Pereshi epic is said to be carved on the Ukwe’s oldest root. The Lethai-ar know the verse but will not recite it — doing so would call the Hollow. The verse is the Prince’s own confession. The Ukwe’s root has begun to bleed sap the colour of rust.
- Silent Smith’s Swords and the Aeler (Ngomebe): The silent smiths are said to be descendants of Aeler vent-priors who stayed in the highlands. Their folding technique is a lost art; the Ngomebe masons would pay a fortune for a working forge. The smiths will only trade for a Prince’s relic — and the Prince’s shadow is now offering them his own chains.
- The Buried Archive and the Kalrantha Amulet (Dhahara): The First Emperor’s scrolls contain a description of the amulet’s creation. The Veiled Sisters have been searching for the archive for a century. The party may find it first — or find it already looted. The Prince’s ghost is also looking. He believes the amulet can restore his name.
- The Prince’s Ghost (Red Desert Connection): Some say the Prince did not die. He walked into the Red Desert and became part of it. His ghost haunts the high passes on stormy nights, asking for a cup of water. Do not give it to him. He will ask for your name next. Lately, he has started asking for a “shadow to borrow.”

Pereshi Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Fire: Crumble a crust into the temple brazier. Ignore the first Flame Gutters penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Scroll: Tie a single ribbon around a book you are returning. Cancel Forged Scroll or take –1 die on your next legal roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Bridge: Whisper a dead poet’s name into the water below. Gain +1 Effect when reciting a verse this scene, but mark Obligation to the Bridge’s spirits. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Coal to the Shadow: Drop a glowing coal into a basin of water while speaking the Prince’s forbidden name backwards. The next time the Prince’s shadow appears, it will hesitate for one exchange — but it will remember your face. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Patronage & Power

Among the Pereshi, power flows through fire, ink, and the weight of ancient witness. A lord’s authority rests on the age of his library; a flame-keeper’s influence on the purity of her fire. The petty kings are constantly forging genealogies, and the archivists are constantly exposing them. Power is not inherited — it is cited, and it is witnessed by the flame. But now a new power stirs: the Prince’s shadow, offering forgotten knowledge, impossible bargains, and the chance to rewrite history. Some Pereshi have begun to listen.

For the GM: Use the Prince’s Shadow Clock as the campaign’s ticking heart. Every session, describe how the ninth coal feels warmer, how a mirror in a lord’s hall has begun to show a second figure, how a scribe’s shadow now moves independently. Let the party decide whether to re-seal the Prince, bargain with him, or — most dangerously — try to seize his power for themselves. The Pereshi are not a people waiting for a saviour. They are a people waiting for the fire to decide. And the fire is listening.

Chapter 27

Kuvani

The Remount Steppe.

The grass does not belong to us. We belong to the grass. It tells us where to ride, when to move, how long to stay. A clan that forgets the grass's song is a clan that will be buried by it. I do not sing to the wind. I listen. The wind sings through me.

I am a Remount Master. A horse's name is its lineage. Its lineage is its debt. You do not ride a Kuvani horse. You borrow it. And when you return it, you will tell me a story that the horse has not already heard. If you lie, the horse will throw you next time.

Horses, grass, and wind-songs—the Kuvani don't just pay in stories; they auction the right to the next remount. They range across the eastern steppe, a vast grassland east of the Valewood. Their horsemanship and remount stations make them indispensable to any caravan that crosses the open plain. The Kuvani have no cities; their courts are circles of saddles, and their laws are sung. But here's the secret the Wind-Singers don't want you to know: the sky is not empty. Kuva, the sky father, sees everything—every oath sworn in the open, every horse born, every blade of grass bent by the wind. But Kuva does not speak. He listens. And he is patient. The Kuvani have no temples because the sky is their shrine. Their dead are not buried; they are given to the sky on funeral platforms, that Kuva may carry their souls to the ancestral herd that rides the northern lights.

A horse is not a mount—it is a relative. Its name is a lineage stretching back to the first mare that Kuva breathed life into. A Kuvani who cannot name his horse's ancestors is a Kuvani without a shadow. The steppe is not empty; it is full of ghosts: the ghost herd of the salt pan, the sky-road markers that hum at dusk, the Iron Corral where blades whisper the names of the dead.

Never ride a Kuvani horse without asking its name. The horse will answer—by throwing you. If it throws you, you have insulted its lineage.

— Alp Arslan, Remount Master, who has never been seen sleeping

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Fermented mare's milk and dried meat—the milk is from the herd, the meat is from the hunt. The hunt is a ceremony. The ceremony is a debt to the grass.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To ride. Kuvani children are placed on a horse before they can stand. The horse is patient. The horse is old. The horse remembers the child's grandfather. The grandfather taught the horse to ride.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their saddle. A stranger whose saddle is worn has ridden many miles. A stranger whose saddle is new has many miles ahead. A stranger who carries no saddle is a ghost. Ghosts do not need saddles.

What is the most common crime? Horse theft—but horse theft is not a crime, it is a declaration of feud. The horse is family. A stolen horse is a stolen relative. The feud lasts until the horse is returned or the thief's line is ended. The feud never ends.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The ghost herd is not a legend. It is real—a herd of spectral horses that rides the salt pan on moonless nights. The horses are the souls of riders who died without honour. They ride forever, searching for a battle that will never come.

Where do people go when they die? To the sky. The dead are placed on funeral platforms, wrapped in felt. The birds take the flesh. The wind takes the bones. The sky takes the soul. The soul joins the ancestral herd. The herd rides the northern lights.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a horse—the best horse in your herd. The horse is given to the wronged party. If they accept, the debt is paid. If they refuse, the debt is doubled. If they kill the horse, the debt is blood. Blood is never repaid.

What is the most important festival? The Ride of the Ancestors (autumn equinox). The clans ride to the salt pan. The ghost herd appears at midnight. The living ride with the dead. The dead remember their names. The living remember theirs.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Khagan's horse is a ghost. It was killed in battle twenty years ago. The Khagan does not know. He rides a skeleton wrapped in hide. The horse does not tire. The horse does not eat. The horse does not forgive.

27.1 Kuvani — “The Remount Steppe”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The sky hears every oath. The grass remembers every step.

Wind-Singer (Elite): “Kuva watches from the blue. He does not speak. He listens. A promise made under open sky is carved into the wind itself. The grass will bend around it. The horses will remember it. Break it, and the sky will turn its face away. You will ride forever in shadow.”

Remount Master (Commoner): “A horse’s name is its lineage. Its lineage is its story. You do not ride a Kuvani horse. You borrow it. And when you return it, you will tell me a story that the horse has not already heard. If you lie, the horse will throw you next time — and Kuva will laugh.”

Genre / Mood: Sky-worshipping nomads, ancestral horse-magic, wind-carried oaths.

Starting Location: A felt tent circle at a remount station, where a corral of horses stands behind a rope of braided hair. A Remount Master sits on a saddle, a bell in his hand: “You need fresh horses. I have twelve. Each horse has a name. Each name has a price. The price is not silver — it is a story I have not heard. Tell me one. If it makes me laugh, you ride for free. If it makes me weep, you owe me a foal. If Kuva sends a hawk to watch, you owe a prayer.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Kuvani ride the eastern steppe beneath the Eternal Blue Sky. Kuva, the sky father, sees all: every oath sworn in the open, every horse born, every blade of grass bent by the wind. The Kuvani have no temples — the sky is their shrine. Their shamans, called Wind-Singers, read the future in the flight of hawks and the whisper of grass. Their dead are not buried; they are given to the sky on funeral platforms, that Kuva may carry their souls to the ancestral herd that rides the northern lights.

Unlike their Ykrul neighbours, who worship geometry and oath-strings, the Kuvani worship movement itself. A horse is not a mount — it is a relative. Its name is a lineage stretching back to the first mare that Kuva breathed life into. A Kuvani who cannot name his horse’s ancestors is a Kuvani without a shadow. The steppe is not empty; it is full of ghosts: the ghost herd of the salt pan, the sky-road markers that hum at dusk, the Iron Corral where blades whisper the names of the dead. A Kuvani does not fight for land — he fights for grazing rights, for the memory of grass, for the honour of his horse’s line.

What you notice first: The smell of horse sweat and dry grass. The way every rider touches a small felt bundle at their belt — a piece of a dead horse’s mane, a prayer to Kuva. The constant sound of bells on harnesses, each tone a different ancestor’s name.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never ride a Kuvani horse without asking its name. The horse will answer — by throwing you. If it throws you, you have insulted its lineage. The remount master will demand a story as compensation. If the story is not good enough, you walk — and Kuva will turn the wind against you.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Herd

Power here is measured in remount chains, grazing compacts, and the favour of Kuva. A clan's status depends on the number of horses it can offer to caravans; a remount master's reputation on the speed and health of his string. The Kuvani have no kings — only Wind-Singers, who speak for the sky, and Remount Masters, who hold the earthly ledger of horse-flesh. Every caravan that crosses the steppe must pay the remount toll: not in coin, but in stories. The Kuvani believe that a story shared is a prayer heard, and that a traveller who has no story has no soul — only an empty shape that the wind will soon erase.

10. Khagan’s Demand — The Khagan (or his shadow) asks for a tribute. The tribute is a story. The story must be about a broken promise. If it is not good enough, the Khagan takes a horse. The horse will never be seen again. ‘[DEBT]’
- J Iron Corral Bleeding — The sword-blade fence begins to weep rust. The rust is blood. The blood is from the war that never ended. The war is about to resume. The blades are warm. ‘[OMEN]’
- Q Sky-Road Marker Falls — The blue cairn collapses. The stone inside is a meteor. It whispers. The whisper is a prophecy. The prophecy is about the end of the steppe. The stone is cold. ‘[OMEN]’

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Remount Chain Mark — A horse’s tooth on a leather thong. Exchange it for a fresh mount at any Kuvani station. The tooth is from a horse that died in battle. Its spirit runs with the new mount. The new mount will be braver. ‘[TRAVEL]’
3. Grazing Compact (Sheepskin) — A written agreement. Allows your caravan to pasture on clan land for one season. The compact is sealed with horsehair. The hair is from the Khagan’s own mare. Break the seal, and the mare will know. ‘[TRADE]’
4. Sky-Road Song (Bone Flute) — A melody recorded on a flute. Play it to navigate any storm. The flute was carved from a rib. The rib was the Wind-Singer’s. She gave it willingly. The flute is warm. ‘[TRAVEL]’
5. Hostage String (Borrowed) — A braided cord with knots. Present it to demand a truce from a Ykrul clan. The string is hair. The hair is from a Khagan’s daughter. The Ykrul will recognise it. They will honour it. Once. ‘[SOCIAL]’
6. Felt Tent Pass — A felt circle with a hole. Safe lodging in any Kuvani camp. The hole is for smoke. The smoke is your story. The clan will listen. If they laugh, you stay. If they weep, you owe a foal. ‘[SOCIAL]’
7. Kurgan Key (Stone Tablet) — A flat stone. Opens the Horse Cemetery gate. The gate is a skull. The key fits the eye socket. The skull will scream. The scream is a name — the name of the horse you must bury. ‘[MAGIC]’

8. Iron Corral Nail — One sword blade from the fence. Use it to seal an oath. The blade is rusty. The rust is from broken promises. It will rust your oath too. Speak true, or bleed. ‘[OATH]’
9. Sky-Road Stone (Chip) — A piece of the blue cairn. Carry it to avoid getting lost on the steppe. The stone is warm. It points to the north. The north is where the grass is greenest. The stone hums at dawn. ‘[TRAVEL]’
10. Khagan’s Whistle (Horse Phalange) — A brass whistle. Blow it to summon a remount from any station. The whistle is a horse’s toe bone. The horse was the Khagan’s favourite. It will come — but only once. ‘[MAGIC]’
- J Ghost Herd’s Bridle (Leather) — A strap of old leather. Use it to command one spirit horse. The bridle is from a horse that drowned in the salt pan. The spirit is still wet. It will carry you across water. ‘[DEATH]’
- Q Wind-Singer’s Staff (Tent Pole) — A wooden rod. Plant it to stop the wind for one hour. The staff was a tent pole. The tent was the singer’s home. The home is gone. The wind will listen — for one hour. ‘[WEATHER]’
- K Khagan’s Saddle (Felt Pad) — Ride in it to gain +1 Position on all mounted rolls. The saddle has no stirrups. You must learn to ride without them. The Khagan did. His ghost rides behind you. ‘[COMBAT]’
- A Steppe’s Edge Stone — A piece of the boundary where grass meets desert. Touch it to make the grass grow. The stone is a tooth. The tooth is from the Steppe itself. The Steppe is hungry. The grass will grow — but it will be thirsty. ‘[LEGEND]’

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (marks, compacts, flutes) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo sky-omens—hawks that circle counter-clockwise, grass that bends against the wind, a bell that rings without being struck, a shadow that falls where no sun shines.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Story Toll: Kuvani remount stations do not accept coin. To take a fresh horse, you must tell a story that the remount master has not heard. The story is judged by the horse — if the horse stamps its foot, the story is false. If it whinnies, the story is true. If it remains still, the story is boring — you walk. Kuva’s hawks watch; a hawk’s cry means the story is worthy of the sky.
- Wind-Songs and Sky-Roads: The Kuvani navigate by the stars and the wind. A Wind-Singer can hum a melody that encodes the route to water, to grass, or to safety. The song changes with the season. Only the singer knows the current melody. Those who hear the song without permission are cursed — they will hear it in their dreams until they pay a horse to the singer.
- Grazing Compacts as Currency: A grazing compact (a sheepskin document sealed with horsehair) can be traded, sold, or used as proof of passage. A compact from a powerful clan is worth more than a chest of silver. Forging a compact is punishable by exile — the forger is left on the steppe without a horse. Kuva will not watch over them.

- Kuva's Witness (Oath Mechanic): Any oath sworn under open sky (no roof, no canopy) is witnessed by Kuva. Breaking such an oath imposes 1 die on all rolls until the oath is fulfilled or atoned for by a sacrifice: a horse, a memory, or a year of service to the wronged party. The GM may also tick a Kuva's Attention [6] clock; when full, a sky-omen (drought, storm, ghost herd) strikes the oath-breaker.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - Kuva — The Eternal Blue Sky. The witness of all oaths, the father of horses, the wind that carries prayers.
 - The White Mare — The Traveler. The first horse, who showed the Kuvani the sky-road. Her hoofprints are the stars.
 - The Iron Hoof — Khemesh. The pressure beneath the steppe; the hunger that pulls horses down into the salt pan.
 - The Shadow Khagan — Malachai. A cursed king who sold his clan's horses for immortality; he rides alone, and his horses have no shadows.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Remount Chains and the Caravan Trade (Way of Silk): Every major caravan on the eastern route uses Kuvani remount stations. A disruption in the remount chain — a sickness, a feud, a stolen horse — can halt trade for an entire season. The Tulkani have a saying: "A Kuvani horse is worth nine stories. A dead Kuvani horse is worth nine feuds."
- Grazing Compacts and the Ykrul: The Ykrul are the Kuvani's rivals and sometimes allies. A grazing compact with a Kuvani clan may require a Ykrul hostage string as surety. Breaking the compact means the hostage is executed — and Kuva will turn his face from the oath-breaker. The Ykrul do not fear Kuva, but they respect his silence.
- Wind-Singers and the Sky (Kuva): The Kuvani worship Kuva as the watcher of oaths. Their wind-songs are prayers to the sky. A Wind-Singer who loses her voice is considered cursed by Kuva; she must walk the steppe alone until she hears the sky again. Some never return; their bones become sky-road markers.
- The Ghost Herd and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The ghost herd at the salt pan is said to be the Hollow's own horses — ridden by the Oath-Keepers. Aelaerem leave offerings of salt to keep the herd from riding through their villages. The Kuvani avoid the salt pan entirely. They say the ghost herd is Kuva's punishment for a Khagan who broke an oath to the sky.
- The Iron Corral and the Black Banners: The sword blades of the Iron Corral are from a war that never ended — a condotta that was paid twice, first in coin, then in blood. The Black Banner captains know the story; they leave offerings of rust at the corral when they pass. A captain who refuses to pay finds his horses spooked and his supply lines cut.

Kuvani Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Horses: Crumble a crust into the corral. Ignore the first Horse Sickness penalty. Kuva's hawks will watch but not strike.
- Knot the Hostage String: Tie a new knot in a borrowed string. Cancel Hostage String Cut or take –1 die on your next negotiation with Ykrul (your choice). The knot must be tied while facing the rising sun.

- Name to the Wind: Whisper a dead horse’s name into the grass. Gain +1 Effect when riding this scene, but mark Obligation to the Wind-Singer. The wind will carry the name to Kuva. He may answer with a storm.

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from Remount Masters or Wind-Singers.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby herdsmen or felt village guards.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for rival clans or ghost herd scouts.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favourable grazing access.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Local Remount Master or Wind-Singer becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to grass fire or sudden fog.
- Foe Appears: A rival clan rider or Ykrul envoy arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional Kuvani riders, Ykrul warriors, or ghost herd arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.
- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes—water poisoned/hostage string cut/khagan’s demand issued.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: Khagan, Wind-Singer of the White Mane, or Ghost Herd’s Rider intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically—steppe catches fire/salt pan floods/sky-road marker falls.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice—omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Kuvani (Remount Law): Horse bells ring out of sequence, saddle leather creaks a warning, a horse refuses to move.
- Kuvani (Wind-Song): Grass whispers a name, the wind stops mid-sentence, a bone flute plays itself.
- Kuvani (Ghost Herd): Hoofprints appear where there are no horses, salt tastes of blood, a skeletal horse watches from the horizon.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Ride): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Wind at Back.
- Cut the Herd (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a remount chain mark is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Curse (Resolve + Spirit): On a hit in Horse Sickness, you pick which mount survives; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Hoof & Wind)

- The Bone-Singer (Nine Plagues) — Phases: Horse Sickness Spread → Orchestrated Famine → Herd Coup. Cracks: find a true story the bone-singer has not heard, expose a false cure, survive a stampede. Kuva's Judgment: if the party swears an oath to end the sickness under open sky, the bone-singer loses one phase.
- The Storm Khagan (Rider of the White Blizzard) — Phases: Grass Fires Called Mercy → Procession of Empty Saddles → Wind-Baptism of a Remount Master. Cracks: relic wind-song, survivor testimony, the sky-road turning against them. Kuva's Favour: if a party member offers their own horse to the sky (releasing it onto the steppe), the Storm Khagan must pause for one exchange.

Patronage & Power

Among the Kuvani, power flows through remount chains, wind-songs, and the truth of a story. A clan's authority rests on the speed of its horses and the skill of its singers. The Khagan is a figurehead; the real power lies with the Remount Masters who control the stations, and the Wind-Singers who read the grass — and Kuva's will.

For the GM: Power in Kuvani society is measured in horse teeth, sheepskin compacts, and the memory of a good story. Patronage often takes the form of remount marks, grazing compacts, or bone flutes — each tied to a specific station, clan, or singer. To emphasize the itinerant and sky-worshipping culture:

- Require players to tell a story to access remounts, shelter, or grazing rights. The GM can judge the story's quality (or have the player roll Presence + Sway vs. DV based on the remount master's mood). A failed story means the player must offer a truth — a secret, a confession, or a memory — to Kuva directly (speak it aloud under open sky).
- Use Wind-Singers as quest-givers and as intermediaries with Kuva. They hear songs on the wind that only the party can resolve. The song is always a warning or a debt call, and often a prophecy.
- Let grazing compacts be a form of currency that can be stolen, forged, or voided. A party without a compact is trespassing — the clans can demand a story as payment, or seize a horse as collateral. A compact sealed with a hair from the Khagan’s mare is unbreakable without divine intervention.

- Emphasize that the steppe is alive and Kuva watches: the grass remembers, the wind listens, and a broken promise is written in the sky-road. The Hollow’s attention ticks when the party lies to a Kuvani. Kuva’s attention ticks when they break an oath sworn under open sky.
- Use sky-omens as scene-setting tools: a hawk’s cry, a sudden stillness, a cloud shaped like a horse. These can foreshadow complications or reward truthful behaviour.

In Kuvani society, the grass forgets nothing — and Kuva’s sky remembers every word spoken in the open.

Chapter 28

Tulkani

The Itinerant Courts.

The road does not forgive a debt. It only reschedules it. A promise spoken under the open sky is witnessed by the wind, the grass, and the wheels of every cart that passes. I do not write judgments. I tie knots. The knots remember. When you are ready to pay, untie one. If you are not ready, tie another.

I am a Wagon-Keeper. My wagon is my hearth, my court, my grave. The Hollow cannot cross the circle of wheels unless invited. The tax collector cannot enter without a story. The lord cannot demand rent unless we camp on his land for nine nights. On the eighth night, we leave. That is the law.

The Tulkani have no fixed homeland; they are wanderers who follow the seasons and the trade routes. Their wagons are their hearths, their circles are their courts, and their knots are their ledgers. They are welcome everywhere and trusted nowhere—a position they wear with wry humour. They spread the cult of Ikasha—She Who Sleeps—not through temples, but through dream-cords tied in the dark. But here's the secret the Caravan Judges don't want you to know: the knots are not just records. They are alive. A knot tied in false witness will tighten until blood is drawn. A cord cut in anger will become a ghost that follows the oath-breaker until the promise is fulfilled. And the ninth knot—the one that is never tied—is the space where the Hollow waits.

The Tulkani have no king, no judges, no written law—only the Caravan Circle, where disputes are settled by storytelling. A liar is exposed not by evidence but by the knots on his cord. Ikasha's cult is not a religion; it is a survival tactic—the dream inside the wagon, the whisper in the creaking wheel. The Tulkani pay no permanent taxes, but they pay tolls in stories. A lord who demands coin will be told a story so boring that his crops fail. A lord who offers hospitality will be told a story so beautiful that his harvest doubles. The Tulkani do not track debts; they track reciprocity. What you give, you get back—maybe tomorrow, maybe in the next valley. But the circle remembers.

Never sleep outside the circle at night. The wagon ring is sanctuary. Outside it, the Hollow walks. A Tulkani will not rescue you—they will only mourn you at dawn.

— Elder Sarnai, Caravan Judge of the Nine Knots, whose cord drags on the ground

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Tea and hardtack—the tea is brewed from leaves gathered along the road, the hardtack is baked at the start of the season and lasts until the snow. The hardtack is always stale. The tea is always fresh. The contradiction is a lesson.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To tie a knot. Tulkani children are taught the eight journey-knots: Departure, Arrival, Promise, Debt, Payment, Witness, Apology, and the ninth—the knot that is never tied. The ninth knot is for the Hollow. The Hollow is not a creditor. The Hollow is a reminder.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their cord. Every Tulkani carries a knotted cord—their life's ledger. A stranger whose cord has many knots has traveled far. A stranger whose cord has few knots has just begun. A stranger with no cord is a ghost. Ghosts do not travel. Ghosts wait.

What is the most common crime? Story-theft—but story-theft is not a crime, it is a compliment. A stolen story is a story worth telling. The original teller is honoured. The thief is welcomed. The story grows with each telling. The story never dies.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Tulkani are not wanderers by choice. They were exiled from their homeland nine centuries ago, for a crime that no one remembers. The crime is written in the ninth knot of the Elder's cord. The Elder's cord is too long to read. The Elder's cord drags on the ground.

Where do people go when they die? To the road. The dead are not buried. Their bodies are left at a crossroads. The road takes them. The road carries them to the next valley, the next camp, the next telling. The dead become stories. Stories are immortal.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You untie a knot—one knot from your cord, chosen by the wronged party. The knot is burned. The ash is scattered on the wind. If the wind blows toward the wronged party, you are forgiven. If it blows away, you are not. If it is still, the Hollow has accepted your apology. The Hollow's acceptance is a warning.

What is the most important festival? The Tying of the New Cord (new year). Every Tulkani receives a new cord, unknotted. The old cord is burned. The ash is mixed with water and drunk. The drink tastes of memory. The memory is the year that has passed. The year is never forgotten.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Tulkani are not wanderers. They are pilgrims—walking toward a destination that no longer exists. Their homeland was swallowed by the desert. The desert is still hungry. The Tulkani are still walking. They will never arrive.

28.1 Tulkani — “The Itinerant Courts”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The knot remembers. The story pays. The circle holds.

Caravan Judge (Elite): “The road does not forgive a debt. It only reschedules it. A promise spoken under the open sky is witnessed by the wind, the grass, and the wheels of every cart that passes. I do not write judgments. I tie knots. The knots remember. When you are ready to pay, untie one. If you are not ready, tie another.”

Wagon-Keeper (Commoner): “My wagon is my hearth, my court, my grave. The Hollow cannot cross the circle of wheels unless invited. The tax collector cannot enter without a story. The lord cannot demand rent unless we camp on his land for nine nights. On the eighth night, we leave. That is the law.”

Genre / Mood: Itinerant community, story-driven justice, folk horror at the edge of the Hollow.

Starting Location: A wagon circle at a crossroads, where nine painted wagons form a ring. A Caravan Judge sits on an overturned barrel, a knotted cord in her hand. “You are standing on ground that belongs to the lord of the eastern valley. He will be here at dawn to demand rent. But you are in the circle. You are safe until the ninth hour. Tell me a story — a true one — and I will tell you how to leave before the lord arrives.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Tulkani have no fixed homeland; they are wanderers who follow the seasons and the trade routes. Their wagons are their hearths, their circles are their courts, and their knots are their ledgers. They are welcome everywhere and trusted nowhere — a position they wear with wry humour. A Tulkani caravan can appear at a lord’s border, camp for seven nights, and leave before the eighth — because on the eighth night, the lord can demand rent. On the ninth night, the Hollow comes. The Tulkani never stay nine nights in one place. Their courts are circles of wagons; their judges are elders who carry braided cords. Each knot is a vow, a story, or a favour owed — but never merely a debt. They spread the cult of Ikasha — She Who Sleeps — not through temples, but through dream-cords tied in the dark. Their neutrality is sacred: a Tulkani camp is sanctuary for any traveller, regardless of allegiance, as long as they respect the circle and offer a story when asked.

What you notice first: The smell of woodsmoke and cooking oil. The painted wheels of wagons arranged in a circle, each wheel a different colour. The way everyone touches a knotted cord before speaking of an obligation.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never sleep outside the circle at night. The wagon ring is sanctuary. Outside it, the Hollow walks. A Tulkani will not rescue you — they will only mourn you at dawn.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Knot

Power here is measured in vow-cords, story-credits, and the number of nights camped on a lord’s land. The Tulkani have no king, no judges, no written law — only the Caravan Circle, where disputes are settled by storytelling. A liar is exposed not by evidence but by the knots on his cord:

if a knot is tied in false witness, it will tighten until blood is drawn. Ikasha’s cult is not a religion; it is a survival tactic — the dream inside the wagon, the whisper in the creaking wheel. The Tulkani pay no permanent taxes, but they pay tolls in stories. A lord who demands coin will be told a story so boring that his crops fail. A lord who offers hospitality will be told a story so beautiful that his harvest doubles. The Tulkani do not track debts; they track reciprocity. What you give, you get back — maybe tomorrow, maybe in the next valley. But the circle remembers.

(Toll/Story/Hollow) A lord demands rent for camping on his land — negotiate nights or tell a story; the Hollow walks on the ninth night — a character hears their own name whispered; a stranger recognises your vow-cord and asks for a tale.

Clubs — Complications/Threats

2. Recognition (Vow-Cord Seen) — Someone from your past sees the knots you carry. They ask for a story you owe. '[SOCIAL]' '[RECIPROCITY]' The story must be about a promise you kept — or broke. If you cannot tell one, they tie a new knot.
3. Lord's Rent Demand — The local lord arrives at the circle at dawn. "You have been here seven nights. Pay the eighth." '[AUTHORITY]' '[NEGOTIATION]' The price is a story that flatters him. If the story fails, he seizes a wagon. The circle holds its breath.
4. Hollow Walks (Ninth Night) — Someone in the circle has miscounted. The ninth hour approaches. '[DEATH]' '[FEAR]' The lanterns flicker. A shadow stands at the edge. It whispers a name. The name is the last person who broke an oath.
5. Vow-Cord Tangled — Two promises conflict. The knots tighten. Blood is drawn. '[CONFLICT]' '[RECIPROCITY]' The judge must cut one cord. The severed cord becomes a ghost. The ghost accuses the cutter of favouritism.
6. Wagon Wheel Broken — A wheel cracks. The circle is incomplete. The Hollow can enter. '[DISASTER]' The wheel must be repaired before dusk. The repair requires a story — a true one — told to the wood. The wood listens.
7. Tulkani Schism — Two judges dispute the meaning of a knot. The circle splits. '[POLITICS]' Each judge claims authority. The party must choose which cord to follow. The other cord will remember — and so will the Hollow.
8. Ikasha's Dream Disturbed — A stranger enters the Dream-Wagon. The Dreamer wakes. '[MYSTIC]' '[CRISIS]' Ikasha stirs. The ground trembles. The stranger must tell a story so good that Ikasha falls back asleep. The stranger is you.
9. Story Toll (Bridge/Pass) — A guard demands a story to cross. Your story is not good enough. '[TRAVEL]' '[SOCIAL]' The guard demands a truth instead. The truth must be a secret. The secret must hurt. The guard will remember.
10. Vow-Broken's Return — An exile tries to rejoin the circle. The judge refuses. '[COMMUNITY]' '[DRAMA]' The exile demands the party speak for him. If they refuse, he cuts his own throat. If they speak, they owe a knot — and a story.
- J The Ninth Cord Cut — Someone cuts the ninth knot on the central post. The Hollow floods in. '[DEATH]' '[TRAP]' The lanterns go out. The circle becomes a cage. The party must re-tie the knot in the dark. The cord is warm.
- Q Ikasha's Knife Betrayed — The Knife is offered a bribe to cut a false cord. He refuses. The briber attacks. '[COMBAT]' '[JUSTICE]' The Knife is wounded. He asks the party to carry his mask. The mask weighs nothing — until you put it on. Then it weighs everything.
- K Tinkanar Closed (No Stories) — The mobile market is empty. The merchant has run out of knots. '[TRADE]' '[CRISIS]' He is selling his own name. The price is a story that makes him weep. He has not wept in forty years. The last story he heard was a lie.
- A Ikasha Wakes — The Dreamer dies. Ikasha opens her eyes. The sky turns white. '[APOCALYPSE]' She asks one question: "Who cut the ninth cord?" The answer must be a name. If no name is given, she takes all names.

(Cord/Bead/Charm) Vow-bead (a single knot, can be used to call in a favour once); safe-haven oath (a knotted cord that guarantees sanctuary in any Tulkani circle); dream-cord (gift from Ikasha, one question answered in a dream).

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Vow-Bead (Single Knot) — A small knot on a leather thong. Present it to call in a favour from any Tulkani. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The knot will loosen after use. If it is not retied within a year, the favour becomes a story owed — and stories are harder to repay.
3. Safe-Haven Oath (Knotted Cord) — A braided cord with three knots. Hang it on your wagon to guarantee sanctuary in any Tulkani circle. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The cord must be renewed each season. A new knot is added. After nine knots, it becomes a dream-cord — and the Hollow will notice you.
4. Dream-Cord (Ikasha’s Gift) — A silk cord with nine knots, the ninth loose. Once, sleep on it to ask Ikasha one question. She will answer in a dream. ‘[MYSTIC]’ The answer is always a riddle. The ninth knot tightens after use. When it tightens fully, Ikasha wakes — and the world changes.
5. Caravan Judge’s Cord (Borrowed) — A length of braided horsehair. Tie it around your wrist to gain +1 Position in any negotiation with Tulkani. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The cord is the judge’s own. She will want it back. The return is a negotiation — and a story.
6. Wagon-Keeper’s Paint (Pot) — A clay pot of blue pigment. Paint your own wagon wheel, and no lord will demand rent for nine days. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The paint is made from crushed sky-stone. It glows under moonlight. The Hollow avoids it — but the lord will send a spy.
7. Story-Seller’s Verse — A single verse of a true story. Recite it to calm a spirit or end a feud. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[MYSTIC]’ The verse works once. After that, the story belongs to the listener. You cannot tell it again — but you can tell a different truth.
8. Ikasha’s Mask (Knotted) — A mask of knotted cord. Wear it to become invisible to the Hollow for one night. ‘[STEALTH]’ ‘[DEATH]’ The mask has no eye holes. You must walk by memory. The memory may fail. If it fails, the Hollow sees you — and smiles.
9. Hollow-Watcher’s Salt Pouch — A leather pouch of salt blessed by the boy who watches the circle. Throw it to banish a Oath-Keeper. ‘[COMBAT]’ ‘[DEATH]’ The salt is bitter. The Oath-Keeper will taste it. It will remember your face — and your smell.
10. Tinkanar Merchant’s Bell — One of nine bells from the merchant’s hat. Ring it to summon him anywhere. ‘[TRADE]’ He will come. He will demand payment in stories. He will not leave until paid. He has a long memory.
- J Vow-Broken’s Hair Knot — A single knot tied in human hair. It contains a broken promise. Use it to void a contract. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[MAGIC]’ The knot is from an exile. He wants it back. He will pay a story for it — the story of how he broke his vow.
- Q The Ninth Cord’s Post Fragment — A splinter of wood from the central post. Touch it to any knot to learn who tied it. ‘[MYSTIC]’ The splinter is warm. It will burn your hand if the knot was tied in false witness. The truth leaves no scar.
- K First Wagon-Keeper’s Skull — A human skull painted with wheel patterns. Place it at the centre of a circle to keep the Hollow away for nine nights. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[SANCTUARY]’ The skull whispers on the ninth night. It asks: “Is it time?” Say no. If you say yes, it will take your place.
- A Ikasha’s Dream (Bottle) — A glass bottle containing a sleeping breath. Break it to send a question to Ikasha. She will answer in a vision. ‘[MYSTIC]’ The vision lasts one minute. The cost is one memory. The memory is forgotten forever. The memory is always a happy one.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (knots, cords, beads) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo knot-omens—a cord that tightens without being pulled, a knot that unties itself, a wheel that stops turning at the ninth spoke.

Additional Features: Itinerant Mechanics

The Ninth Night Rule

A Tulkani caravan may camp on a lord's land for seven nights without payment. On the eighth night, the lord may demand rent — typically a story, a promise, or a small service. On the ninth night, the Hollow comes. No Tulkani stays nine nights in one place. A party camping with Tulkani must leave by the eighth dusk or face the Hollow's attention.

Mechanic: Each night the party camps in a Tulkani circle, mark a segment on a Ninth Night Clock [8]. At 7 segments, the lord (or local authority) arrives to demand rent. At 8 segments, the Hollow manifests. The party can leave before 8 to reset the clock.

Story as Currency

Tulkani do not use coin. They trade in stories, promises, and knots. A good story can buy a meal, a horse, or safe passage. A bad story can start a feud. The GM should encourage players to tell brief in-character stories; the quality (or a Presence + Sway roll) determines the value.

Mechanic: When a player tells a story, they roll Presence + Sway (DV set by the listener's mood). On a success, the story is worth 1 Measure of value. On a critical success, it is worth 2. On a failure, the listener is offended — the party gains -1 Position on their next social roll in that circle. A player may also offer a truth (a secret, a confession, a memory) instead of a story; a truth is always worth 2 Measures but marks 1 Obligation to Ikasha.

Land Rent and Neutrality

Tulkani circles are neutral ground. No lord may collect taxes or enforce laws inside a circle, regardless of whose territory it sits on. However, the lord may demand rent at the circle's edge, and the Tulkani will negotiate. A party inside a Tulkani circle is under the Caravan Judge's protection — but if the party commits a crime, the judge may expel them to the Hollow.

Mechanic: When a lord demands rent, the Caravan Judge mediates. The party may offer a story (one Measure), a promise (a future favour, represented by a Reciprocity Clock [4]), or a service (a quest). Refusing to pay means the lord may attack the circle — which breaks the neutrality and summons the Hollow.

Vow-Cords and Reciprocity

Every Tulkani carries a vow-cord — a braided strand of horsehair and silk, with knots tied for every promise made and kept. A Tulkani who breaks a promise must cut the corresponding knot; the cut cord becomes a ghost that follows the oath-breaker until the promise is fulfilled. Outsiders may borrow a Tulkani vow-cord; the knots then record their promises. But the Tulkani see this not as debt but as reciprocity: what goes around comes around, and the circle always balances.

Mechanic: A character who accepts a vow-cord gains +1 die to any roll made to keep a promise related to the cord. However, if they break that promise, they must cut a knot — mark 1 Corruption and gain a Condition: Followed by a Ghost (-1 die to stealth until the promise is fulfilled). A character may tie a new knot to make a new promise; each knot beyond the first increases the penalty for breaking. But a character who fulfills nine knots may ask the Caravan Judge for a Circle Boon — a permanent +1 die on all social rolls with Tulkani.

Local Patrons (Syncretic Names)

- The Unwitnessed Weaver — Inaea. The knot that binds gently, the cord that remembers mercy.
- The Cord-Cutter — Isoka. The clean break, the shedding of false promises.
- The Dreamer Below — Ikasha. She who sleeps in the wagon, she who dreams the road.
- The Ninth Traveller — The Traveler. The road that has no end, the threshold that is always one step away.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Tulkani Vow-Cords and the Sidhi Freedman’s Seal: Sidhi merchants on the Brass Coast accept Tulkani vow-cords as proof of credit. A well-knotted cord can buy a ship. A cut cord can sink one. The Sidhi know that a Tulkani knot is worth more than a signature.
- Ikasha and the Veiled Sisters (Ashaan): The Tulkani are the primary spreaders of Ikasha’s cult outside Ashaan. A Breath-less agent may be disguised as a Tulkani story-seller; a Tulkani caravan may be a mobile safe house. The Sisters have tried to infiltrate the circles three times. Each time, the spy was found with a cord around her throat — tied in a knot she could not untie.
- The Ninth Night and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The Tulkani’s ninth-night rule is the only reason the Hollow has not overrun the eastern trade routes. Aelaerem hedge-keepers sometimes hire Tulkani guides to reset the Hollow’s attention clocks. The payment is always a story — and the story is always about a door that was left open.
- Story Debts and the Ukwe (Sekogo): The Tulkani believe that the Ukwe is the first vow-cord tree. They leave offerings of knotted grass at its roots. A Tulkani judge may consult the Ukwe to verify a story’s truth. The Ukwe speaks in rustles. A single rustle means true. Two mean false. Three mean the story is not finished.

Tulkani Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Circle: Crumble a crust at the centre of the wagon ring. Ignore the first Recognition penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Lantern: Tie a single knot in the rope of a lantern. Cancel Lord’s Rent Demand or take -1 die on your next negotiation (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Ninth Post: Whisper a dead judge’s name into the central post. Gain +1 Effect when telling a story this scene, but mark Obligation to Ikasha. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table

- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Local Caravan Judge or lord's herald becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to lantern failure or broken wheel.
- Foe Appears: A debt collector or Hollow manifestation arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional Tulkani riders, lord's men, or Hollow spirits arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.
- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes—knot cut/wagon broken/ninth night triggered.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: High Caravan Judge, Ikasha's Knife, or Hollow's Oath-Keeper intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically—circle breaks/wagon burns/lanterns go out.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice—omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Tulkani (Knot Law): Cords tighten without warning, a knot unties itself, a wheel stops at the ninth spoke.
- Tulkani (Story Debt): A story you told returns to you changed, a listener laughs at a tragedy, the wind carries your words to someone who should not hear.
- Tulkani (Ninth Night): A lantern flickers, a shadow stands at the circle's edge, a whisper says your name from the dark.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Stealth): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose False Knot.
- Cut the Cord (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a vow-bead is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Hollow (Resolve + Spirit): On a hit in Hollow Walks, you pick who hears the whisper; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Knot & Dream)

- The Cord-Cutter (Nine Broken Promises) — Phases: Vow-Cords Severed → Orchestrated Exile → Circle Coup. Cracks: re-tie a cut cord, expose a false judge, survive a night outside the circle.
- The Dream-Eater (Ikasha’s Shadow) — Phases: Dreamers Waking → Procession of Empty Wagons → Knot-Baptism of a Storyteller. Cracks: relic dream-cord, survivor testimony, the ninth cord refusing to tighten.

Patronage & Power

Among the Tulkani, power flows through knots, stories, and the memory of the circle. A Caravan Judge’s authority is recognised by every lord from the steppe to the coast — not because of armies, but because the Hollow respects the judge’s cord. The Tulkani have no temples, no kings, no borders. They have the ninth night, and that is enough.

For the GM: Power in Tulkani society is measured in knots tied, stories told, and nights counted. Patronage often takes the form of vow-beads, dream-cords, or safe-haven oaths — each carrying the weight of a promise. To emphasize the itinerant mechanics:

- Require players to negotiate land rent with local lords, using stories or promises as currency. A failed negotiation may lead to the Hollow.
- Use the Ninth Night Clock as a tension mechanic: every night in a Tulkani camp advances the clock. At 8, the Hollow manifests unless the party leaves.
- Let vow-cords be physical props — actual knotted strings that players can hold, tie, or cut. A cut cord is a dramatic moment.
- Emphasise that storytelling is a skill: reward creative players with mechanical bonuses, and let failed stories have consequences — a bored lord may raise rent, an offended spirit may curse.
- Treat Tulkani society as a reciprocity economy, not a debt economy. What you give, you get back — but the circle decides when.

In Tulkani society, the knot remembers everything — and the ninth night forgets nothing.

Part VI

Dhahara — The Kingdom of Brass

“The mountain weighs every breath, every ingot, every oath. Pay in iron, pay in silence, or pay in blood. And when the ninth lease cracks, even the elephants will remember who fed them during the famine.” — Dusana of the Raven Road, at the Viceroy’s Hall in Sarvistan

Chapter 29

The Mountain Satrapies

Aeler-Dhaharan.

The passes do not care for your lineage or your gods. They care for iron, tea, and the weight of a sworn ledger. Aeler and Dhaharan have bled into the same stone here. I wear a dwarf's breath-counter and a Dhaharan's fire-token. The mountain accepts both.

I am an Elephant Mahout. My grandfather drove elephants for the Sun Kings. My father drove them for the Aeler. I drive them for the Viceroy. The elephants do not care who holds the howdah. They care that the pass is clear and the fodder is fresh.

Iron mines, tea terraces, and the ninth breath—the Mountain Satrapies aren't just Aeler-Dhaharan—they're a leverage market, and oh, how the Aeler viceroy loves a good deal on miner safety. The Aeler have established a viceroyalty here—not conquest, but a long lease. The local rajas pay tribute in iron and receive protection from lowland enemies. It is an uneasy peace, written in bell-codes and toll-ledgers. But here's the secret the Viceroy doesn't want you to know: the lease is not a document. It is the weight of the keystone that holds the roof. If the keystone cracks, the lease cracks with it. And the keystone is cracking.

The architecture blends Aeler stonework with Dhaharan domes; the cuisine mixes dwarf-bread with spiced tea; the law is a creole of Covenant statutes and Aeler breath-bonds. The Aeler engineers speak a creole of their own tongue; the Dhaharan nobles wear Aeler breath-counters as jewellery; and the elephants—the elephants remember who fed them during the famine of the ninth lease. They have not forgotten.

Never count your breaths aloud in a mine. The mountain listens, and if it hears you reach the ninth, it will take one—a breath, a memory, a shadow.

— Rani Jaya, who lost an arm to a mine collapse and now wears a prosthetic pickaxe

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Millet flatbread and spiced tea—the bread is baked on iron griddles, the tea is grown on terraced hillsides. The hillsides are terraced with Aeler engineering. The engineering is paid for in iron. The iron is mined by Dhaharan hands. The hands are calloused. The callouses are a ledger.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count in two measures. Satrapy children learn the Aeler breath-count (eight to a minute) and the Dhaharan fire-count (eight to a bell). The ninth of either is silence. Silence is the mountain's attention. The mountain is always attentive.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their breath-counter. A stranger whose counter is brass is Aeler-trained. A stranger whose counter is bronze is Dhaharan-trained. A stranger whose counter is iron has never been underground. Iron does not ring. Iron is for weapons. Weapons are for the surface.

What is the most common crime? Ore theft—but ore theft is not a crime, it is a tax evasion. The Viceroy's cut is measured in ingots. An ingot that goes missing is an ingot that was never mined. The mine's ledger is adjusted. The adjustment is creative accounting. The accounting is the art.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The ninth lease was never signed. The Viceroy's seal was forged by a Dhaharan scribe who was paid in tea. The scribe is dead. The forgery is still in use. The lease is void. No one has noticed. No one wants to notice.

Where do people go when they die? To the mines. The dead are not buried. Their bodies are placed in worked-out galleries, sealed with stone. The mountain absorbs them. The mountain's memory grows. The mountain remembers every miner who ever breathed its air.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a keystone—a load-bearing stone from your own house. The stone is installed in the wronged party's wall. If it holds, you are forgiven. If it cracks, you are not. If it crumbles, your house collapses. Apology is architecture. Architecture is law.

What is the most important festival? The Ringing of the Leases (autumn). The Viceroy reads the terms of the lease aloud, in the main square. The lease is nine pages long. The ninth page is sealed with wax. The wax is never broken. The ninth page is a secret. The secret is the Viceroy's profit.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The keystone is not stone. It is a coffin—the tomb of a Dhaharan king who refused to pay the iron tithe. The Aeler sealed him in the foundation of the Viceroy's palace. His ghost haunts the lease negotiations. His ghost votes against the Viceroy. The Viceroy does not believe in ghosts.

29.1 The Mountain Satrapies — “The Iron Passes”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The mountain weighs every breath, every ingot, every oath. Pay in iron, pay in silence, or pay in blood.

Viceroy Thrain (Elite): “The passes do not care for your lineage or your gods. They care for iron, tea, and the weight of a sworn ledger. Aeler and Dhaharan have bled into the same stone here. I wear a dwarf’s breath-counter and a Dhaharan’s fire-token. The mountain accepts both.”

Elephant Mahout (Commoner): “My grandfather drove elephants for the Sun Kings. My father drove them for the Aeler. I drive them for the Viceroy. The elephants do not care who holds the howdah. They care that the pass is clear and the fodder is fresh.”

Genre / Mood: High-altitude contract horror, industrial colonialism, elephant-driven logistics.

Starting Location: The Viceroy’s Hall, a longhouse of timber and stone, with a throne of iron ore that no one sits on. Viceroy Thrain stands behind it, a bell around his neck: “The lease is up for renewal. The rajas want lower tithes. The Admiralty wants the passes opened to their trade. And the mines are whispering of a demon waking. You are not here by accident. Tell me whose interests you serve — and whose name I should carve on the next treaty.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Mountain Satrapies are the northern highlands of Dhahara, where the Aeler viceroys rule on behalf of the distant High King. Here, the air is thin and cold, the rivers run white with snowmelt, and the passes are measured in breath-counts rather than miles. Iron mines scar the hillsides, worked by Dhaharan labourers and overseen by Aeler engineers. Elephant caravans haul ore down to the Brass Coast; mule trains carry silver and tea up to the mountain holds. The Aeler have established a viceroyalty here — not conquest, but a long lease. The local rajas pay tribute in iron and receive protection from lowland enemies. It is an uneasy peace, written in bell-codes and toll-ledgers. The architecture blends Aeler stonework with Dhaharan domes; the cuisine mixes dwarf-bread with spiced tea; the law is a creole of Covenant statutes and Aeler breath-bonds.

What you notice first: The ringing of iron hammers and the lowing of elephants. The way every bridge has a dwarf toll-keeper with a brass scale. The silence after a bell rings — the silence is for the mountain to answer.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never count your breaths aloud in a mine. The mountain listens, and if it hears you reach the ninth, it will take one — a breath, a memory, a shadow.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Lease

Power here is measured in iron quotas, tea taxes, and the length of a viceroy’s lease. The Satrapies are not a colony — the Aeler High King holds the passes by treaty, renewed every nine years. The Viceroy answers to the High King, but also to the local rajas, the Covenant judges, and the elephant clans. Every decision is a negotiation between mountain custom and lowland law. The Aeler engineers speak a creole of their own tongue; the Dhaharan nobles wear Aeler breath-counters as jewellery; and the elephants — the elephants remember who fed them during the famine of the ninth lease.

10. Elephant Sickness (Curse) — A disease spreads through the caravan. The disease is a curse from a local spirit. ‘[COMMUNITY]’ ‘[MAGIC]’ The spirit was disturbed by the mine’s expansion. It wants a sacrifice — a memory, not blood.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (bells, ingots, nails) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo mountain-omens—iron that weeps rust, bells that ring without clappers, a pass that closes behind you.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Ninth Breath: Aeler miners believe that counting to nine in a mine summons the mountain's attention. They count in eights, resetting after each set. Visitors who count to nine aloud may trigger a cave-in — or worse. Mechanically, any character who voluntarily counts to nine in a mine must test Resolve (DV 4) or mark 1 Fatigue as the mountain takes a breath. On a critical failure, the mountain takes a memory instead (lose 1 XP or forget a minor detail).
- Lease Clock [8]: Tracks the political pressure around the treaty renewal. The clock ticks when the party assists or hinders a faction (Aeler, rajas, Admiralty, Covenant). At 4 segments: a faction threatens to walk out of negotiations. At 8: the lease is broken or renewed in the party's favour (or against it). The party can reset the clock by brokering a concession.
- Elephant Community Share: Instead of individual ownership, elephant caravans operate on a share system. A character who helps the caravan (clearing a pass, feeding a sick elephant, healing the mahout) gains a Share Token. Spend it to call on the caravan for a single favour:

passage for a wagon, a day’s fodder, or a warning about a rival. Share Tokens are not debt — they are reciprocity.

- Breath-Bonds as Leverage: Aeler engineers use breath-bonds to secure contracts. A character who holds a breath-bond can demand a renegotiation of tolls, quotas, or labour terms. The bond is not a debt — it is a recorded agreement that both parties benefit from keeping. Breaking a breath-bond does not incur a curse; it simply ends the trust, and the other party will never deal with you again.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - Thrain the Counter — Mykkiel. The divine auditor; every deed must balance.
 - The Silent Bell — The Sealed Gate. The threshold that asks only that you stop at eight.
 - The Forge Father — Adur (Oath of Flame and Light). The flame that tempers iron and burns lies.
 - The Old Breath — The Traveler. The wind that carries caravans and counts their steps.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Ninth Seal Mine and the Kalrantha Amulet (Dhahara): The demon sealed in the mine is a fragment of Varash the Unmaker. The Veiled Sisters want to free it to use against the Covenant. The Breath-less want to re-seal it. The demon speaks in the voices of dead miners.
- Iron Trade and the Ngomebe (Stone Men): The iron from the Satrapies is used to forge rollers for the walking cities of Ngomebe. A disruption in the iron supply could stop a city mid-migration. The Mason-Kin have a permanent envoy at the Viceroy’s hall.
- Covenant Judges and the Sidhi (Way of Silk): Sister Gaura is a Covenant judge; her water-clock is a Sidhi design. She may have contacts in the Brass Coast who can verify a freedman’s seal. She also knows which freedmen are still being hunted.
- The Blind Pilgrim and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The pilgrim is searching for a shrine that marks the Hollow’s boundary in the high passes. Aelaerem hedge-keepers know the location but refuse to speak it. They say the shrine is a missing ninth step in the mountain’s own counting song.

Mountain Satrapies Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Mine: Crumble a crust into the tunnel mouth. Ignore the first Cave-In penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Bell Rope: Tie a knot in the rope of a shrine bell. Cancel Ninth Echo or take –1 die on your next stealth roll (the bell still rings, but muffled). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Iron: Whisper a dead miner’s name into an ingot. Gain +1 Effect when negotiating with Aeler this scene, but mark Obligation to the Viceroy. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from Aeler engineers or raja’s spies.

- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby mine guards or toll-keepers.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for elemental spirits or rival caravans.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favourable toll rates.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Local mine-captain or toll-keeper becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to landslide or thin air.
- Foe Appears: A rival raja's guard or a demon fragment arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional Aeler engineers, raja's soldiers, or mountain spirits arrive.

- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes—mine seals/lease stone cracks/ninth echo spoken.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.

- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice—omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Satrapies (Mine Law): Iron veins glow faintly, the mountain groans, a breath-counter ticks backward.
- Satrapies (Lease Politics): The Viceroy's bell rings once for no reason, a raja's elephant kneels unprompted, a treaty scroll spontaneously combusts.
- Satrapies (Pass Law): Snow falls upward, the ninth echo repeats a different name each time, a bridge appears where there was only chasm.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Survival): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Thin Air.
- Cut the Toll (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a toll waiver is in your possession, +1 die.

- Weather the Cave-in (Body + Athletics): On a hit in Cave-In, you pick who escapes first; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Iron & Breath)

- The Breath-Eater (Nine Silence) — Phases: Mines Collapsing → Orchestrated Cave-In → Pass Coup. Cracks: find a lost breath-counter, expose a false lease, survive a count of nine.
- The Unsealed (Demon of the Ninth Seal) — Phases: Whispers in the Mine → Procession of Cracking Timbers → Iron-Baptism of a Viceroy. Cracks: relic Covenant seal, survivor testimony, the mine’s face weeping clear water.

Patronage & Power

Among the Mountain Satrapies, power flows through iron, tea, and the weight of the lease. The Viceroy holds authority from the Aeler High King, but the rajas control the mines, the Covenant judges the courts, and the elephant masters move the ore. No single faction rules — and every faction owes a share of their success to the mountain.

For the GM: Power in the Satrapies is measured in breath-counts, toll receipts, and the loyalty of the elephant caravans. Patronage often takes the form of iron ingots, breath-counters, or toll waivers — each tied to a specific mine, bridge, or clan. To emphasise community and leverage over debt:

- Tie rewards to physical tokens (bells, ingots, nails) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided by a rival.
- Let the lease negotiation be a campaign front: the party’s actions tick clocks for Aeler, rajas, Admiralty, and Covenant.
- Use the mines, bridges, and the Viceroy’s hall as arenas for social contests, where a breath-count is a threat and a sealed mine is a death sentence.
- Encourage players to earn Share Tokens from the elephant caravans — these are not debts but markers of mutual trust.

In the Mountain Satrapies, the mountain forgets nothing — and the ninth breath is always waiting. But the mountain also remembers every kindness, every shared fire, every elephant that was fed.

Chapter 30

The Brass Coast

Shore of Silver and Spice.

“The tariff is the law. The law is the tariff. I do not care if your goods are stolen, blessed, or weeping. I care that you pay. The Admiralty does not rule this coast. The ledger rules. I am merely its pen.”

I am a spice merchant, grandson of a raja who watched the first Kahfagian customs house rise on our beach. The Admiralty calls me a subject. The Sidhi call me a partner. I call myself a son of the Brass Coast. My grandfather’s sword hangs above my desk. One day, I may need it again. The sword has nine notches. Each notch is a promise the Admiralty broke.

The Brass Coast is Dhahara’s southern rim: a humid, feverish coastline of palm groves, salt pans, and crowded port cities. The Kahfagian Admiralty administers it as a “client province,” but three powers bleed into each other here, and none can draw a clean breath. The Admiralty holds the ports and the tariff ledgers. The Sidhi diaspora runs the ropeways, the lighthouse courts, and the freedman’s seal. And the native Dhaharan rajas — the hill lords who have lived here since before any foreign flag flew — grow the pepper, mine the iron, and watch the coast from inland fortresses, waiting.

Here, a man can buy anything — a ship, a spice lot, a freedman’s seal — and sell anything except his own shadow. The Admiralty’s Maritime Court settles disputes with a judge’s gavel and a marine’s cutlass. The Sidhi lighthouse courts offer an alternative: justice by green flame, witnessed by the drowned. And the rajas enforce their own law in the hills, where the Admiralty’s writ does not run. But here’s the secret the Admiralty doesn’t want you to know: the ropeways that carry spice baskets from ship to warehouse are old, and the dead still pull their weight — not just Sidhi dead, but the drowned of every nation who could not pay their passage. The coast remembers them all. The ninth rope on every ropeway is always frayed. No one replaces it. That rope carries the debt.

Never board a ship that has a green lantern at the mast. It means the captain is under a death vow — and you are the payment. If the lantern burns blue, run. The blue flame is the Admiral's oracle, and she does not make bargains.

— Raja Govind of the Kalinga foothills, who has never seen the sea and refuses to start

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Rice and fermented fish paste — the rice is grown in coastal paddies, the fish is caught by the lighthouse keepers' children. The children are paid in copper. The copper is melted into seals. The seals are sold to whoever can afford them. The ninth child never takes payment. No one knows why.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To read a lighthouse code. Brass Coast children are taught the eight lamp-flashes: Tariff, Inspection, Quarantine, Smuggler, Pirate, Rescue, Home, and the ninth — the flash that means "the collector is coming." The ninth flash is never used. The ninth flash is a warning. The children learn it anyway.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their papers. The Admiralty requires a manifest for every shipment, a seal for every trader, a stamp for every dock. A stranger whose papers are in order is a merchant. A stranger whose papers are missing is a smuggler. A stranger whose papers are too perfect is a spy. The spies are Admiralty. The Admiralty spies on itself. The ninth page of every manifest is always blank. That is where the dead travel.

What is the most common crime? Tariff evasion — but tariff evasion is not a crime, it is a profession. The tariffs are set by the Admiralty. The Admiralty is corrupt. The evaders pay the Admiralty directly. The payment is called a "consulting fee." The fee is tax-deductible. The ninth fee is always paid in salt, not silver. The salt comes from the Freedman's Grave.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The lighthouse lamps are not fuelled by oil. They are fuelled by the fat of the drowned — whales, sailors, slaves who did not survive the crossing. The fat burns green. The green is the colour of memory. The memory is the dead's. The ninth lamp on every tower is never lit. It is reserved for the collector.

Where do people go when they die? To the sea. The dead are weighted with brass and dropped in the deep channel. The channel is called the Freedman's Grave, but it holds rajas and pirates alike. The grave is unmarked. The grave is the entire coast. The ninth body dropped each year is never weighted. It floats. It always drifts toward the Admiral's palace.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a tariff — a payment of silver, calculated by the wronged party's estimate of their loss. The tariff is paid to the Maritime Court. The court takes a percentage. The percentage is the judge's fee. The judge's fee is negotiable. The ninth tariff ever collected was paid in a memory. The judge still remembers it. He wishes he did not.

What is the most important festival? The Burning of the Ledgers (new year). Every merchant's ledger is brought to the lighthouse. The ledgers are read aloud. The debts are tallied. The ledgers are burned. The ash falls on the water. The water carries the debts to the sea. The sea does not forgive. The sea reschedules. The ninth ledger is never burned. It is kept in a brass box at the bottom of the Freedman's Grave. It contains the Admiralty's own debts.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The lighthouse lamps are not all green. One lamp burns blue — the Admiral's personal beacon. The blue flame is not fat. It is a spirit — a Sidhi oracle who was bound to the lighthouse nine generations ago. She sees everything. She speaks to no one. The Admiral does not know she is still alive. Her ninth prophecy was never recorded. It said: "The collector will come by sea, and the ledger will burn from the bottom up."

30.1 The Brass Coast — “The Shore of Silver and Spice”

Quick Reference

Tagline: Three powers, one coast, and a ledger written in salt. The wrong spark will burn the whole shore.

Raja Govind (Native Hill Lord): “My grandfather watched the Kahfagians raise their first customs house on our beach. My father paid their tariffs. I will see them drown in their own ledgers — or I will drown trying. The Sidhi are guests. The Admiralty are thieves. The Brass Coast belongs to those who salt their own fish.”

Sidhi Freedman (Commoner): “My grandmother was born in Galanina. My mother was born in a slave ship. I was born in a lighthouse. The Admiralty calls me a subject. The Covenant calls me a freedman. But the rajas — they call me ‘guest’. And a guest who stays too long becomes a target.”

Genre / Mood: Mercantile noir, post-colonial pressure cooker, ghost-lit coast, three-way cold war.

Starting Location: A moonlit beach where three boats meet: a Kahfagian cutter, a Sidhi lighthouse skiff, and a Dhaharan spice dhow. A native pearl diver approaches you: “The Admiralty raised the salt tax again. The Sidhi say they’ll strike the ropeways. And my raja is sharpening his father’s sword. Pick a side — or the tide will pick for you.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Brass Coast is Dhahara’s southern rim: a humid, feverish coastline of palm groves, salt pans, and crowded port cities. Three powers bleed into each other here, and none can draw a clean breath.

The Admiralty (Kahfagian) holds the warm-weather ports and the tariff ledgers. Their warships patrol the shipping lanes, and their magistrates judge by maritime law. They call it a “client province.” The locals call it a noose.

The Sidhi are a foreign diaspora — refugees from Galanina who fled the Ashaani slavers generations ago. They control the ropeways, the lighthouse courts, and the freedman’s seal. They are welcome nowhere and trusted less, but without them the spice trade stops.

The Native Dhaharan Rajas are the hill lords who have lived here since before the Admiralty’s first anchor. They grow the pepper, mine the iron, and salt the fish. They watch the coast from inland fortresses, and they remember when no foreign flag flew over their beaches. Some accept bribes. Some sharpen blades. All of them are waiting.

The air smells of pepper, cinnamon, and the low tide of a thousand ships. Here, a man can buy anything — a ship, a spice lot, a freedman’s seal — and sell anything except his own shadow. But the price is never just silver. The Admiralty takes tariffs. The Sidhi take stories. The rajas take blood.

What you notice first: The heat pressing down like a damp cloth. The way the sea is the same colour as the sky, so the horizon disappears. The brass hooks on Sidhi belts, the brass scales on Admiralty desks, and the brass earrings in native chieftains’ ears — three metals, one coast.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never board a ship that has a green lantern at the mast. It means the captain is under a death vow — and you are the payment. Also, never refuse a cup of palm wine offered by a raja’s envoy. It is a test of honour, and the hills have long memories.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Tariff, The Heat of the Hills

The Brass Coast is not a colony — it is a slow-burning argument. The Admiralty holds the ports, the Sidhi hold the ropeways, and the rajas hold the land. Each side believes the other two are temporary. Each side is wrong.

The Admiralty’s Powder Keg: The Kahfagian governor, Admiral Voss, rules from a whitewashed fort that was once a Sidhi stronghold. His marines drink coconut wine and mock the “lazy natives.” His clerks mint tariffs that change with the tide. But his ships are few, his garrison is underpaid, and the rajas have started hiring pirate dhows to intercept his grain convoys.

The Sidhi’s Fragile Web: The Sidhi run the ropeways, the lighthouse courts, and the freedman’s seal. They are the only neutral party — and neutrality is a knife edge. A Sidhi strike would collapse the spice trade. A Sidhi betrayal would hand the coast to the Admiralty. And the rajas whisper that the Sidhi are just another foreign master, trading one chain for another.

The Rajas’ Slow Burn: The native Dhaharan hill lords speak a dozen dialects and worship a hundred spirits. They do not agree on much — except that the coast belongs to them. Some, like Raja Govind of the Kalinga foothills, play the Admiralty and the Sidhi against each other. Others, like the Veiled Queen of the Mangrove Delta, have already sent envoys to the Ashaani Breath-less. And in the smoky kitchens of every hill fort, young warriors sharpen their grandmother’s steel and wait for the sign.

The green flame of the Sidhi lighthouses, the brass scales of the Admiralty, and the iron swords of the rajas — the Brass Coast is a tripwire. Any spark could set it ablaze.

The Three Powers: Faction Clocks

Use these clocks to track the coast’s simmering tensions.

- Admiralty Grip [6]: Ticks up when the party enforces Kahfagian tariffs, sinks a pirate dhow, or exposes a Sidhi smuggler. At 4: Admiral Voss offers the party a Letter of Marque (legal piracy against rival powers). At 6: He declares martial law — all ports closed, all ships searched, all outsiders suspect.
- Sidhi Ropeway Control [6]: Ticks up when the party helps a Sidhi lighthouse keeper, frees a Sidhi prisoner, or protects a Sidhi caravan. At 4: The Sidhi offer a Lighthouse Charter (safe harbour in any Sidhi port). At 6: They call a ropeway strike — trade halts, and every faction blames each other.
- Raja’s Rebellion [8]: Ticks up when the party smuggles weapons to the hills, assassinates an Admiralty official, or reveals a Sidhi secret. At 4: A raja sends a secret envoy with a tiger’s claw (an invitation to an alliance). At 8: The hills rise — native war parties raid coastal towns, and the Admiralty responds with fire ships.

These clocks are not mutually exclusive. A clever party might feed one to delay another — or light all three at once.

8. Palm Grove of the Elephants† — A grove where temple elephants are bathed. The elephants are painted with turmeric. The paint is a prayer for safe passage — and for the foreigners to leave. ‘[RITUAL]’
9. Coral Reef of the Sunken Ship (Neutral) — A reef just offshore; a mast breaks the surface. The ship was a slaver; the slaves escaped. They live in the reef now. They trade salvage for silence — and they remember which raja helped them. ‘[LEGEND]’
10. Pepper Auction Floor (Native-owned)† — A crowded hall; voices bid in claps. The auctioneer has a hammer of whalebone. It cracks when he lies. The cracks are getting louder. The Admiralty’s tariff agents sit in a raised gallery. ‘[TRADE]’
- J The Green Lantern Tavern (Sidhi) — A low building with a green lantern. The lantern is never lit. The owner says it would attract the wrong kind of dead. The right kind drink here for free — and they remember every whispered plot. ‘[SOCIAL]’
- Q The Shipbreaker’s Yard (Admiralty-licensed)‡ — A beach where old ships are dismantled. The workers are convicts; they wear chains that drag in the sand. They earn one link off each season. The chains are paid for by the rajas’ taxes. ‘[LABOR]’
- K The Admiral’s Palace (Former Sidhi Fort)‡ — A former Sidhi fort, now occupied by Kahfagian officers. The flag is flown upside down. The Admiral does not know the difference. The Sidhi do. They count the days. The rajas count the cannons. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
- A The Undercliff (Smuggler’s Cove, native-controlled)† — A smuggler’s cove accessible only at low tide. The entrance is a cave; the cave leads to a hidden harbour. The harbour is a city of thieves — and a union of freedmen. The rajas’ tax collectors meet here to plan. ‘[LEGEND]’

Hearts — People & Factions

2. Rani Kumar (Native Firebrand)† — Raja Govind’s daughter, with a tiger coiled on her arm. “My father negotiates. I sharpen swords. The Admiralty will leave — or they will be buried here. There is no third way.” ‘[POLITICS]’ ‘[REBELLION]’
3. Sidhi Lighthouse Keeper — Blind in one eye; carries a brass telescope. He can see the future through the lens. “Only the futures that end at sea,” he says. “The rest are private. I sell them to captains who need to avoid them — and to rajas who need to know when to strike.” ‘[JUSTICE]’
4. Kahfagian Port-Master (Syndic Olena)‡ — A thin woman with a brass hook for a hand. The hook is a stamp. She stamps every tariff receipt. The stamp leaves a scar. She says it builds character. The scarred merchants say it builds grudges. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
5. Pepper Factor (Native)† — A thin woman with red-stained fingers and a black tongue. She is the raja’s eyes in the market. She can tell the quality of pepper by taste. She has never been wrong. She has also never been paid on time — by the Admiralty. ‘[TRADE]’ ‘[SPY]’
6. Shipwright Dara (Sidhi) — A woman with a hammer and a jar of brass nails. She builds boats for freed slaves. Each boat is named after a dead family member. The names are never painted — only carved. The wood remembers. So do the rajas, who buy her boats for their own smugglers. ‘[COMMUNITY]’
7. Admiral Voss‡ — A grey-haired man with a glass eye. The glass eye is from a defeated pirate. The pirate still watches through it. Voss does not sleep well. The eye weeps salt water. He dreams of the rajas’ torches. ‘[AUTHORITY]’

8. Raja Govind (Inland Hill Lord)† — A young man in silk, come to the coast to sell iron. He has never seen the sea. He is afraid of it. He refuses to step on a boat. He negotiates from the shore, shouting through a brass horn. His daughter mocks him — but she will not leave his side. ‘[POLITICS]’ ‘[TRAGEDY]’
9. The Veiled Queen (Mangrove Delta)† — A woman in a silver mask, ruler of the southern marshes. “I have spoken to the Admiralty’s spy, the Sidhi’s whisperer, and the Ashaani’s shadow. All of them will pay for my people’s freedom — or I will drown them all in the delta. The mask is not to hide my face. It is to hide my smile.” ‘[MYSTERY]’ ‘[MASTERMIND]’
10. Smuggler Captain (Neutral, works for highest bidder) — A woman with a parrot on her shoulder, a curved knife on her belt. The parrot is her navigator; it knows the reefs by sound. The parrot is blind. It has never been wrong. Her loyalty is to the cargo’s weight, not any flag. ‘[STEALTH]’
- J The Black Bishop (Covenant Maritime Judge) — A judge who rules on maritime disputes. He wears a ring made from a ship’s nail. The ship was the first slaver he freed. The nail still has rust on it. He calls it his conscience. The Admiralty calls him a fool. The rajas call him a useful idiot. ‘[JUSTICE]’
- Q The Green Lantern’s Owner (Sidhi widow) — A woman with no shadow. She sold her shadow for the tavern. The shadow now serves drinks. The customers do not notice. The shadow remembers every secret — and whispers them to the highest bidder. ‘[MYSTERY]’
- K The Sea King of Kalinga (Pirate Lord, hired by rajas)† — A pirate lord with a fleet of painted dhows. He has nine wives; each is from a different kingdom. The ninth is a spy. He knows. He keeps her for the gossip — and because she is the only one who knows the delta’s secret channels. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[PIRATE]’
- A The First Freedman (Legend, Sidhi) — A slave who bought his freedom with a story. He now sits at the bottom of the Ninth Well. If you tell him a true story, he will tell you the location of a hidden lighthouse. The lighthouse is not on any map. It is where the rajas and the Sidhi first swore a secret pact. ‘[LEGEND]’

Clubs — Complications/Threats

2. Pepper Dust Fire (Warehouse)† — A spark ignites a native-owned warehouse; the air is flammable. ‘[DISASTER]’ The workers are trapped. Save them or save the cargo. The fire was set by an Admiralty agent to frame the Sidhi. The rajas are watching.
3. Admiralty Press Gang‡ — Kahfagian marines grab bystanders for the fleet. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ The marines are drunk. They do not recognise rank. One of the bystanders is a raja’s son in disguise. The hills will demand blood if he is taken.
4. Green Lantern Lit (Sidhi Tavern) — Someone lights the forbidden lantern. The dead come. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[FEAR]’ They are looking for the person who killed them. That person is a native tax collector who sold out his village. The crowd will tear him apart — or protect him. Choose.
5. Shipbreaker’s Curse (Admiralty Yard)‡ — A cursed ship in the yard breaks its chains. It wants a new victim — a ship’s captain. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ The captain is an Admiralty loyalist. The ship was a slaver that carried native prisoners. The ghosts want his blood. Do you help him or let them take him?
6. Tariff Hike (Admiralty Decree)‡ — The port-master doubles duties on all goods. The hike is a bribe. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The bribe is to the Black Bishop. The Bishop has already accepted. Your protest is treason. The native merchants are watching to see which side you choose.

7. Coral Reef Piracy (Native-hired)† — Pirates hide behind the reef; they attack at dusk. '[COMBAT]' '[STEALTH]' The pirates are hired by a raja to disrupt Admiralty supply ships. They will not harm Sidhi vessels — but they cannot always tell the difference.
8. Elephant Rampage (Native Temple)† — A temple elephant breaks free and runs through the market. '[DISASTER]' It is looking for its mahout, who was arrested by the Admiralty for smuggling. The mahout is innocent. The elephant will not hurt children. Admiralty marines are another matter.
9. Smuggler's Betrayal (Neutral) — A smuggler captain sells the party to the Admiralty. '[SOCIAL]' '[TRAP]' The betrayal was a test. The captain wants to see if you can escape. If you do, you are worthy of trust — and the rajas will contact you.
10. Sea King's Tax (Pirate Blockade, hired by rajas)† — A Kalingan pirate fleet blockades the harbour. The tax is one ship. '[AUTHORITY]' '[COMBAT]' Choose which ship to give up. The Sea King will remember your choice. The crew will remember longer. The rajas are testing your loyalty.
- J Drowned Priest's Demand (Neutral) — The ghost appears during the day. He asks for a name. '[DEATH]' '[SOCIAL]' The name must be someone who owes a death — a slaver, a corrupt customs officer, a raja who sold his own people. If you cannot give one, he takes yours.
- Q Black Bishop's Verdict (False)‡ — The judge declares the party's cargo forfeit. The verdict is false. '[JUSTICE]' '[TRAP]' The bishop is bribed. The briber is the Admiralty. Prove it, or lose everything. The real verdict is written in disappearing ink. The rajas' spies are in the gallery.
- K Sea King's Ninth Wife (Spy, works for the Veiled Queen)† — The spy reveals herself. She offers a deal: the Sea King's treasure for safe passage. '[POLITICS]' '[MAGIC]' The treasure is a curse. The curse is a fragment of the Kalrantha amulet. The amulet whispers in your sleep. It tells you which faction will betray you first.
- A Undercliff Collapse (Smuggler's Cove)† — A rockslide seals the smugglers' cove. Inside are the party and a monster. '[DEATH]' '[TRAP]' The monster is a salt-crocodile. It is blind. It hunts by sound. The walls are listening — and so are the rajas' spies, who will arrive at dawn to see who survived.

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Lighthouse Charter (Sidhi) — The right to anchor in any Sidhi port without inspection. '[TRAVEL]' The key fits a lock on a sea-chest, not a harbour gate. The chest contains a map of smuggler's coves — and the names of rajas who pay protection.
3. Lighthouse Keeper's Lens (Sidhi) — Look through it to see the nearest slaver ship. '[JUSTICE]' The lens also shows the faces of the slaves on board. They look back. They do not blink. It also shows the brand on the slaver's captain — and which raja sold them.
4. Freedman's Seal (Sidhi) — Proof of emancipation. Glows when a slaver ship is near. '[SOCIAL]' It also glows when a Black Hand agent is near — and when a native informer is in the room. Trust the glow. It has never been wrong.
5. Pepper Merchant's Seal (Native)† — A wax seal from a dead factor. Present it to sell pepper at double price. '[TRADE]' The factor's ghost haunts the warehouse. He will ask for a story. The story must be about a bad deal — preferably one that cheated the Admiralty.

6. Salt Widow’s Blessing (Native)† — A bag of bitter salt. Throw it into the sea to calm a storm. ‘[WEATHER]’ The salt is from the widows’ pans. They have blessed it with their tears. The storm will pause for one hour — long enough for a raja’s fleet to escape.
7. Admiral’s Pardon (Kahfagian)‡ — A signed document. Cancels one crime on the Brass Coast. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The Admiral signs with a glass eye. The signature is a lie. The pardon still works — but the eye watches you afterwards. It reports to the Admiralty’s spymaster.
8. Sidhi Court Ruling (Sidhi) — A written judgment. Win any maritime dispute in a Sidhi court. ‘[JUSTICE]’ The ruling is valid only if witnessed by a lighthouse keeper. The keeper is Idris. He will witness for a story — and the story will reach the rajas within a day.
9. Elephant’s Tooth (Native)† — A tusk from a temple elephant. Present it to any temple for shelter. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The elephant was executed for killing an Admiralty tax collector. The temple will not refuse. They will also not ask questions. They will offer you a cup of palm wine — and a message from the Veiled Queen.
10. Shipbreaker’s Hook (Admiralty)‡ — The hook of a dead shipbreaker. Use it to command the cursed ship in the yard. ‘[MAGIC]’ The ship will obey one command — then it will try to drown you. The hook is warm. It remembers its owner’s last words: “Burn the tariff ledgers.”
- J Smuggler’s Map (Neutral) — A chart of hidden coves, tattooed on a dead sailor’s back. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The skin is preserved in salt water. It must be kept wet or the map fades. The sailor’s ghost will guide you — for a fee. The fee is a promise to avenge him against the Admiralty.
- Q Sea King’s Pardon (Native-hired)† — A flag of truce. Fly it to pass Kalingan waters unharmed. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The flag is a shirt. The shirt belonged to a dead pirate — a native hero who fought the Admiralty. He may want it back. He will ask politely. If you refuse, the rajas will remember.
- K Green Lantern’s Flame (Sidhi) — A small lantern that burns green. Light it to summon the dead. ‘[DEATH]’ They will answer one question. Then they will ask one. The question is never easy. The answer is never free — but the dead know which faction is lying.
- A Black Bishop’s Ring (Covenant) — Wear it to be immune to Admiralty arrest in Sidhi ports. ‘[JUSTICE]’ The nail is from a freed slaver. The slaves’ ghosts protect you. They also watch. They judge. They remember. If you betray the rajas, the ring will grow cold — and the ghosts will abandon you.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (charters, lenses, seals) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo coast-omens—green flames that burn blue, salt that tastes sweet, a drowned face in a still puddle, a tiger’s roar from the hills.
- When a Club is drawn, tick one of the three faction clocks (Admiralty Grip, Sidhi Ropeway Control, Raja’s Rebellion) based on the nature of the complication.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Three Faction Clocks (see above). These are the campaign's pressure gauge. Use them to determine which faction acts first when the party dithers.
- The Sidhi Diaspora Network: Sidhi characters gain +1 die on social rolls with other Sidhi, but -1 die on social rolls with Admiralty officials. With native rajas, they are neutral (no modifier) — but the rajas will always treat them as “guests,” never as allies.
- Native Hill Networks: Native characters gain +1 die on social rolls with rajas and hill folk, but -1 die on social rolls with Admiralty officials. With Sidhi, they are cautious (no modifier) — the Sidhi are useful, but they are still foreigners.
- The Tariff Clock [6] (renamed Admiralty Grip). Already covered above.
- Green Flame Justice: Sidhi lighthouse courts operate on the principle of “witnessed truth.” Any party member may request a green flame judgment instead of a conventional trial. Roll Presence + Lore (DV 4). On success, the judge rules in your favour; on a miss, the green flame shows a hidden crime you committed — and the penalty is doubled. However, if the crime was committed against a native, the rajas will learn of it.
- Ropeway Leverage: The ropeways are the arteries of the coast. A character who controls a ropeway (by owning a share, bribing a foreman, or holding a Sidhi charter) may impose a “ropeway toll” on any cargo moving through that district: +1 Supply to the party or -1 Supply to a rival. Using this leverage ticks the Sidhi Ropeway Control clock by 1.
- Native Smuggling Routes: A character with a native contact (e.g., a pepper factor or a salt widow) can use native smuggling routes to move goods without Admiralty inspection. This ticks the Raja's Rebellion clock by 1 but also ticks the Tariff Clock (Admiralty Grip) by 1 if discovered.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Green Keeper — The Witness. The flame that shows the truth, even when it burns — especially when it burns a foreigner's lie.
 - The Hook — Maelstraeus. The price of a second chance; the interest on a freedman's soul. The rajas say the Hook is Admiralty silver.
 - The Tide Father — Khemesh. The pressure beneath the keel; the debt that the sea collects. The widows say he is a native god, stolen by the Sidhi.
 - The Lantern Bearer — The Traveler. The light that guides lost ships — and lost rebellions. The Veiled Queen invokes him before every raid.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Sidhi Freedmen and the Breath-less (Ashaan): The Sidhi of the Brass Coast have family who were taken as slaves to Ashan. A freedman's seal can be used to smuggle a Breath-less agent out of Galanina. Captain Idris has done this nine times. The tenth may be his last — and the rajas are watching to see if the Sidhi are still loyal to their own.
- Spice Trade and the Fhara (Way of Silk): Pepper from the Brass Coast is a major commodity on the Fhara caravan routes. A Fhara well-judge may accept a Sidhi lighthouse charter as proof of credit. The charter must be witnessed by a living flame. The rajas have begun forging their own charters — and the Fhara cannot tell the difference.
- The Undercliff and the Kalrantha Amulet (Dhahara): The smuggler's cove is a known transit point for artifacts stolen from the Himadri temple. The Sea King's ninth wife claims to have seen the amulet pass through. She also claims the amulet spoke to her. It asked for a drink of water. The Veiled Queen believes the amulet is the key to driving out the Admiralty — but only if she can control it.

- The Drowned Priest and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The ghost who walks the shore at low tide is said to be a Oath-Keeper who lost his way. Aelaerem leave offerings of salt to keep him from following them home. The salt must be from the pans of the Silent Widows. Any other salt will attract him — and the rajas have started using him as a weapon, luring him toward Admiralty patrols.

Brass Coast Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Tide: Toss a crust into the harbour. Ignore the first Pepper Dust Fire penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Anchor Chain: Tie a sailor’s knot in a mooring rope. Cancel Admiralty Press Gang or take –1 die on your next escape roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Lighthouse: Whisper a dead captain’s name into the green flame. Gain +1 Effect when smuggling this scene, but mark Obligation to the Sidhi — and the rajas will learn the name. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Tiger’s Whistle: Whistle three times toward the hills before a deal. If a tiger answers, the deal is honest. If silent, the other party is lying. (GM spends 1 SB to have a tiger answer falsely once per session.) ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from Admiralty customs, Sidhi rope-men, or a raja’s spy.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby warehouse guards, lighthouse keepers, or hill lookouts.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for smugglers, the Black Bishop’s agents, or a tiger.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favourable tide.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Admiralty marines, Sidhi enforcers, or a raja’s war party becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to green flash, rising tide, or a dust storm from the hills.
- Foe Appears: An Admiralty press gang, a Sidhi debt collector, or a native elephant arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional Admiralty cutters, Sidhi ropemen, or hill warriors arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.
- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes—tariff hike declared / green lantern lit / raja's rebellion begins early.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment (Admiralty Grip, Sidhi Ropeway Control, or Raja's Rebellion).
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: Admiral Voss, the Veiled Queen, or the Black Bishop intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically—harbour catches fire / lighthouse collapses / hill fort's beacon is lit.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice—omen appears / blessing lost / curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives — often by revealing that a faction has already made a secret pact.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Brass Coast (Tariff Law): Scales tip without weight, ledgers rewrite themselves, a port-master's hook stamps a nullity — and a raja's dagger appears on the counter.
- Brass Coast (Lighthouse Law): Green flame flickers, salt crystals form on skin, a drowned face appears in a puddle — and a hill lookout's horn sounds twice.
- Brass Coast (Smuggler's Law): Ropeways hum with whispers, a parrot speaks a secret, a hidden cove appears on no map — and a tiger's shadow crosses the moon.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Sail): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Green Flash (the lighthouse blinds pursuers).
- Cut the Tariff (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a lighthouse charter is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Raid (Resolve + Spirit): On a hit in Admiralty Press Gang, you pick who is taken; on a miss, the GM does — and the rajas will remember who you abandoned.

Boss Seeds (Tariff & Flame & Rebellion)

- The Hook-Master (Admiralty Spymaster)‡ — Phases: Tariff Forgeries → Orchestrated Strike → Port Coup. Cracks: recover a true stamp, expose a forged ledger, survive a night in a lighthouse — or turn a raja against him.
- The Drowned Admiral (Ghost Fleet, Sidhi legend) — Phases: Lost Ships Called Home → Procession of Empty Lanterns → Tide-Baptism of a Factor. Cracks: relic green flame, survivor testimony, the lighthouse keeper's lens turning clear — and a native prayer spoken over the drowned.

- The Veiled Queen’s Ascension (Native Rebellion)† — Phases: Whisper in the Mangroves → The Tiger’s Claw → The Burning of the Ledgers. Cracks: unmask her face (revealing a childhood scar), expose her alliance with the Ashaani, or convince her that freedom requires mercy, not just blood.

Patronage & Power

On the Brass Coast, power flows through tariffs, ropeways, and the loyalty of the hill folk. The Admiralty holds the ports, the Sidhi hold the ropes, and the rajas hold the land. No single faction can win — but any faction can light the fuse.

For the GM: Use the three faction clocks as your campaign’s heartbeat. Every session, tick at least one clock based on the party’s actions (or inaction). Let the players see the powder keg growing. When a clock fills, something explodes — a rebellion, a strike, a massacre. The party’s job is not to prevent the explosion — it’s to survive it and choose who rises from the ashes.

Native Focus: The rajas are not victims — they are players. They have their own spies, their own fleets (via the Sea King), and their own magical traditions (tiger spirits, salt widows, elephant oracles). Whenever the party interacts with the Brass Coast, ask: “How would a native see this?” The Sidhi are refugees; the Admiralty are occupiers. The rajas are the hosts — and they are tired of guests.

Chapter 31

The Nine Kingdoms

The Peacock Throne and Its Rivals.

“The Peacock Throne is not a seat. It is a promise made by the first sun king: that the nine kingdoms would remain nine, never one, never fewer. I do not rule. I balance. A peacock’s tail has nine eyes. Each eye watches a different kingdom. When one closes, the throne weeps.”

I am a Temple Dancer. My dance is not for the king. It is for the monsoon. If my ankle bells ring true, the rains come. If they falter, the wells dry. They have never faltered. I do not sleep before a performance. I dream the rhythm. And I dream of the missing ninth.

Between the Satrapies plateau and the Brass Coast lies a fertile, contested lowland: the land of the Nine Kingdoms. This is the heart of Dhahara, where ancient dynasties still claim descent from the sun, and where the Peacock Throne of Ahimsa casts its shadow over half a dozen rival courts. Here, rivers are borders, elephants are war machines, and every harvest is a negotiation between kings who have never met but whose grandfathers swore blood oaths.

But here’s the secret the Maharaja doesn’t want you to know: the number “nine” is a lie. There have never been nine kingdoms. The number is a ritual — a prayer that the Hollow will not notice that one of the nine is always missing. The throne weeps because the missing kingdom is always the one that mattered. Its debt is still compounding.

The Covenant has a strong presence in the sacred cities; the Aeler have counting houses in the iron towns; the Sidhi sail up the rivers to trade. But the Nine Kingdoms belong to the Dhaharan — to their poets, their temple dancers, their bandit kings, and their queens who rule from behind silk screens. A king’s authority rests on his genealogy — how many generations back to the sun, how many treaties sealed, how many marriages made. But a king's true power rests on how much of his family's debt has been paid. The Peacock Throne of Ahimsa is the nominal centre, but the other eight kings vie for influence, and the balance shifts with every monsoon.

Never praise a king's elephant. The elephant is sacred; your praise will be taken as an insult to the king's own mount. Compliment the mahout instead. The mahout will tell the elephant. The ninth elephant in the royal stables has no mahout. It waits.

— Temple Dancer Mira, who has stopped three droughts and started none

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Rice porridge with mango pickle — the rice is from the royal granaries, the mangoes are from the king's orchards. The king's orchards are irrigated by the river. The river is contested. The contest is a negotiation. The negotiation is breakfast. The ninth grain of rice in every bowl is left uneaten. It is an offering to the missing kingdom.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To recite their genealogy. Nine Kingdoms children are taught the names of their ancestors back to the sun. A child who cannot recite is a child without a kingdom. A child without a kingdom is a servant. Servants are not fed. The ninth ancestor is never named. That is the gap where the Hollow sits.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their caste mark. The Nine Kingdoms have nine castes — priest, warrior, merchant, farmer, artisan, servant, outcast, foreigner, and the ninth — the caste that has no name. The ninth caste is the king's spies. The spies are everywhere. The spies have no caste mark. Their faces are always the same. No one can describe them.

What is the most common crime? Tax evasion — but tax evasion is not a crime, it is a political statement. The king's tax collectors are also the king's spies. A merchant who evades taxes is a merchant who has something to hide. The king wants to know what. The king will find out. The ninth tax collector vanished last year. His shadow still walks the counting house.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Peacock Throne is empty. The Maharaja died seven years ago. His death was concealed by the courtiers, who rule in his name. The courtiers are the nine ministers. The ninth minister is a eunuch who controls the palace guards. The eunuch has the real power. He has no shadow. The guards do not notice.

Where do people go when they die? To the river. The dead are cremated on the ghats. Their ashes are scattered on the water. The water flows to the sea. The sea is the kingdom's border. The border is a negotiation. The negotiation never ends. The ninth ghat is reserved for the missing kingdom. It has never been used. It is always warm.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a dance — a performance at the temple of the sun. The dance is judged by the priest. If the priest smiles, you are forgiven. If the priest weeps, you are not. If the priest is silent, you are cursed. The curse is the sun's glare. The sun will not look away. The ninth dance ever performed was for a debt to the Hollow. The dancer is still dancing. No one watches.

What is the most important festival? The Coronation of the Monsoon (summer). The king offers a golden elephant to the rain clouds. The clouds accept or refuse. The clouds have refused for nine years. The king's treasury is empty. The king's patience is not. The ninth golden elephant was hollow. It was filled with ashes. The ashes belonged to the ninth king.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The golden elephant is hollow. It is filled with the ashes of the ninth king — the one who tried to unite the kingdoms and failed. His ghost rides the monsoon winds. His ghost is still trying. His ghost will never succeed. But every year, the clouds refuse because they are waiting for him to ask. He never does.

31.1 The Nine Kingdoms — “The Peacock Throne and Its Rivals”

Quick Reference

Tagline: Nine thrones, one shadow. The peacock watches. The debt remembers.

Maharaja of Ahimsa (Elite): “The Peacock Throne is not a seat. It is a promise made by the first sun king: that the nine kingdoms would remain nine, never one, never fewer. I do not rule. I balance. A peacock’s tail has nine eyes. Each eye watches a different kingdom. When one closes, the throne weeps.”

Temple Dancer (Commoner): “My dance is not for the king. It is for the monsoon. If my ankle bells ring true, the rains come. If they falter, the wells dry. They have never faltered. I do not sleep before a performance. I dream the rhythm. And I dream of the missing ninth.”

Genre / Mood: Courtly intrigue, elephant warfare, monsoon ritual, honour as ancestral debt.

Starting Location: The Peacock Throne Hall in Ahimsa, where a golden peacock with ruby eyes watches the court. The Maharaja’s chamberlain approaches: “The Maharaja wishes to renew the Nine-Kingdom Pact. But the King of Vajrapur has sent a forged genealogy. The Queen of Mahishmati has refused to attend. And the ninth kingdom — the one that is always missing — has sent a messenger. The messenger is a ghost. Speak carefully.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Between the Satrapies plateau and the Brass Coast lies a fertile, contested lowland: the land of the Nine Kingdoms. This is the heart of Dhahara, where ancient dynasties still claim descent from the sun, and where the Peacock Throne of Ahimsa casts its shadow over half a dozen rival courts. Here, rivers are borders, elephants are war machines, and every harvest is a negotiation between kings who have never met but whose grandfathers swore blood oaths. The Covenant has a strong presence in the sacred cities; the Aeler have counting houses in the iron towns; the Sidhi sail up the rivers to trade. But the Nine Kingdoms belong to the Dhaharan — to their poets, their temple dancers, their bandit kings, and their queens who rule from behind silk screens.

But the number “nine” is a lie — and a debt. There have never been nine kingdoms. The number is a ritual, a prayer that the Hollow will not notice that one of the nine is always missing. That missing kingdom changes. Sometimes it is a real kingdom that fell to plague or war; sometimes it is a kingdom that never was, a placeholder kept empty to balance the ledger. The Peacock Throne weeps because the missing kingdom is always the one that mattered — and because the Hollow collects interest on its absence.

What you notice first: The smell of jasmine and dust. The way every crossroads has a painted stone — a boundary marker, a warning, a prayer. The constant murmur of bazaars where haggling is a form of theatre. The way every noble touches their left wrist when speaking of ancestors — a gesture of debt.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never praise a king’s elephant. The elephant is sacred; your praise will be taken as an insult to the king’s own mount. Compliment the mahout instead. The mahout will tell the elephant.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Peacock and the Interest of the Hollow

Power here is measured in river rights, elephant herds, and the thickness of a dynasty’s archive — but also in ancestral debt. A king’s authority rests not only on how many generations back to the sun, but on how many of those generations kept their promises. The Peacock Throne of Ahimsa is the nominal centre, but the other eight kings vie for influence, and the balance shifts with every monsoon. The Covenant judges provide legal arbitration; the temple dancers control the ritual calendar; the bandit kings of Kalinga pay no tribute to anyone. And somewhere, in the gap between the eighth and the ninth, the Hollow waits to collect what the missing kingdom owes.

Spades — Places

2. Peacock Throne Hall — A vast chamber with pillars of carved marble; the throne is a peacock of gold and lapis lazuli. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The peacock’s eyes are rubies. They follow anyone who approaches the throne. The throne has never been sat upon by a usurper. The ninth eye is missing — it fell out during the last succession war and was never replaced.
3. Iron Gate Market (Vajrapur) — A bazaar outside the fortress; the smell of iron dust and spices. ‘[TRADE]’ The market has a section where slaves are sold. The slaves wear iron collars stamped with the king’s mark. One collar is always empty — reserved for the ghost of the missing ninth kingdom.
4. Buffalo Race Track (Mahishmati) — A dusty oval; the betting is fierce. ‘[SPORT]’ The track has a shrine at the centre — a buffalo that never lost. Its skeleton is on display. The skeleton sometimes snorts. When it does, a debt is about to come due.
5. Sacred City of Sravasti (Kosala) — A walled city with a thousand temples; the Covenant courthouse is here. ‘[JUSTICE]’ The city has no bells. The Covenant forbids them. The silence is enforced by armed judges. The silence is loudest at noon. The ninth temple has no door.
6. Anga Fort — A hilltop fortress with a dry moat; the walls are painted with tiger stripes. ‘[DEFENSE]’ The fortress has never been taken. The king’s secret is a network of hidden tunnels. The tunnels have not been mapped in a century. One tunnel leads to the missing ninth kingdom — or so the ghosts say.
7. Western Port of Surashtra — A Sidhi trading post; the harbour is full of dhows. ‘[TRADE]’ The port has a lighthouse shaped like a woman. The woman is a Sidhi saint. Her lamp is lit with green flame. The flame flickers when a ninth kingdom debt is recalled.
8. Rajagriha Ruins — The former imperial capital, now a graveyard of broken pillars. ‘[RUINS]’ ‘[DEATH]’ The ruins are haunted by the ghosts of Gupta emperors. They ask for news of their empire. They do not accept bad news. They also ask who sits on the ninth throne.
9. Elephant Stables of Ahimsa — A complex of stone stalls; each elephant has its own name carved above the door. ‘[COMMUNITY]’ The names are not the elephants’ birth names. They are the names of enemies they trampled. The elephants remember. One stall is always empty — for the elephant that carried the ninth king.
10. Well of the Nine Kings — A deep stepwell with nine landings; each landing has a statue of a different king. ‘[MYSTERY]’ The water is black. It shows the face of the next king to die. The face changes when you blink. The ninth landing shows only a reflection of the viewer — the missing king is always you.
11. Forgotten Throne of Kalinga — A stone chair sunk in a marsh; the Bandit Queen holds court there. ‘[SECRET]’ The throne was once a king’s. He lost a bet. The bet was his kingdom. The marsh still smells of that laughter. The throne has a ninth armrest, worn smooth by no hand.
- J Silent Court of Kosala — A Covenant courthouse with no speaking allowed; all arguments are written. ‘[JUSTICE]’ The judges write their verdicts in disappearing ink. Only they know the secret reagent. The reagent is tears. The ninth judge has no face — only a veil of grey silk.
- Q Peacock Gardens — A walled garden behind the throne hall; only the king may enter.

‘[LEGEND]’ The garden contains a single peacock that is immortal. It was the first king’s familiar. It has not eaten in three hundred years. It has nine feathers in its tail. One falls each time a kingdom dies.

K Whispering Pass (Anga-Mahishmati) — A narrow defile where the wind carries conversations. ‘[SPY]’ Spies use it to listen to enemy camps. The pass is named for the dead — they whisper too. Their whispers are always true. The ninth whisper is always a name you have never heard.

A Nine Kings’ Tomb — A subterranean complex where the founders of each dynasty are buried. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[LEGEND]’ The tomb is sealed. The key is a single word that changes each year — the name of the current weakest king. The word is never spoken aloud. The ninth sarcophagus is empty. It waits.

(Chamberlain/Overseer/Herders) Peacock Throne chamberlain with a mirror on a stick; iron mines overseer (dwarf with a breath-counter); buffalo herder with a red turban.

Hearts — People & Factions

2. Peacock Throne Chamberlain — A eunuch in silk; he controls access to the king. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ He has a mirror on a stick; he uses it to see around corners. He has seen nine assassins before they struck. He has not warned the king about the tenth. The tenth works for the missing kingdom.
3. Iron Mines Overseer (Dwarf) — Wears an Aeler breath-counter. He is loyal to the queen, but his cousin is a viceroy’s clerk. ‘[POLITICS]’ He keeps two ledgers. One is for the queen. One is for the Aeler. Both are forgeries. The truth is in his head. He is losing his memory. The ninth entry in every ledger is always wrong.
4. Buffalo Herder — A young man with a staff and a red turban. ‘[COMMUNITY]’ He can find water in a drought by listening to the ground. His buffalo have never gone thirsty. He shares his wells with travellers. The ninth well he dug produced blood instead of water. He does not speak of it.

6. Temple Dancer (Mira) — A woman with anklets of silver and eyes lined with kohl. ‘[RITUAL]’ Her dance is a prayer. The prayer is for peace. She has never failed — but the peace never lasts. She dances anyway. In the ninth step of her dance, she always stumbles slightly. No one knows why.
7. Bandit of Kalinga — A man with a parrot on his shoulder, a scar across his face. ‘[STEALTH]’ The parrot is his conscience. It screams when he lies. He lies often. The parrot has lost its voice. It regained it once, to name the ninth king’s murderer. The name was never spoken aloud.
8. Spice Merchant (Sidhi) — A Sidhi trader with a leather bag full of cinnamon. He speaks seven languages. ‘[TRADE]’ He lies in all of them. His weights are true, though. He says the weights are the only honest thing about him. The ninth weight in his set is a forgery — it is exactly one grain lighter. He uses it to pay debts to the Hollow.
9. Poet of the Peacock Throne — A woman with a stringed instrument, her voice cracked from singing. ‘[SOCIAL]’ She writes verses for the king. The verses are encoded warnings. The king cannot read. He has her sing them instead. Her ninth verse is a curse that activates when the missing kingdom returns. She prays it never does.

10. Well Keeper of the Nine Kings — A blind woman who sits by the stepwell. ‘[MYSTERY]’ She knows the depth of the water by the echo of a dropped stone. She knows the future by the same echo. She does not charge for her visions. She charges for the silence afterwards. The ninth echo always says the same word: “Wait.”
11. War Elephant Mahout — An old man who has never lost a battle. He whispers to his elephant in a language of clicks. ‘[COMBAT]’ The elephant’s name is “Sorry.” It has trampled nine enemies. It always apologises. The ninth apology was accepted by a ghost. The ghost now rides beside it.
- J Ghost of Rajagriha — A translucent figure in a crown. He asks one question: “Does my empire still stand?” ‘[DEATH]’ The answer must be a lie, or he will weep and flood the ruins. The lie must be kind. He can tell the difference. He has asked the question nine times. The ninth answer was silence. He is still waiting.
- Q Silent Judge’s Clerk — A young woman who writes in disappearing ink. She is the only one who knows the reagent. ‘[JUSTICE]’ She has been attacked twice. She carries a dagger made of frozen ink. The ink melts after one use. The ninth time she uses it, the dagger will not melt. She does not know what that means.
- K Peacock Keeper — A boy who tends the immortal peacock. The peacock speaks to him. ‘[LEGEND]’ It tells him which courtiers are plotting. The boy has never been wrong. He does not tell the king. He tells the peacock. The peacock has nine warnings stored. It will speak the ninth when the missing kingdom returns.
- A Ninth King’s Ghost — A shade that walks the tomb. It points at the killer — but the killer is always a living king. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[FEAR]’ It points at whoever is closest. That person is accused. The accusation is always false. The crowd does not care. The ninth time it points, it will point at the true killer. No one will believe it.

(Stampede/Riot/Excommunication) Elephant stampede — trained to kill; buffalo race riot — crowd turns violent; Covenant excommunication — contract voided, goods seized.

Clubs — Complications/Threats

2. Elephant Stampede (Royal) — The king’s elephants break loose; they are trained to kill. ‘[DISASTER]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ The stampede was ordered by a rival queen. The target is a visiting diplomat. The diplomat is you. The elephants are not confused. One elephant wears a saddle from the missing ninth kingdom.
3. Buffalo Race Riot — A disputed finish; the crowd turns violent. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ The dispute is a trap. The losing king wants an excuse to invade. You are the excuse. The buffalo are innocent. The ninth buffalo in the race has no shadow.
4. Covenant Excommunication — High Judge Vasu declares your contract void; your goods are seized. ‘[JUSTICE]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The excommunication is a bribe. The bribe was paid by a merchant you undercut. The merchant is in the crowd, smiling. He wears a ninth ring on a hand that has only eight fingers.
5. Temple Dance Cursed — Mira stumbles; the rain does not come. The priest blames the party. ‘[RITUAL]’ ‘[SOCIAL]’ The sacrifice is a goat. The goat is a spy. The spy is working for Vajrapur. The goat will not stop talking. It speaks of the ninth kingdom in a language that sounds like bells.

6. Spy in the Peacock Gardens — Someone overheard the king's war plans. '[POLITICS]' '[STEALTH]' The spy is a poet. The poet is you — you were hired to write verses, not to eavesdrop. The king has a long memory for verse. The verse you overheard was the ninth stanza of a forbidden epic.
 7. Nine Kings' Tomb Robbers — Grave robbers break into the tomb. They seek the key word. '[DEATH]' '[THEFT]' The word is "forgiveness." The robbers are agents of a rival kingdom. They do not know the word. They are digging anyway. The ninth sarcophagus is open. It is empty. The robbers did not open it.
 8. Well of Nine Kings Poisoned — The black water turns red; people sicken. '[DEATH]' '[WEATHER]' The poison was placed by an Ashaani agent. The agent wants to destabilise the kingdoms. The water tastes of iron and old regrets. The ninth victim sees the face of the missing king before they die.
 9. Peacock Throne Assassination Attempt — A courtier tries to kill the king. '[POLITICS]' '[COMBAT]' The assassin is the chamberlain. The chamberlain is a spy for Vajrapur. He has been waiting nine years. His hands do not shake. He has a ninth dagger hidden in his mirror-stick.
 10. Silent Court Leak — A judge's verdict is revealed before it is read. '[JUSTICE]' '[SOCIAL]' The leak is a clerk. The clerk is selling secrets to the Bandit King. The verdict is your death. The clerk is sorry. He is not sorry enough. The ninth page of the verdict is blank — reserved for an appeal from the missing kingdom.
 11. Royal Genealogy Forged — Someone has altered the king's family tree. The claimant is an impostor — or maybe not. '[POLITICS]' The forger is a Lethai-thora archivist who lost a bet. The bet was with the Hollow. The Hollow always wins. The ninth generation on the tree is written in disappearing ink. It shows a name that cannot be read.
- J Whispering Pass Ambush — The party is caught in a crossfire between two kingdoms. '[COMBAT]' '[STEALTH]' The pass is neutral ground. Both sides will claim you are a spy. Choose a side — or escape. The wind will carry your choice to both. The ninth whisper in the pass says, "You should have run."
- Q Immortal Peacock's Cry — The peacock screams; the court panics. '[OMEN]' '[FEAR]' The cry is a warning. An assassin is in the hall. The assassin is a guest. The peacock will not say which one. It wants to watch. The peacock has not screamed in nine years. The last time it screamed, the ninth kingdom fell.
- K Ghost's Demand (Ninth King) — The ghost points at you. It accuses you of murdering the king's descendant. '[DEATH]' '[SOCIAL]' The descendant is an infant. You must prove your innocence. The ghost will not be reasoned with. It will accept a trade: one secret for one life. The ninth secret you offer will be taken by the Hollow.
- A Well's Vision — One PC sees their own face in the black water. The face is old, scarred, and weeping. '[MYSTERY]' '[FEAR]' The well says: "This is your future if you stay." The vision is true — but only for this moment. The moment is passing. The ninth reflection shows a face that is not yours — it is the missing king's. You feel an obligation you cannot name.

(Feather/Pass/Key) Peacock feather (enter any court); iron gate pass (bypass customs); nine kings' key word ("forgiveness" — opens the tomb and a secret door in the Peacock Throne Hall).

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Peacock Feather — A single iridescent feather from the immortal peacock. Present it to enter any court in the nine kingdoms. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The feather never fades. It glows when the king is lying. It glows brighter when you are lying. The king will notice. The ninth feather in the peacock’s tail is invisible. If you find it, you can command the peacock to speak.
3. Iron Gate Pass (Brass Key) — A brass key. Bypass customs at Vajrapur’s market. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The key is also a weapon. It can break chains. It was forged from a slave collar. The slave’s ghost thanks you every time you use it. The ghost was a king of the missing ninth. He does not remember his name.
4. Buffalo Horn Trumpet — A carved horn. Blow it to summon a buffalo cavalry. ‘[COMBAT]’ The cavalry are mercenaries. They demand payment in land. One acre per horn blast. They will accept a story instead — if the story is about a lost battlefield. The ninth cavalryman is a ghost. He fights for free, but he will ask you a question after the battle. Answer poorly, and he takes a memory.
5. Covenant Seal (Kosala) — A clay seal. Witness any contract in the sacred city. ‘[JUSTICE]’ The seal is fragile. It breaks if the contract is false. The breaking is loud. The sound carries for a mile. Everyone will know. The ninth seal ever made is still intact. It seals a contract with the missing kingdom. No one has dared to break it.
6. Temple Dancer’s Anklet (Silver) — A silver anklet with bells. Wear it to gain +1 die to any persuasion roll. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The bells are silent unless you are honest. Dishonest words make no sound. The silence is more damning than a lie. The ninth bell on the anklet rings only when the monsoon is about to fail. It has rung twice in living memory.
7. Rajagriha Coin — A Gupta-era gold coin. Trade it for a favour from the ghosts. ‘[DEATH]’ The ghosts will answer one question about the empire’s fall. The answer is always a warning. The warning is always about you. The ninth coin in the hoard is cursed. Spend it, and a ghost of the missing kingdom will follow you until you return it.
8. Well Water (Vial) — A vial of black water from the Nine Kings’ Well. Drink it to see the future. ‘[MYSTERY]’ The future is always a death — yours or someone else’s. The vision lasts one minute. You will not forget it. The ninth vial was never drawn. It is reserved for the king who will unite the nine. The well knows your name. It is waiting.
9. Silent Court Disappearing Ink (Bottle) — A small bottle. Write a message that vanishes. ‘[STEALTH]’ The reagent is your own tears. The message reappears when you weep. The reappearance is permanent. Choose your tears carefully. The ninth bottle contains ink that never disappears. It is used to write the names of those who owe the Hollow.
10. Nine Kings’ Key Word — A single word: “forgiveness.” Speak it to open the tomb. ‘[LEGEND]’ The word also opens a lock in the Peacock Throne Hall. The lock is a secret door. The door leads to a room that contains the king’s true genealogy. The genealogy shows that every king of Ahimsa is a descendant of the missing ninth kingdom. The debt is never paid.
11. Elephant Whistle (Bone) — Carved from a tusk of a battle elephant. Blow it to calm any elephant within earshot — once. ‘[BEAST]’ The whistle was owned by a mahout who never lost. He is still alive. He wants it back. The elephant that carried the ninth king used a whistle like this. Its ghost can be summoned by blowing it three times at midnight.
- J Immortal Peacock’s Second Feather — A tail feather from the immortal peacock. It is said to grant a wish. ‘[LEGEND]’ ‘[MAGIC]’ The wish is that the king will die. Use it wisely. The feather burns after use. The peacock will know. It will not forgive. The ninth wish ever made with a peacock feather was: “Let the missing kingdom return.” The peacock is still deciding.

- Q Whispering Pass’s Map (Ear) — A chart of the defile and its listening posts. Written on a human ear. ‘[SPY]’ ‘[TRAVEL]’ The ear was from a spy. It still hears whispers. Hold it to your own ear to listen to distant conversations. The ear will whisper back. Do not answer. The ninth whisper you hear will be your own voice, asking a question you have never asked.
- K Peacock Throne’s Blessing (Decree) — A royal decree. Demand a favour from any king of the nine. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The favour is limited: they will not start a war for you, but they will end one. They will also end a blood feud, a trade embargo, or a marriage alliance. The ninth favour was claimed by the missing kingdom. The king who granted it is still trying to fulfil it.
- A Ninth King’s Crown (Gold Circlet) — Found in the tomb. Wear it to command the ghosts of Rajagriha. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[LEGEND]’ They will fight for you once. Then they will claim you as their king. You cannot leave the ruins. The ruins will grow around you. The ghosts will keep you company. The ninth ghost is the missing king himself. He will ask you one question: “Why did you let me fall?” You have one sentence to answer.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (feathers, keys, seals) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo peacock-omens—ruby eyes that move, a well that reflects a face not yours, a throne that creaks when empty, a whisper that counts to nine.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- The Nine Kingdoms Pact Clock [8]: Tracks the cohesion of the alliance. Advances when a kingdom sends a false genealogy, when a king refuses to attend the renewal, or when a border raid occurs. At 4 segments: tariffs increase between kingdoms. At 8: the pact collapses — war is declared, and the Peacock Throne becomes a target. If the Pact Clock ever fills completely, the missing kingdom’s ghost appears at the next renewal to cast a vote. No one knows which way it will vote.
- The Ninth Kingdom Clock [8]: Tracks the return of the missing kingdom. This clock is hidden from players at first, but they may learn of it through research or the Well of Nine Kings. The clock ticks when:
 - A king dies without a clear heir (+1)
 - A genealogy is proven false (+1)
 - A temple dancer stumbles during the monsoon ritual (+2)
 - The immortal peacock screams (+2)
 - A character speaks the name of the missing kingdom aloud (+1, resets monthly)

At 4 segments: The ghost of the missing king begins appearing in dreams. At 8 segments: The missing kingdom manifests as a phantom realm for one night. The party may enter it — or be claimed by it. Resetting the clock requires a ritual at the Nine Kings’ Tomb, paying a debt in memory or blood.

- Ancestral Debt (Reputation Track): Each PC has an Ancestral Debt score from -3 (Heavy Debtor) to $+3$ (Creditor of the Sun). This replaces the generic Honor Dial. Gain Debt (move toward negative) by: breaking a sworn oath, failing to protect a family member, disrespecting a temple. Lose Debt (move toward positive) by: keeping a difficult promise, restoring a forgotten genealogy, donating to a royal archive. Effects:
 - $+2$ or $+3$ (Creditor): $+1$ Position in social encounters with nobles and priests. You may call in one minor family favour per session.
 - -2 or -3 (Heavy Debtor): Market prices double for you. You may be challenged to a debt-duel (honour combat or legal contest). If you refuse, you lose 1 permanent Reputation tier.
- Elephant Bonding: A character who spends a downtime scene with a war elephant may form a bond. The elephant gains a name and a personality. Once bonded, the elephant grants $+1$ die to the mahout’s Command rolls in battle, but the mahout suffers -1 die to social rolls with elephant-hating factions (e.g., the Aeler counting houses, who fear the beasts). An elephant bonded to a character with high Ancestral Debt (negative) becomes melancholic and refuses to trample enemies of the missing kingdom.
- Ritual Calendar: Temple dancers control the monsoon schedule. A party that earns the favour of a temple dancer (by protecting a shrine, funding a festival, or telling a true story) may ask for a “weather window”: one journey leg where rain, fog, or heat does not apply. Using this favour ticks Ancestral Debt by -1 (the dancer’s rivals will spread rumours that you owe a debt to the dancer). If the Ninth Kingdom Clock is at $4+$, the weather window may instead open a path to the phantom kingdom.
- Genealogy Forgery: A skilled forger can alter a king’s family tree. This requires a 4-segment Forgery Clock (Wits + Craft, DV 4). If successful, the target king loses 2 Ancestral Debt (becomes more indebted) and the forger gains a permanent String against him. If discovered, the forger is exiled — or executed. A forgery that inserts a connection to the missing kingdom causes the Ninth Kingdom Clock to tick $+2$ immediately.
- The Ninth Caste (Nameless Spies): The ninth caste has no mark, no name, no legal existence. They are the king’s debt-collectors, operating outside the law. A character who discovers a ninth caste spy may leverage that knowledge: gain $+1$ die on social rolls against that spy’s master, but the spy becomes a recurring enemy. The ninth caste has its own debt to the Hollow; they cannot die until it is paid.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Peacock’s Eye — The Witness. The ruby that sees all false genealogies. It does not blink. It knows who owes.
 - The Iron Queen — Mykkiel. The law that binds the nine kingdoms, even when kings forget. Especially when they forget.
 - The Monsoon Lord — Khemesh. The pressure that brings the rain — and the flood that follows. The flood claims debts.
 - The Dancing Star — The Traveler. The rhythm that guides the dancer’s feet and the monsoon’s arrival. And the missing step.
 - The Ninth Throne — The Hollow. The empty chair. The unpaid interest. The kingdom that never was.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Nine Kings' Tomb and the Kalrantha Amulet (Dhahara): The tomb is said to contain a map to the Himadri temple where the amulet was sealed. A rival king may offer the party a noble title in exchange for the map. The map is tattooed on the inside of the Ninth King's ghost. You will need to ask politely. The ghost charges a memory for each word of the map.
- Covenant Judges and the Sidhi (Way of Silk): High Judge Vasu has ruled on several cases involving Sidhi freedmen. He is known to be fair but harsh. A Sidhi port-master may ask the party to deliver a bribe — or a warning. The warning is written in disappearing ink. The ink is your own blood. The ninth word of the warning is the name of a Sidhi ship that carries cargo for the missing kingdom.
- Elephant Herds and the Kuvani (Way of Silk): The Kuvani have tried to buy war elephants from the Nine Kingdoms. The price is always refused — but a Kuvani remount master may offer a story worth the trade. The story must be about a horse that outran a king. The elephants will listen. They are not impressed. The ninth elephant in the herd is a ghost. It remembers the missing kingdom. It will carry anyone who tells it a true regret.
- The Immortal Peacock and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The peacock is said to be the Hollow's original form — before it learned to hunger. Aelaerem hedge-keepers leave offerings of peacock feathers at the Hollow's gates to remind it of what it once was. The feathers are always accepted. The Hollow never thanks them. The ninth feather offered each year is returned, bloodied, to the Peacock Gardens.

Nine Kingdoms Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Peacock: Crumble a crust before the throne. Ignore the first Elephant Stampede penalty. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Knot the Anklet: Tie a silver bell to a dancer's anklet. Cancel Temple Dance Cursed or take -1 die on your next performance roll (your choice). '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Name to the Well: Whisper a dead king's name into the black water. Gain +1 Effect when negotiating a truce this scene, but mark Obligation to the Covenant. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- The Ninth Step: When entering a court, take only eight steps. The ninth step is for the ghost of the missing king. If you take it, you will hear a whisper asking for a favour. '[SUPERSTITION]'

- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice—omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Nine Kingdoms (Court Law): Peacock feathers shed without reason, a throne’s ruby eyes follow a different person, a forgotten genealogy appears on a wall.
- Nine Kingdoms (Elephant Law): Elephants kneel unprompted, a tusk glows faintly, a mahout speaks a prophecy in his sleep.
- Nine Kingdoms (Ancestral Debt): A merchant refuses to meet your eyes, a child throws salt at your feet, a temple door closes as you approach, a ghost asks when you will pay what you owe.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Stealth): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Dust Cloud.
- Cut the Pact (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a peacock feather is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Stampede (Body + Ride): On a hit in Elephant Stampede, you pick who is trampled; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Throne, Well, and the Missing Ninth)

- The Ninth King (Unburied) — Phases: Tomb Robberies → Orchestrated Succession Crisis → Throne Coup. Cracks: return a stolen crown, expose a false genealogy, survive the Ninth King's Ghost. Secret: The Ninth King does not want to be restored to power — he wants his debt to the Hollow paid. Pay it, and he will rest.
- The Drought-Maker (Well Poisoner) — Phases: Wells Drying → Procession of Empty Stepwells → Monsoon Baptism of a Dancer. Cracks: vial of pure well water, survivor testimony, the temple dancer's bells ringing true again. Twist: The Drought-Maker is a servant of the missing kingdom, sent to weaken the eight so that the ninth may return.
- The Ghost Emperor of Rajagriha — Phases: Imperial Echo → Legion of Shades → The Unfinished Throne. Cracks: speak a true kindness about his empire, return a broken pillar to its original place, promise to remember a name he has forgotten. Price: He will not pass on until someone takes his place as keeper of the missing kingdom's memory.
- The Hollow's Accountant (Ninth Caste Master) — Phases: Audit of the Living → Repossession → Foreclosure on a Kingdom. Cracks: prove that a debt has been paid twice, present a genealogy that shows the Hollow itself as a debtor, or offer a new missing kingdom to take the place of the old. Warning: The Accountant cannot be fought — only negotiated with. Its quill writes in reverse. Its ink is your blood.

Patronage & Power

Among the Nine Kingdoms, power flows through genealogy, elephant herds, the honour of the court, and the crushing weight of ancestral debt. A king's authority rests on his dynasty's archive; a queen's on her marriage alliances; a temple dancer's on the rhythm of the monsoon. The Peacock Throne is the centre, but the other eight kingdoms are not satellites — they are competitors. And the missing ninth is the interest that never stops compounding.

For the GM: Power in the Nine Kingdoms is measured in iron, buffalo, the thickness of a family's scroll collection, and the number of forgotten promises in its bloodline. Patronage often takes the form of peacock feathers, iron gate passes, Covenant seals, or a royal decree that adjusts a family's debt ledger — each tied to a specific kingdom, clan, or court. To emphasize the debt-based strangeness:

- Use the Ancestral Debt Dial as a visible track. Let players gain or lose Debt based on their actions in native courts. High Debt (positive) opens doors; low Debt (negative) closes them — and may bring the Hollow's accountants.
- Let the nine kingdoms be a web of shifting alliances and unpaid obligations. A favour from the Maharaja may be an insult to the Rani — and a debt to a third kingdom that must be balanced.

- Use the stepwells, elephant stables, and throne halls as arenas for social contests, where a well-recited genealogy is a weapon and a broken promise is a declaration of war.
- Track the Ninth Kingdom Clock as a slow-burn campaign timer. The party cannot stop it permanently — only delay it, redirect it, or prepare for the night when the missing kingdom returns. That night, the Hollow will collect. The question is who will pay.

In the Nine Kingdoms, the peacock remembers every eye, the well shows every death, and the missing kingdom waits. Its debt is never closed.

Chapter 32

The Himadri Foothills

The Iron Passes (Aeler Focus).

The mountain does not speak in words. It speaks in the crack of a bearing, the echo of a hammer, the taste of ore on the tongue. We Aeler do not conquer stone. We negotiate with it. The lease is not a document. It is the weight of the keystone that holds the roof.

I am a Mine-Breath. I carry a bell that counts my breaths. Eight is safe. Nine is the mountain's. My grandfather counted to nine once. The mountain took his shadow. He lived another thirty years, but he never cast a shadow again.

The Ninth Seal mine isn't just holding a demon—it's a seal market, and oh, how the Vent-Prior loves a good deal on demon containment. The Aeler do not rule through armies; they rule through the maintenance contracts that keep the mines from collapsing, the bridges from falling, and the passes from freezing. A vent-prior's authority rests on his ability to read the mountain's cracks; a mine-captain's on her skill with a tuning fork. But here's the secret the Vent-Prior doesn't want you to know: the demon in the Ninth Seal is not the only thing the mountain is holding. There are older things deeper down. The Aeler sealed them first. The Ninth Seal is just the newest.

The elephant caravans haul ore down to the Brass Coast; mule trains carry silver and tea up to the mountain holds. The Aeler engineers speak a creole of their own tongue; the Dhaharan nobles wear Aeler breath-counters as jewellery; and deep beneath the oldest mine, a demon sleeps behind a Covenant seal—a fragment of the thing that turned the Red Desert to glass. The seal is cracking. The demon whispers through the cracks. It offers favours. It asks for small betrayals. It is very patient.

Never count your breaths aloud in a mine. The mountain listens, and if it hears you reach the ninth, it will take one—a breath, a memory, a shadow.

— Mine-Breath, who carries her grandfather's bell and has never reached nine

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Iron rations and tea—the rations are hardtack and dried meat, the tea is brewed from leaves that grow only above the snow line. The leaves are harvested by the Vent-Prior's apprentices. The apprentices are chosen by lottery. The lottery is a death sentence.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To read a pressure gauge. Himadri children are taught the eight pressures: Safe, Warning, Danger, Collapse, Flood, Fire, Seal, and the ninth—the pressure that means the mountain is breathing. The mountain's breath is the miners' death.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their bell. Every miner carries a breath-counter bell. A stranger whose bell rings too fast has been running. A stranger whose bell is silent is dead. A stranger whose bell rings the ninth note is a demon. The demons are sealed. The seals are cracking.

What is the most common crime? Ore smuggling—but ore smuggling is not a crime, it is a perquisite. The mine-captains take a cut of every shipment. The cut is called "the Vent-Prior's fee." The fee is negotiable. The negotiation is a ritual. The ritual involves tea and threats.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Ninth Seal is not a seal. It is a door—a gate to a prison that holds something that should not be named. The seal's keepers do not know what is inside. The keepers do not want to know. The keepers are paid to not know.

Where do people go when they die? To the mountain. The dead are not buried. Their bodies are left in worked-out galleries. The mountain absorbs them. The mountain's memory grows. The mountain remembers every breath it has taken.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a breath—one of your own, counted and witnessed. The breath is sealed in a brass capsule and placed in the Vent-Prior's ledger. The ledger is the court. The court's judgment is the mountain's. The mountain's judgment is final.

What is the most important festival? The Counting of the Breath (winter solstice). Every miner's breath-counter is read aloud. The miners with the lowest counts are promoted. The miners with the highest counts are retired. Retirement is a sealed gallery. The gallery is a tomb.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The demon in the Ninth Seal is not a demon. It is an Aeler—the first Vent-Prior, who volunteered to be sealed with the mountain's hunger. He is still alive. He has been counting his breaths for nine centuries. He has reached the ninth count. He is still counting.

32.1 The Himadri Foothills — “The Roof of the World”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The mountain does not negotiate. It waits. The ninth breath is a toll, not a gift.

Khardung, Vent-Prior of the High Places (Elite): “The mountain does not speak in words. It speaks in the silence after a bell, the weight of a frozen lung, the taste of iron on the tongue at dusk. We Aeler do not conquer stone. We listen to it. And we remember what it forgets.”

Mine-Breath (Commoner): “I carry a bell that counts my breaths. Eight is safe. Nine is the mountain’s. My grandfather counted to nine once. The mountain took his shadow. He lived another thirty years, but he never cast a shadow again. The High Folk say the shadow still walks the passes, counting.”

Genre / Mood: High-altitude survival horror, animist dread, isolation, the weight of ancient oaths.

Starting Location: A wind-scoured pass where prayer flags made of frozen leather snap like bones. A dwarf in a patched iron coat tends a brass brazier. Beside her, a human in a grey wool cloak — face hidden by a veil of yak hair — holds a bell that does not ring. The dwarf speaks first: “The High Folk say the demon stirs in the deep. The passes are closing early. You have three breaths to declare your purpose, or the mountain will decide for you.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Himadri foothills are the highest inhabited place in the known world. Here, the Aelerian mountains scrape the sky, and the air is so thin that each breath is a measured gift. The native Aeler of these peaks — called the High Aeler or the Karak-Aeler (“Stone-Breath People”) — are not the mercantile dwarves of the lowland holds. They are severe, cold, and ancient, their faces carved by wind and frost, their voices rarely raised above a whisper. They do not trade in breath-bonds for profit; they trade in survival. A Karak-Aeler’s word is iron not because of law, but because the mountain has no patience for lies.

The humans of the Himadri are equally remote: a scattering of monastic villages, goat-herding clans, and hidden fortress-temples that have never paid tribute to any king. Outsiders call them the High Folk, or simply the Mi-tsang — the Hidden People. They speak a language of tones and silences, and they venerate spirits that live in glaciers, hot springs, and the bones of extinct beasts. Their lamas (called Lopön) keep scrolls that predate the Utaran Empire, written in a script that no Aeler can read. They do not trust the lowlands, and the lowlands have learned not to cross their passes without an invitation.

The Karak-Aeler and the High Folk share an uneasy peace, brokered centuries ago when the first iron was traded for the secret of the high passes. Today, the dwarves mine the frozen mountains for ore and rare earths, while the humans tend the yak herds and the shrines that keep the mountain spirits from waking. The Covenant has a small mission in the highest valley, but its priests are always on the edge of frostbite and despair. The demon sealed in the Ninth Seal Mine — a fragment of Varash the Unmaker — is not a legend. It is a fact. The seal is cracking. And the mountain is listening.

What you notice first: The silence. Not the absence of sound, but the weight of it — as if the mountain itself is holding its breath. The way every Aeler touches a brass bell at their belt before speaking of distances. The way the High Folk never look directly at the peaks, only at the ground, as if the sky holds something they are not meant to see.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never count your breaths aloud in a mine or a high pass. The mountain listens, and if it hears you reach the ninth, it will take one — a breath, a memory, a shadow. The High Folk say that the shadow then walks the passes, counting others.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Peak

Power here is measured in altitude, in the number of passes you know, and in the respect the mountain shows you. The Karak-Aeler maintain the iron mines and the toll-bridges, but they do not rule the High Folk — they coexist with them. The High Folk's lamas negotiate on behalf of the mountain spirits, and the dwarves have learned to listen. The Covenant's seal on the Ninth Seal Mine is maintained by a single, half-mad priest who has not seen the sun in forty years. The demon whispers promises of warmth, of gold, of the lowlands' green fields. The miners cover their ears. The High Folk leave offerings of frozen butter tea at the seal's entrance. So far, it has held.

6. Yak-Mother’s Route (Leather Map) — A scrap of leather marked with charcoal lines. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The map shows a safe route through the high passes — but only if you follow it exactly. If you stray, the map rewrites itself. The new route leads to a crevasse.

- Q First Keystone’s Echo (Tuning Fork) — A tuning fork that rings with the mountain’s voice. ‘[LEGEND]’ Strike it, and the mountain will answer one question — but the answer is always a riddle, and the riddles are always about debts.
- K High Folk Novice’s Memory (Bone Needle) — A needle that the novice used to sew her silence. ‘[SECRET]’ Thread it with a strand of your own hair and sew a wound closed. The wound heals, but you forget why you received it. The needle remembers.
- A Vent-Prior’s Forgiveness (Iron Token) — A token that grants pardon for any crime in the Himadri. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The pardon is conditional. The condition is a secret mission: re-seal the demon permanently. The Vent-Prior’s bell will not ring for this lie.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (bells, ingots, prayers) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo mountain-omens—iron that weeps rust, bells that ring without clappers, a pass that closes behind you, a whisper that sounds like your own breath, a shadow that walks without a body.

Additional Features (High Altitude Mechanics)

- Breath-Counting: In high passes (above 4,000 metres), characters must mark Fatigue for every hour of exertion. A character who deliberately paces their breathing (making a Resolve test, DV 3) can reduce the Fatigue cost by 1. Counting aloud to nine in any context triggers a Mountain’s Attention roll (Spirit + Resolve, DV 4). On failure, the mountain takes something: 1 Fatigue, a minor memory (erase a fact), or a shadow (the character casts no reflection until they leave the high passes).

- The Ninth Seal Clock [8]: The Covenant seal on the demon mine has a hidden clock that ticks when the demon whispers, when someone takes iron from the sealed tunnel, or when a breath-bond is broken nearby. When the clock fills, the seal cracks. The party can reset the clock by reinforcing the seal with a new Covenant rite (costs a memory) or by feeding the demon a story (costs a truth). The demon prefers stories about betrayal. It pays attention to those.
- Mountain Offerings: The High Folk believe that the mountain must be fed with offerings of silence, memory, or warmth. A character who leaves an offering (a pinch of salt, a whispered secret, a lock of hair) at a shrine or a cairn may roll Spirit + Lore (DV 3). On success, the next weather hazard in that pass is downgraded (blizzard to snow, ice to frost). On failure, the offering is rejected — the character gains the Marked by the Mountain condition (the next environmental complication is automatically Desperate).
- High Folk Taboos: The High Folk have many taboos: never point at a peak, never speak the name of a dead person in a pass, never refuse a cup of butter tea, never step over a prayer flag. Breaking a taboo in front of a High Folk witness causes the witness to fall silent and refuse to help. The GM may spend 1 SB to have a broken taboo attract the attention of a mountain spirit (a complication from the Clubs table).
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - Adur the Forge-Father — Oath of Flame and Light. The fire in the smelter, the heat that tempers iron and oaths.
 - Hemrir the Wanderer — The Sealed Gate. The keeper of thresholds; his shrines are bridge-posts and tunnel mouths.
 - The Breath-Eater — Khemesh. The pressure in the deep; the silence that follows a cave-in.
 - The Ice-Lama — The Pale Shepherd. The saint who froze to death; she guides travellers through whiteouts.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Ninth Seal and the Kalrantha Amulet (Dhahara): The demon in the sealed mine is a fragment of Varash the Unmaker, the same entity trapped in the Kalrantha amulet. The Veiled Sisters want to free this fragment to use against the Covenant. The Breath-less want to re-seal it permanently. The demon wants to be whole. It offers favours to anyone who brings it a shard of green glass.
- Iron Trade and the Ngomebe Stone Men: The iron from the Himadri mines is shipped to Ngomebe to forge rollers for the walking cities. A disruption in the iron supply could stop a city mid-migration. The Ngomebe Mason-Kin have a permanent envoy at the Vent-Prior's hall. The envoy is a woman who speaks only in stone-songs. She has never smiled.
- Breath-Bonds and the Covenant (Mykkiel): The Covenant recognises Aeler breath-bonds as legally binding, but only if witnessed by a judge. The Seal-Keeper is the only Covenant authority in the high passes. He has not witnessed a new bond in twenty years. He says the mountain remembers all debts anyway.
- The Silent Pass and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The Silent Pass is a known threshold where the Hollow's attention is thin. Aelaerem hedge-keepers leave offerings of salt at the pass entrance to keep the Oath-Keepers from following caravans. The salt must be from the pans of the Silent Widows. Any other salt will attract them. The Hedge-Keepers will not explain why. They say the salt knows.

Himadri Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Mine: Crumble a crust into the tunnel mouth. Ignore the first Whiteout penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Bell Rope: Tie a knot in the rope of the shrine bell. Cancel Ninth Echo or take –1 die on your next stealth roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Iron: Whisper a dead miner’s name into an ingot. Gain +1 Effect when negotiating with Karak-Aeler this scene, but mark Obligation to the Vent-Prior. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Butter to the Shrine: Leave a lump of yak butter at a cairn. The next time you cross a pass, the mountain will not take your shadow. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Patronage & Power

In the Himadri foothills, power flows through breath, silence, and the weight of the mountain's attention. The Karak-Aeler hold the mines and the forges, but they do not rule the High Folk — they coexist with them, bound by ancient compacts sealed in frozen iron. The High Folk's lamas speak for the mountain spirits, and the spirits are not kind. The Covenant's seal on the Ninth Seal Mine is a reminder of what happens when the mountain is not respected. The demon whispers. The mountain listens. And the passes remember every breath taken in them.

For the GM: Power in the Himadri is measured in altitude, in the number of breaths you can hold, and in the stories the mountain chooses to remember. Patronage often takes the form of breath-counters, iron ingots, or prayer flags — each tied to a specific pass, a specific spirit, a specific debt. To emphasise the harsh, remote character:

- Make breath-counting a constant tension: characters must manage their Fatigue carefully. The mountain punishes haste.
- Let the Ninth Seal Clock be a visible campaign front. The party’s actions tick the clock; when it fills, the demon manifests. The demon does not fight — it negotiates. It offers warmth, iron, safe passage. It asks for small betrayals. The High Folk say that the demon’s bargains always leave a frost on the heart.
- Use the High Folk taboos to create social tension. Breaking a taboo is not a crime — it is an insult to the mountain. The High Folk will not explain the taboos beforehand; they expect visitors to watch and learn. A character who makes an offering without being asked gains a small boon. A character who refuses an offering gains the mountain’s attention.

In the Himadri, the mountain forgets nothing — and the ninth breath is always waiting.

Part VII

The Eastern Realms

“The maps of the empire draw the East as a single sweep – Sihai, Nihori, Ayokha – all pressed together like tiles on a game board. The roads know better. Sihai measures time in dynasties; Nihori counts it in storms. Ayokha negotiates between them with the patience of the monsoon. And beneath them all, the older peoples keep their own thresholds, their own debts, their own ways of not being seen.” — Dusana of the Raven Road, at the edge of the Inland Sea

Chapter 33

Sihai

The Central Kingdom.

The Mandate of Heaven is not a right. It is a loan. The emperor borrows legitimacy from the ancestors, from the land, from the Hollow itself. When the loan is due, the empire falls. I do not serve the emperor. I serve the ledger that tracks the interest.

I am a Provincial Censor. My brush is heavier than any sword. A single stroke can erase a name, a family, a dynasty. The emperor reads my reports and trembles. He knows that I have written nine reports this year. The ninth is about him.

Sihai is the central kingdom, the seat of the Emperor and the Mandate of Heaven. Its canals carry grain from the south; its examination halls produce bureaucrats who govern by the brush. Power here is measured in ink, not iron. The Censorate watches everyone; the Salt Monopoly controls trade; the Lethai-thora keep the secrets that the Mandate prefers to forget. But here's the secret the Emperor doesn't want you to know: the Mandate is not a divine right. It is a loan. The ancestors are the creditors. The Hollow collects the interest. Every dynasty that has ever fallen did so because the interest came due and the emperor could not pay.

Beneath the mortal bureaucracy runs a deeper one: the Celestial Bureaucracy of gods, ghosts, and ancestors, where every official has a heavenly counterpart and every erased name becomes a hungry ghost. The Lethai-thora—the ancient archivists who taught the first emperors to write—still keep the hidden ledgers, the ones that record what the Censorate burns. A well-written couplet can appease a ghost; a forged seal can summon a demon. The Hollow's ninth debt is the unpaid interest on the Mandate itself.

Never speak of succession before naming the Emperor. The Censorate has ears in every tea house. A misplaced word can erase your name from the rolls.

— Quiet Chancellor Wei, who has never smiled and whose seal is a laughing mouth

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Congee with preserved vegetables—the congee is rice boiled until it is memory, the vegetables are salted and aged in clay jars. The jars are sealed with the emperor's own wax. The wax is a promise. The promise is that the vegetables will not poison you. The promise is sometimes broken.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To write their name. Sihai children are taught the eight strokes of the character "person"—the ninth stroke is the one that turns a name into a signature. A signature is a contract. A contract is a debt. A debt is a life.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their chop—the seal they carry to sign documents. A stranger whose chop is jade is a noble. A stranger whose chop is brass is a clerk. A stranger whose chop is wood is a merchant. A stranger with no chop is a ghost. Ghosts cannot sign contracts. Ghosts cannot be trusted.

What is the most common crime? Examination fraud—but fraud is not a crime, it is a family business. The examinations determine who governs. The questions are leaked in advance. The answers are memorized. The examiners are bribed. The system is a sieve. The sieve is called "merit."

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Emperor is a figurehead. The real power is the Censorate—nine ministers who have never been seen together. Their names are not recorded. Their faces are not painted. Their orders are whispered. The Emperor signs what they tell him to sign. The Emperor has not refused in forty years.

Where do people go when they die? To the ancestral tablets. The dead are not buried. Their names are written on wooden tablets, placed in the family shrine. The tablets are fed with rice and tea. The dead eat the steam. The dead are never full.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a calligraphy—a scroll written in your own blood. The scroll is presented to the wronged party's ancestral shrine. If the ancestors accept, you are forgiven. If the scroll bursts into flame, you are not. If the scroll writes itself, the ancestors are angry. The ancestors' anger is a famine.

What is the most important festival? The Festival of the Ancestors (autumn). The tablets are cleaned and polished. The dead are invited to feast. The feast is laid out on the family altar. The food is removed after an hour. The dead have eaten the essence. The essence is memory.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Censorate's ninth minister is a woman—the emperor's own mother, who was supposed to have died in childbirth. She faked her death to escape the politics of the court. She has been running the Censorate from a hidden villa in the western hills. The emperor does not know. The emperor's mother signs his death warrants. He signs them too.

Quick Reference

Tagline: The Mandate is a loan. The ancestors are the creditors. The Hollow collects the interest.

Quiet Chancellor (Elite): “The Mandate of Heaven is not a right. It is a loan. The emperor borrows legitimacy from the ancestors, from the land, from the Hollow itself. When the loan is due, the empire falls. I do not serve the emperor. I serve the ledger that tracks the interest.”

Provincial Censor (Commoner): “My brush is heavier than any sword. A single stroke can erase a name, a family, a dynasty. The emperor reads my reports and trembles. He knows that I have written nine reports this year. The ninth is about him.”

Genre / Mood: Celestial bureaucracy, ghost-ledgers, ink-washed horror, examination hell.

Starting Location: An examination hall where ink-stained desks face a silent proctor. A Provincial Censor holds up a scroll: “This candidate’s family name has been erased. He does not know. You will tell him — or you will take his place in the ledger.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Sihai is the central kingdom, the seat of the Emperor and the Mandate of Heaven. Its canals carry grain from the south; its examination halls produce bureaucrats who govern by the brush. But beneath the mortal bureaucracy runs a deeper one: the Celestial Bureaucracy of gods, ghosts, and ancestors, where every official has a heavenly counterpart and every erased name becomes a hungry ghost. The Lethai-thora — the ancient archivists who taught the first emperors to write — still keep the hidden ledgers, the ones that record what the Censorate burns.

Power here is measured in ink, not iron. The Censorate watches everyone; the Salt Monopoly controls trade; the Kitchen God reports every household’s secrets to the Jade Emperor at New Year. A well-written couplet can appease a ghost; a forged seal can summon a demon. The Hollow’s ninth debt is the unpaid interest on the Mandate itself. Every dynasty borrows legitimacy; every silence is a debt.

What you notice first: The smell of ink and canal water, but also incense and grave-soil. The way officials stamp every document with a brass seal — and the way the seal leaves a faint watermark that looks like a face. The constant ticking of water-clocks, but sometimes the ticking skips a beat, and the shadows pause to listen.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never speak of succession before naming the Emperor. The Censorate has ears in every tea house — and the ghosts have ears in every wall. A misplaced word can erase your name from the rolls, and from the memory of the ancestors.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Brush

Power here is measured in examination scores, salt licenses, and the thickness of a family’s archive. The Emperor rules, but the Censorate audits, the Salt Monopoly finances, and the Lethai-thora remember what the Censorate burns. A provincial governor’s authority rests on his examination rank; a merchant’s on his salt license. The dead are not gone — they are merely demoted. The Hungry Ghost Festival is the only time the Celestial Bureaucracy accepts appeals. The Hollow watches from the missing ninth step, the unpoured ninth cup, the unsaid ninth name.

Censorate Audit Complications (d6)

When a character faces a Censorate audit (see Additional Features), roll or choose an additional complication that escalates the stakes.

d6	Complication
1	Erased Name — The Censorate has struck your name from a ledger. You are legally invisible. Gain -1 Position on all social rolls with officials until resolved.
2	Ancestor Summons — A ghost appears at the family shrine demanding a public accounting. The debt is from nine generations ago.
3	Forged Scroll — A tax ledger is discovered to be a forgery. The party is blamed. The real forger is a Censorate clerk.
4	Quiet Chancellor’s Interest — The Chancellor requests a private audience. Refusal is treason. Attendance means owing a favour.
5	Lethai-thora Silence-Token — A hidden archivist offers a token in exchange for a secret. The secret will be witnessed by the dead.
6	Well of Erased Names — A character sees their own name floating in the well. The Hollow is watching. Gain the Marked condition.

Hidden Archive Discoveries (d8)

When the party explores the Lethai-thora Hidden Archive or the Ninth Ledger’s Vault, roll to determine what forgotten secret they uncover.

d8	Discovery
1	A scroll that proves the current emperor’s claim is false.
2	A map of the Ninth Ledger’s vault, sealed with a finger bone key.
3	A forgotten ancestor tablet still warm to the touch.
4	The true name of a Veiled Sister, written in disappearing ink.
5	A Lethai-thora memory-thread containing the last breath of a dead emperor.
6	The original Mandate of Heaven, showing the ninth clause was added later.

7	A canal mother's key that opens any sluice gate — and a ghost that wants it back.
8	A blank scroll that writes itself when no one is watching. It is writing your obituary.

Water Rights Disputes (d6)

When a conflict arises over canal access or irrigation, roll to determine the nature of the dispute.

d6	Dispute
1	A Canal Mother accuses a rival of diverting water after dark. The evidence is a single wet footprint.
2	The Dragon King is offended. A barge carrying a forbidden ancestor tablet has contaminated the lock.
3	A salt merchant claims the right to dam a tributary for his pans. The farmers downstream are sharpening sickles.
4	The water level dropped overnight. A ghostly Canal Mother walks the lock, demanding to know who stole her key.
5	Two examination candidates accuse each other of bribing the lockmaster. The lockmaster has vanished.
6	The Ninth Lock has frozen in summer. The Hollow is breathing through the ice. No one will go near it.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (passes, seals, tokens) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo ink-omens—scrolls that rustle in still air, a lamp that burns green, a forgotten name whispered from a shelf, a ghost that asks for a pen.

Additional Features (Celestial Bureaucracy)

- The Mandate Clock [8] (Shared Campaign Clock): Tracks the stability of the dynasty. The party inherits 2 ticks at the start of any adventure set in Sihai (the old debt). The clock ticks when the emperor's health fails, when a succession dispute arises, when a major corruption scandal is exposed, or when the party breaks an oath witnessed by an ancestor. When the clock reaches 4: the Censorate becomes more aggressive (all audits start at Desperate Position). When it reaches 8: the Mandate fails — the Hollow claims the throne, civil war erupts, and the party must choose a side or flee. Resetting the clock requires a Ancestor Rite at the Imperial Ancestral Temple (downtime, costs 1 Supply and a truthful confession) or a public execution of a corrupt official (costs 1 Boon and may create enemies).
- The Two Ledgers (Ancestral Names Mechanic): Every character has two “names”: their Mortal Name (what the Censorate knows) and their Ancestral Name (recorded in the Celestial Ledger, kept by the Lethai-thora). The Ancestral Name cannot be erased by mortal means. Discovering a character’s Ancestral Name requires a Research Clock (size 6) in the Lethai-thora archives. Once known, the player may invoke the Ancestral Name once per session to gain +2 dice on any roll related to that ancestor’s domain (e.g., a farmer’s ancestor aids harvest, a soldier’s ancestor aids battle). However, invoking the Ancestral Name creates an Ancestral Debt (size 4 clock). When it fills, the ancestor demands a service — usually something the ancestor failed to do in life (e.g., “Apologize to my widow” or “Find my stolen seal”). Refusing the demand marks 1 Corruption and adds 2 ticks to the Mandate Clock.

- Censorate Audit (Social Combat Mechanic): The Censorate can audit any character at any time. An audit is a social combat with three phases:

1. Pleadings (Presence + Sway vs. Censor’s Lore). Success grants +1 die to the next phase.
2. Evidence (Wits + Investigation vs. DV 4). Success reveals a hidden debt or a forged document; failure gives the Censor a piece of evidence against you.
3. Judgment (Resolve + Lore vs. DV 5). Success: the character is cleared. Failure: the Censorate erases a name — the character loses one Bond (that person no longer remembers them) or one Asset (it is seized), and the Mandate Clock ticks +1.

Players can avoid an audit by: Bribing the Censor (costs 1 Honey Jar or 1 Boon), Presenting a forged document (requires a Forgery Clock, size 4), or Calling a ghost witness (requires a Spirit + Lore test, DV 4; the ghost cannot lie, but it will ask for a favor in return — usually a promise that creates a new Ancestral Debt).

- Examination Hell (Dungeon Mechanic): The Forbidden Garden contains a subterranean examination hall where the ghosts of failed candidates still write their answers. The party can enter to find a lost Ancestral Name — but the hall is alive.
 - The hall has a Stress Clock (size 8). Each failed roll, each lie spoken, each broken taboo ticks the clock.
 - At 4: The hall begins to change. Doors lead to different corridors. Navigation becomes Desperate.
 - At 8: The Examiner Ghost appears — a skeleton in scholar’s robes. It asks one question. The party must answer in verse. If the verse is good, the ghost grants a boon (reveals one Ancestral Name). If poor, the ghost erases one of the party’s names — that character is forgotten by the living for 1d4 days (lose all Bonds temporarily, cannot be recognised). The Stress Clock resets after the encounter.
- Paper Soldiers and Hungry Ghosts (Minion Types):
 - Paper Soldiers (Tier I, Cap 2): Origami constructs animated by Censorate magic. They have Harm 2, Body 2, Melee 1. They are Vulnerable to fire (double Harm) and to a successful Lore test (reveals their true name, causing them to crumple).
 - Hungry Ghosts (Tier II, Cap 3): Spirits of those whose names were erased. They have Harm 3, Spirit 3, and the ability Memory Drain (touch, target forgets a minor detail — a face, a password, a skill point for one scene). They cannot cross a line of salt or a properly witnessed oath-circle.
- Water Rights as Ancestral Currency: In the canal system, water rights are traded like silver, but they are also offerings to the Dragon Kings of the Four Seas. A Canal Mother’s key is worth more than a chest of coins — it can also summon a rain spirit (once per season, calm a storm or flood a district). Forging a water right angers the Dragon King; the forger’s wells run dry for nine years (all Survival tests to find water suffer –2 dice).

- Lethai-thora Archivists of the First Seal: The Lethai-thora are not merely librarians — they are the keepers of the original Mandate, written on tortoise shells and dragon bones. They do not serve the emperor; they serve the ledger that predates the empire. A Lethai-thora keeper can declare any document void by writing “void” in water over it. The water must be from the Well of Erased Names. Doing so costs 1 Obligation to the Lethai-thora and ticks the Mandate Clock +1 (the Censorate will investigate).
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Jade Censor — The Witness. A magistrate who never blinks, who writes every truth in a ledger of jade.
 - The Dragon Salt — Maelstraeus. The price of a monopoly; the interest on a nation’s thirst.
 - The Ninth Ancestor — Khemesh. The ghost of the first emperor, who still reviews petitions.
 - The Brush That Walks — The Traveler. A calligraphy brush that guides lost officials through the underworld.
 - The Kitchen’s Ear — The Sealed Gate. The god who reports every secret to the Celestial Bureaucracy.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Ninth Ledger and the Kalrantha Amulet (Dhahara): The ninth ledger is said to contain the name of the prince who stole the amulet. The Veiled Sisters want to erase it. The Breath-less want to find it. The Lethai-thora have hidden it in a scroll that unrolls forever.
- Silence-Tokens and the Covenant (Mykkiel): The Covenant recognises Lethai-thora silence-tokens as valid requests for closed hearings. A silence token can pause any court proceeding for the duration of a single breath. The token is a strip of silk from a burial shroud.
- Canal Mothers and the Fhara (Way of Silk): Fhara well-judges and Sihai canal mothers use similar water-measuring systems. A canal mother’s key can be used to negotiate a well contract — but the key must be dipped in the well first. The water will remember.
- The Mandate and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The Hollow is the unpaid interest on the Mandate. Aelaerem hedge-keepers say that when a dynasty falls, the Hollow eats the ninth name. The name is always the emperor’s secret childhood name.

Sihai Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Canal: Crumble a crust into the water. Ignore the first Forged Scroll penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Scroll: Tie a single knot in a silk cord. Cancel Censorate Audit or take –1 die on your next forgery detection roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Well: Whisper a dead censor’s name into the Well of Erased Names. Gain +1 Effect when negotiating with the Censorate this scene, but mark Obligation to the Hollow. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Boss Seeds (Brush & Mandate)

- The Forgotten Emperor (Ghost of the Ninth Seal) — Phases: Names Erased → Ledger Stolen → Mandate Reclaimed. Cracks: present a true ancestor tablet, expose a forged lineage, survive a night in the Well of Erased Names.
- The Brush That Writes Itself (Living Ink) — Phases: Paper Soldiers → Scroll Prison → Ink Flood. Cracks: a Lethai-thora silence-token, a confession written in water, the First Censor's Brush.

Patronage & Power

In Sihai, power flows through ink, salt, and the weight of the Mandate. The Emperor rules, but the Censorate audits, the Salt Monopoly finances, the Lethai-thora remember, and the ancestors watch. A well-written couplet can appease a ghost; a forged seal can start a war. The Celestial Bureaucracy is always hiring.

For the GM: Power in Sihai is measured in examination scores, salt licenses, and the thickness of a family's archive. Patronage often takes the form of stamped passes, ledger copies, or silence-tokens — each tied to a specific office, canal, or debt. To emphasize the mythological flavour:

- Use the Mandate Clock as a visible campaign front. The party's actions can tick or reset it. Ancestor rites are the only safe way to reduce it.
- Enforce Censorate Audits as a recurring threat — players must maintain clean papers or face erasure. Ghost witnesses can be summoned by either side.
- Let water rights be a form of currency that can be stolen, forged, or contested — but angering the Dragon King has consequences.
- Introduce paper soldiers (origami constructs) as low-tier enemies and hungry ghosts as mid-tier threats. The Censorate employs both.

In Sihai, the brush forgets nothing — and the Hollow remembers every erased name.

Chapter 34

Nihori

The Isles of the Dawn Spirit.

I ruled the waves before the Hollow learned to walk. My empire sank because I spoke a name I should not have. Do not speak my name. Do not ask what it was. The sea remembers. That is enough.

I am a Wanderer. I carry a broken sword and a grudge. The sword was my father's. The grudge is mine. The man who killed him died nine years ago. I still walk the isles, looking for his ghost. The ghost is looking for me too.

Nihori is a chain of volcanic islands, shrouded in mist and lashed by storms. Here, the old empire sank beneath the waves, and the Lethai-al guard the drowned kingdom's memory. The people are wanderers, duelists, and shrine maidens. They worship the storm spirits and fear the ninth wave. The Hollow breathes in the salt foam; the Oath-Keepers ride the tide. But here's the secret the Shogun doesn't want you to know: the old empire did not sink. It was pulled under. And whatever pulled it is still down there, waiting for the ninth wave to break the right way.

The Shogun sits in a half-ruined castle, his authority challenged by three rival daimyo who sharpen their blades and their treaties. Oni cults whisper in the ash wastes, offering forgotten bargains. The Storm Emperor's ghost does not rule—but his silence haunts every island. The ninth taboo is absolute: never speak the name of the drowned capital. The sea will hear you, and it will ask why you called. And when the sea asks a question, it expects an answer—in blood, in memory, or in a name you did not mean to give.

Never speak the name of the drowned capital. The sea will hear you, and it will ask why you called.

— The Storm Emperor's Ghost, who appears as a column of steam over the water

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Grilled fish and pickled vegetables—the fish is caught in the caldera lakes, the vegetables are fermented in clay pots buried in volcanic ash. The ash is warm. The warmth is the mountain's breath. The mountain is sleeping. The mountain dreams of the drowned empire.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To read the tide. Nihori children are taught the eight wave-heights: Calm, Ripple, Swell, Storm, Tsunami, and the ninth—the wave that has no height because it is the sea itself rising. The ninth wave is the drowning. The drowning is the empire's memory.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their sword. Nihori warriors carry their ancestors' blades, passed down for generations. A stranger whose sword is rusted has forgotten their lineage. A stranger whose sword is sharp has remembered. A stranger with no sword is a coward. Cowards are not fed.

What is the most common crime? Dueling—but dueling is not a crime, it is a conversation. The dueling codes are written in verse. The verses are interpreted by the Shogun's court. The interpretations are contradictory. The contradictions are settled by dueling. The circle is beautiful.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The drowned capital is not underwater. It is beneath—beneath the caldera, beneath the bedrock, beneath the world. The sea is a lid. The lid is cracked. Something is leaking through. The leaks are the oni. The oni are the empire's regrets.

Where do people go when they die? To the sea cliffs. The dead are placed in caves overlooking the water. The waves sing to them. The songs are the empire's lullabies. The dead listen. The dead do not sleep.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a duel—a matched contest with the wronged party's choice of weapon. If you lose, you are forgiven. If you win, you are not. If you refuse, you are exiled. Exile is the open sea. The sea is patient. The sea will wait.

What is the most important festival? The Calling of the Tides (spring). The shrine maidens walk into the water, singing the names of the drowned. The waves answer. The waves speak the names of the living who will die in the coming year. The names are never forgotten. The names are never repeated.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Shogun is a ghost. He died in the last oni war, but his body was never found. The daimyo rule in his name because they are afraid of what will happen if they admit he is gone. The oni know. The oni are waiting for the admission. The admission will be the war.

34.1 Nihori — “The Isles of the Dawn Spirit”

Quick Reference

Tagline: Duel at dawn. Honour the storm. The ninth wave never breaks.

Storm Emperor’s Ghost (Elite): “I ruled the waves before the Hollow learned to walk. My empire sank because I spoke a name I should not have. Do not speak my name. Do not ask what it was. The sea remembers. That is enough.”

Wanderer (Commoner): “I carry a broken sword and a grudge. The sword was my father’s. The grudge is mine. The man who killed him died nine years ago. I still walk the isles, looking for his ghost. The ghost is looking for me too.”

Genre / Mood: Storm-tossed honour duels, kami politics, oni cults, volcanic doom, drowned ghosts, yokai in the ash.

Starting Location: A bamboo grove on a clifftop, where two duelists face each other at dawn. Ash from the volcano dusts their shoulders. A Shrine Maiden rings a copper bell: “The Shogun’s envoy demands the duel stop. The daimyo of the southern isle says it will not. The storm-spirit is watching. Choose a side — or the ninth wave will choose for you.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Nihori is a chain of volcanic islands, shrouded in mist and lashed by storms — a shattered shogunate where the old empire sank beneath the waves and the Lethai-al guard the drowned kingdom’s memory. The people are wanderers, duelists, shrine maidens, and oni-touched outcasts. They worship the storm spirits (kami of wind, wave, and crater) and fear the ninth wave. The Hollow breathes in the salt foam; Oath-Keepers ride the tide. The Shogun sits in a half-ruined castle, his authority challenged by three rival daimyo who sharpen their blades and their treaties. Oni cults whisper in the ash wastes, offering forgotten bargains. Yūrei (vengeful ghosts) wail from sunken ships. Kappa drag children from tidal pools. Tengu mock travellers from the high crags. The Storm Emperor’s ghost does not rule — but his silence haunts every island. The ninth taboo is absolute: never speak the name of the drowned capital. The sea will hear you, and it will ask why you called.

What you notice first: The smell of salt and volcanic ash. The way every traveller carries a sword, even the tea-sellers. The constant sound of bells on shrine gates — ringing in the wind. And the silence when a daimyo’s retinue passes. The distant wail of a funayūrei (a drowned sailor’s ghost) calling for a boat that never comes.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never draw steel in a shrine. The kami will witness. They may not forgive.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Wave and the Edge of the Blade

Power here is measured in duels won, storms survived, and the number of clans that bow to your banner. The Shogun rules from Castle Kurotani, but his writ fades as the islands stretch into the mist. Three daimyo vie for supremacy: the Northern Crane (old blood, slow to anger, quicker to negotiate), the Southern Serpent (pragmatic, pirates in his pay, a smile like a cracked bell), and the Western Oni (rumoured to have made a pact with a Crater Oni, his eyes glow faintly red in the dark). Between them, the Shrine Maidens keep the peace — not through steel, but through storm-calling and the threat of the ninth wave. A duel is not merely a fight; it is a negotiation sanctified by kami. First blood decides the truth. The loser owes a story. The winner owes a cup of sake — and a prayer at the nearest shrine.

- J Sunken Gate Opens — The underwater archway becomes passable. Something swims out. '[THRESHOLD]' '[DEATH]' It is a drowned spirit. It wants its name back. It will trade a secret for it — or take yours.
- Q Storm-Reader's Silence — The old man stops reading the storm. The fishermen do not know where to sail. '[WEATHER]' '[GRIEF]' He is grieving. His son died at sea. He will not speak until the body is found — or until someone tells him a true story of the sea.
- K Duel to the Death (Oni-Eyed's Assassin) — A duel that was meant to be to first blood becomes a killing. '[HONOUR]' '[TRAP]' The killer is a spy from the Western Ash Wastes. The duel was an assassination. The party is blamed — unless they can prove the oni-touched intervened.
- A The Ninth Wave Takes — The massive wave crashes over the cliff shrine. The bells are silent. '[DEATH]' '[CATASTROPHE]' The shrine maiden is gone. The storm-spirit is free. The Hollow walks the shore. The only way to appease it is to speak the name of the drowned capital — and accept the consequences.

(Token/Bell/Charm) Swordsmith's token (one reroll on a failed melee attack); shrine bell (reveals hidden spirits for one scene); wanderer's oath-bracelet (one use to compel a service).

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Swordsmith's Token (Iron) — A small iron disc. Reroll a failed melee attack once. '[COMBAT]' The token is stamped with a prayer. The prayer is for a clean cut. The swordsmith made it for a warrior who never returned.
3. Shrine Bell (Copper) — A small copper bell. Ring it to reveal hidden spirits for one scene. '[KAMI]' The bell's tone is inaudible to humans. The spirits hear it clearly. They may answer — or they may hide.
4. Wanderer's Oath-Bracelet (Leather) — A braided leather bracelet. Demand a service from any wanderer once. '[HONOUR]' The bracelet is stained with sake. The wanderer cannot refuse. The service is one night’s vigil or one day’s guide.

5. Storm-Charm (Bone) — A carved bone. Ignore one weather penalty on a journey leg. ‘[WEATHER]’ The bone is from a sailor who died in a storm. His spirit protects you — but he will ask for a story in return.
 6. Tide-Charm (Shell) — A white shell. Whisper a drowned ancestor’s name to calm a storm for one hour. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[WEATHER]’ The shell is warm. It glows when the ancestor is listening. Do not lie. They know.
 7. Duelist’s Sake Cup — A ceramic cup used in a fair duel. Demand a duel to first blood. ‘[HONOUR]’ The cup is chipped. The chip is from a blade that drew first blood. The loser’s story is carved into the rim.
 8. Pirate Captain’s Hook (Brass) — A brass hook prosthetic. Use it as a key to open any chest in the cove. ‘[STEALTH]’ The hook is also a weapon. It can cut rope and bone. It also fits the lock on the Southern Serpent’s war chest.
 9. Volcano Priest’s Whisper — A single word: the forbidden name. Speak it to cause a tremor. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[MAGIC]’ The word burns the tongue. Use once. The volcano will remember. The oni will hear.
 10. Drowned Scholar’s Scroll (Waterproof) — A scroll retrieved from the sunken capital. Contains a forgotten secret. ‘[LEGEND]’ The scroll is wet. It will never dry. The secret is about the Storm Emperor’s true name — and why he spoke it.
- J Ninth Wave’s Shell — A white shell from the Ninth Wave’s Rock. Break it to experience a memory. ‘[OMEN]’ The memory is always a death. The death is always a drowning. The memory may be yours — or an ancestor’s.
- Q Storm-Reader’s Flute (Bone) — A bone flute. Play it to predict the weather for the next 24 hours. ‘[WEATHER]’ The tune is sad. It always predicts a storm. It is always right. The Storm-Reader will not explain why.
- K Sunken Gate Key (Coral) — A piece of coral shaped like a key. Opens the Sunken Gate. ‘[THRESHOLD]’ The key is alive. It grows one size each time it is used. After nine uses, it becomes a coral door that cannot be moved — and the gate is permanently open.
- A First Drowned’s Breath (Glass Vial) — Seawater from the bottom of the sunken capital. Drink it to breathe water for one hour. ‘[LEGEND]’ The water tastes of salt and sorrow. The lungs will ache. The memory of drowning will stay with you.

Storm-Spirit Negotiation (d6 Outcomes)

When the party attempts to bargain with a storm kami (at a shrine, during a typhoon, or at the Ninth Wave’s Rock), roll on this table to determine the outcome. The GM sets the initial DV based on the offering (a tide-charm, a story, or a cup of sake).

Outcome	Result
Critical Success	The spirit grants a Storm-Charm (ignore one weather penalty on any future voyage). The kami may also whisper a warning about the next oni cult activity.
Success	The spirit calms the storm for the party only. Other ships in the area are not protected. Gain +1 Kami Favour .

Partial	The storm abates, but the spirit demands a tide-charm as payment. Gain a Debt Clock [4]. If you cannot pay, the storm returns in 1d4 hours.
Failure	The spirit is offended. All sailing rolls are Desperate for the next leg. The kami may send a kappa or funayūrei (drowned ghost) to harass the party.
Critical Failure	The ninth wave rises. Test Body + Athletics (DV 5) or be swept overboard. Lose 1 Supply and gain the Marked by the Storm condition (weather hazards are one step worse for the next journey).

Oni Cult Whispers (d8)

When the party encounters the influence of the Oni-Eyed or the Crater Oni, roll on this table for cryptic messages, omens, or cult demands.

d8	Whisper
1	“The Oni-Eyed seeks a name. Give him yours, and he will give you a ship — and a shadow that walks behind you.”
2	“The Crater Oni accepts memories as payment. Your first kiss. Your mother’s face. A fair trade — until the interest compounds.”
3	“The ninth wave is the Oni’s breath. When it breaks, the Hollow listens. Those who hear it must speak a true name or lose one of their own.”
4	“The Sunken Gate opens at low tide. Bring a drowned scholar’s scroll — or a life. The gate does not care which.”
5	“The Shogun is a ghost. The daimyo know. They are afraid to admit it. The Oni-Eyed will laugh when the truth speaks itself.”
6	“The Southern Serpent’s fleet carries oni-touched pirates. Their shadows have horns. Their captain has no reflection.”
7	“The Storm Emperor’s ghost speaks only to those who have lost something at sea. What did you lose? The oni can help you forget it.”
8	“The oni-brewer’s sake erases debts. It also erases the debtor. Choose carefully. The Crater Oni is patient — and thirsty.”

Duel Complications (d6)

When a formal duel is underway, roll on this table for unexpected twists that can change the outcome or escalate the stakes.

d6	Complication
----	--------------

1	Kami Witness — A shrine kami manifests as a whirlwind or a flash of lightning. Both duelists must test Resolve (DV 4) or lose their turn. The kami favours the one who offers a prayer.
2	Interrupted by Ashfall — Volcanic ash darkens the sky. Ranged attacks (including thrown weapons) suffer -1 die. The duel may be postponed unless both parties agree to continue.
3	Oni Interference — A horned shadow flickers at the edge of the grove. The duelist with higher Oni Corruption gains +1 die to intimidation but -1 die to honour-based rolls. The oni is betting on the outcome.
4	The Ninth Echo — The clashing of blades rings nine times. On the ninth ring, the ground trembles. Both duelists must test Body + Athletics (DV 3) or stumble, losing the next exchange.
5	A Witness’s Secret — A bystander reveals that one duelist is under an oni bargain. The duel can be halted for a Geas Test (Spirit + Lore vs. DV 4). Success cancels the bargain for the duration of the duel; failure binds the bargainer further.
6	The Loser’s Story — Instead of first blood, the loser must tell a true story of a broken promise. If the story moves the kami, the duel ends in a draw and both parties gain +1 Kami Favour . If the story is false, the loser takes Harm 1 (spiritual backlash).

Kami Favour Boons (d6)

When a character spends Kami Favour (see Additional Features), roll or choose a boon from this table. Each boon costs 1–3 Favour as indicated.

Boon (Cost)	Effect
Calm Seas (1 Favour)	The kami calms the waters for one leg. All sailing rolls gain +1 Position.
Wind at Back (1 Favour)	Your ship gains +1 Speed for one leg. On a critical success, you arrive one segment early.
Kami’s Warning (2 Favour)	Before the next storm, you receive a vision. The GM must answer one yes/no question about the weather or a sea hazard.
Duel Blessing (2 Favour)	In your next duel, you gain +1 die to Honour-based actions (e.g., showing mercy, refusing a dirty trick).

Ancestor's Tide (3 Favour)	A drowned ancestor guides your ship through a reef or shoal. Ignore one Sunken Gate or Pirate Flotilla complication.
Oni Ward (3 Favour)	For the remainder of the current scene, you are immune to oni-touched fear effects. Your shadow does not grow horns even if your Corruption track is high.

Yokai Encounters (d8)

When travelling through the wilder parts of Nihori (ash wastes, deep forests, forgotten shores), roll on this table for a supernatural encounter. Yokai are not always hostile — they are creditors, tricksters, and reminders of a world older than the shogunate.

d8	Encounter
1	Kappa in the Ford — A river kappa blocks a shallow crossing. It demands a cucumber, a bow, or a memory. Refuse, and it will try to pull a party member underwater (Grapple, Body+Endurance DV 3 to resist). If you win, it may grant a Kappa's Secret — +1 die on all Swimming or Sailing rolls for the rest of the journey.
2	Floating Lantern (Funayūrei) — A drowned sailor's ghost drifts toward your boat, holding a paper lantern. It asks, "Where is my grave?" If you answer truthfully (a specific cove or shrine), it blesses your voyage (+1 Position on the next sea leg). If you lie, it capsizes your boat.
3	Tengu on the Pass — A long-nosed tengu sits on a stone, blocking the mountain trail. It challenges you to a game of riddles or a contest of pride. If you win, it gives you a Tengu Fan (once, create a gust of wind to extinguish fires or fill sails). If you lose, it steals your name — you forget one Bond or Skill for 1d4 scenes.
4	Nure-onna (Wet Woman) — A serpent-woman with the head of a beautiful woman and the body of a snake appears on the shore. She offers to heal a wound or clear a Debt Clock segment — in exchange for a vial of your blood or a lock of your hair. Refusing angers her (Harm 1, poison). Accepting gives you a Debt Token she will call in at the worst moment.
5	Jorōgumo (Spider Bride) — A woman in silk robes invites you to her teahouse. The teahouse is a web. She offers you a deal: information about the Oni-Eyed's location in exchange for a memory of a living family member. If you refuse, she attacks (Cap 3, venomous). If you accept, you gain the information — but your family member will dream of spiders for a week.

6	Yuki-onna (Snow Woman) — During a sudden cold snap, a woman in white appears. She asks for a fire or a warm cloak. If you give it freely, she grants you a Frost Charm (once, ignore a heat-based hazard). If you refuse, she freezes your breath — you gain 1 Fatigue and suffer –1 die on all physical rolls for the next scene.
7	Onmoraki (Birth-Death Bird) — A bird with a human face hatches from a corpse. It speaks in riddles about a death that will occur in the next 24 hours. If the party prevents that death, the Onmoraki becomes a guardian spirit (Cap 1 follower for one session). If they fail, it curses them — the next time anyone rolls a 1, it becomes a 10 (but the GM gains 2 SB).
8	The Shōjō (Drunkard Sage) — A red-faced, singing creature floats on a sake barrel offshore. It offers to share its brew. Drinking it gives +2 dice to all social rolls for one scene — but you cannot lie, and every truth you speak is heard by the nearest oni cult spy. The Shōjō laughs and vanishes, leaving an empty barrel.

Haunted Blades (Cursed Swords)

In Nihori, every sword has a spirit, and some swords have ghosts. A character who acquires a masterwork blade (cost 8 XP) may choose to make it haunted. The blade grants a powerful benefit but also a curse.

Blade	Benefit	Curse
Whisper of the Drowned	+1 die to attack rolls against pirates and oni.	The blade whispers the names of drowning sailors at night. You cannot recover Fatigue from sleep while at sea.
Storm’s Edge	Once per scene, as a free action, gain +1 Effect on a melee attack during a storm.	The blade attracts lightning. On a Critical Failure, you are struck for Harm 1 (shock).
Ancestor’s Tooth	The blade can cut through spirit wards. Ignore 1 point of Armor from ghosts and oni.	The ancestor’s ghost appears in your dreams, demanding you avenge a centuries-old wrong. Start a Ancestor’s Debt clock [6].
Broken Vow (Cursed)	+2 dice on the first attack of any duel.	If you lose a duel, the blade breaks — and you cannot repair it without a quest to the sunken capital.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits. Highest rank sets main Clock size: 2–5 → 4 segments, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10.
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (tokens, bells, charms) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo sea-omens—a wave that breaks twice, a bell that rings underwater, a name that echoes from the foam.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Duel Law: Disputes in Nihori are settled by duel to first blood. The loser owes a story; the winner owes a cup of sake. A duel can be witnessed by anyone; the witness's word is law. Refusing a duel is an admission of guilt. In the shogunate courts, a duel verdict can overturn a written contract.
- Storm Season Clock [8]: Tracks the approach of the monsoon. When it fills, a typhoon strikes — all travel becomes Desperate for 2 legs. The clock ticks each day during storm season. The Shrine Maidens can delay it by one day for a suitable offering (a tide-charm, a memory, or a promise).
- Kami Favour (Reputation Track): Instead of debt, track Kami Favour [6]. Gain favour by respecting shrines, winning duels honourably, and appeasing storm-spirits. Spend favour to ask a kami for a boon (see Kami Favour Boons table). At 0 favour, shrines are hostile — all social rolls at shrines are Desperate.
- Oni Corruption Track [6]: Represents the influence of the Oni-Eyed's cult and the Crater Oni. Tick when a character makes a bargain with an oni, drinks oni-brewed sake, or speaks the forbidden name. At 3 segments: the character's shadow grows horns. At 6: the character becomes oni-touched — they gain +1 die to intimidation but suffer –1 die to all social rolls with shrine maidens and can never enter a shrine without being attacked.
- Shogunate Faction Clocks: Track the three daimyo's schemes:
 - Southern Serpent's Ambition [6] — advances when she bribes officials, builds her fleet, or sponsors pirate raids. When full, she declares open war on the Shogun.
 - Northern Crane's Patience [6] — retreats when he is humiliated or his allies defect. When it reaches 0, he abandons the Shogun's peace and marches south.
 - Oni-Eyed's Ascension [8] — advances each time a character accepts an oni bargain or the party fails to stop a cult ritual. When full, the Crater Oni manifests in the material world.
- Yokai as Creditors: Unlike simple monsters, yokai in Nihori treat with travellers. They may offer bargains, demand tolls, or curse those who break taboos. Use the Yokai Encounters table to introduce them, and track any promises made to a yokai as a Yokai Debt clock [4]. When it fills, the yokai returns to collect.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Storm Emperor's Ghost — Khemesh + The Witness. The pressure of a forbidden name, the memory of a drowned kingdom.
 - The Crater Oni — Malachai. Cursed gifts, bargains that leave scars, power that transforms you from the inside.
 - The Ninth Wave — Raéyn. The storm that does not break, the tide that remembers every sailor.

- The Bell of Drowned Shrines — The Sealed Gate. The boundary between the living and the dead, guarded by bells and salt.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Drowned Capital and the Kalrantha Amulet (Dhahara): The sunken city is said to contain a temple that holds a fragment of the demon Varash. The Veiled Sisters want it. The Oni-Eyed wants to bargain with it. The Shrine Maidens want it to stay drowned.
- Tide-Charms and the Tulkani (Way of Silk): Tulkani story-tellers sometimes carry Lethai-al tide-charms as proof of a witnessed drowning. A charm from Nihori is worth twice as much — and attracts twice as much Hollow attention.
- Storm-Spirits and the Veiled Sisters (Ashaan): The Veiled Sisters have tried to bind storm-spirits for use in their fleet. The Lethai-al have foiled nine attempts. The tenth attempt is being funded by the Southern Serpent’s pirate gold.
- Oni Bargains and the Chain (Bitter Root): Daughters of the Cord refuse to treat with oni — the interest is always paid in souls, and the Cord cannot collect from a damned spirit. An oni-touched Daughter is a contradiction; one may be hiding in the ash wastes, trying to untie her cord from a Crater Oni’s bargain.
- The Ninth Wave and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): Aelaerem hedge-keepers say that the ninth wave is the Hollow’s breath. When it crashes, the Hollow exhales. Those who hear it must speak a true name or lose one of their own.

Nihori Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Foam: Crumble a crust at the water’s edge. Ignore the first Pirate Flotilla penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Rope: Tie a single knot in a shrine climbing rope. Cancel Storm-Spirit Offended or take –1 die on your next sailing roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Wave: Whisper a drowned ancestor’s name into the ninth wave. Gain +1 Effect when navigating a storm this scene, but mark Obligation to the Hollow. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Sake to the Oni: Pour a cup of sake onto volcanic stone. Cancel one tick of the Oni Corruption track — but the oni will remember your face. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from clan retainers or shrine maidens.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby duelists or pirate lookouts.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for oni cultists or the Storm-Reader’s spies.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favourable tide.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Local daimyo's guard or shrine keeper becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to ashfall or rising water.
- Foe Appears: An oni-touched ronin or a pirate boarding party arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional oni cultists, pirate ships, or clan samurai arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.
- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes—duel becomes a killing / volcano trembles / ninth wave crests early.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: Shogun's Chamberlain, Oni-Eyed, or Storm Emperor's Ghost intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically—volcano erupts / tsunami strikes / shrine collapses.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice—omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Nihori (Duel Law): A witness recants, the first blood is disputed, a duelist's story is revealed as false.
- Nihori (Storm & Kami): A kami demands a toll, a storm shifts direction, the ninth wave's timing changes.
- Nihori (Oni Cult): A shadow grows horns, a memory curdles, an oni bargain's fine print appears.
- Nihori (Yokai): A kappa laughs from a riverbank, a tengu's feather falls on your shoulder, a snow woman's breath fogs your vision.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Navigation): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Fog Bank.
- Cut the Duel (Presence + Honour): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a duelist's sake cup is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Wave (Resolve + Survival): On a hit in Ninth Wave Warning, you pick who keeps their footing; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Honour & Oni)

- The Oni-Eyed (Ascended Cultist) — Phases: Whispered Bargain → Horned Shadow → Oni Manifest. Cracks: speak his original name, destroy the mask, offer a memory the oni cannot refuse.
- The Storm Emperor’s Ghost (Drowned Sovereign) — Phases: Silent Tide → Wave of Names → The Ninth Breaks. Cracks: speak the forbidden name at the Sunken Gate, return the drowned scholar’s scroll, let the Storm-Reader negotiate.
- Southern Serpent (Pirate Admiral) — Phases: Fleet Gathers → Tariff Blockade → Throne Claim. Cracks: expose her spy network, sink her flagship, convince the Crane to ally with the Shogun.
- The Kappa King (Lord of the Freshwater Depths) — Phases: Drown the Ford → Steal the Children → Claim the Well. Cracks: return a stolen name, offer a cucumber of great value, survive his grip and pull off his bowl (draining his power).

Patronage & Power

In Nihori, power flows through duels, storms, the favour of kami, and the dangerous bargains of oni. The Shogun is a figurehead; the three daimyo are the real players. A clan chief’s authority rests on how many duels he has won and how many shrines he has funded. A shrine maiden’s on how many storms she has predicted and how many oni she has banished. Yokai watch from the margins, ready to lend aid or demand payment.

For the GM: Use the Storm Season Clock as a visible threat. Let Duel Law be a way to resolve conflicts without combat — or a way to escalate them when honour is insulted. Make Tide-Charms valuable but dangerous — each use may attract the Hollow or the attention of an oni. Track the three daimyo’s Faction Clocks as a campaign front; the party’s actions can accelerate or delay civil war. Use Kami Favour as a reputation currency — players must choose which shrines to support and which kami to appease. The Storm-Spirit Negotiation and Oni Cult Whispers tables add depth to supernatural encounters, while Duel Complications keep combat fresh and honour-bound. Introduce Yokai Encounters to make the wilderness feel alive and capricious, and offer Haunted Blades to characters willing to accept a curse for power.

Chapter 35

Ayokha

The Monsoon Throne.

The monsoon does not come because we pray. It comes because the stars align. I read the stars. I align them. Without me, the rains would fail, the rice would burn, and the kingdom would fall. I am not a servant of the God-King. I am his monsoon.

I am a River Merchant. My boat has more secrets than cargo. The lower deck is for silk. The upper deck is for lies. The tiller is for bribes. I have carried nine spies this year. The ninth was the God-King's own daughter.

Ayokha is the land of the Monsoon Throne, where the God-King rules by the rhythm of the rains. Rivers flood, rice terraces glow green, and the wharves are crowded with ships from Dhahara, Sihai, and distant isles. The Lethai-ar witness every contract; the spirit-mediums speak for the nats of the ford. Power here is measured in monsoon schedules, silk vouchers, and the favour of the God-King's astrologer. But here's the secret the astrologer doesn't want you to know: the monsoon does not come because he aligns the stars. The monsoon comes because the river-spirits allow it. And the river-spirits are angry.

The nats—hungry spirits who live in eddies and under bridges—demand offerings of betel leaf, candle wax, and forgotten promises. A merchant who ignores a nat's demand will find his boat sunk and his name struck from the ledgers. A farmer who disrespects the monsoon will find his fields barren and his children dreaming of drowning. In Ayokha, the rain is not weather—it is a creditor. And the God-King is behind on his payments.

Never refuse a gift of betel leaf. It is an oath of hospitality. Refusing it is an insult that can end a bloodline.

— The God-King's Astrologer, who has not seen the sun in thirty years

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Rice congee with dried shrimp—the rice is from the terraces, the shrimp is from the delta nets. The delta is where the river meets the sea. The sea is the God-King's mother. The God-King's mother is a nat. The nat is hungry.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To read the river. Ayokha children are taught the eight currents: Flood, Ebb, Eddy, Whirl, Still, and the ninth—the current that flows upstream. The upstream current is the monsoon's breath. The monsoon's breath is the God-King's voice. The God-King is silent.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their offering. Every traveler in Ayokha carries a gift for the nats—betel leaf, candle, a coin. A stranger whose offering is generous has been blessed. A stranger whose offering is small is testing the spirits. A stranger with no offering is a fool. The nats take fools first.

What is the most common crime? Nat-bribery—but bribery is not a crime, it is a negotiation. The nats set the tolls. The merchants pay the tolls. The nats spend the tolls on offerings. The offerings are burned. The ash falls on the fields. The fields are fertile. The circle is the economy.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The God-King is a puppet. The astrologer is the real ruler. The astrologer reads the stars. The stars say what the astrologer tells them to say. The astrologer has not read the stars in twenty years. He reads the nats' moods instead. The nats are fickle.

Where do people go when they die? To the river. The dead are cremated on the ghats. Their ashes are scattered on the water. The water carries them to the delta. The delta is the land of the nats. The nats decide whether the dead become ancestors or hungry ghosts. The nats are not generous.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a nat—a spirit of the river, summoned by a medium. The nat hears your apology. If the nat accepts, the water is calm. If the nat refuses, the water rises. If the nat is silent, the water is still. Still water is the God-King's judgment. The God-King does not forgive.

What is the most important festival? The Welcoming of the Monsoon (summer). The God-King stands in the rain. The rain is the nats' blessing. The blessing is measured in inches. The inches determine the harvest. The harvest determines the taxes. The taxes determine the God-King's wealth. The God-King is not wealthy.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The God-King's daughter is not his daughter. She is the child of the astrologer and a nat—born from a bargain made during a failed monsoon. She can control the rain. She does not know. The astrologer knows. The astrologer is waiting for the right moment to tell her. The right moment is the next drought.

35.1 Ayokha — “The Monsoon Throne”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The rain writes the law. The river witnesses. The ninth cup is for the drowned.

God-King’s Astrologer (Elite): “The monsoon does not come because we pray. It comes because the stars align. I read the stars. I align them. Without me, the rains would fail, the rice would burn, and the kingdom would fall. I am not a servant of the God-King. I am his monsoon.”

River Merchant (Commoner): “My boat has more secrets than cargo. The lower deck is for silk. The upper deck is for lies. The tiller is for bribes. I have carried nine spies this year. The ninth was the God-King’s own daughter.”

Genre / Mood: Monsoon noir – waterlogged intrigue, spirit bargains, and the tyranny of the rain.

Starting Location: A river market on stilts, where boats load silk and spices, and the air smells of brine and betrayal. A Lethai-ar Vigil holds a green lamp: “The God-King’s astrologer has predicted a late monsoon. The merchants are panicking. The rice will fail unless someone sacrifices to the river spirit. You are someone. Go.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Ayokha is the land of the Monsoon Throne, where the God-King rules by the rhythm of the rains. Rivers flood, rice terraces glow green like jade stairways, and the wharves are crowded with ships from Dhahara, Sihai, and distant isles. The Lethai-ar witness every contract; the spirit-mediums speak for the nats of the ford – hungry spirits who live in eddies and under bridges. Power here is measured in monsoon schedules, silk vouchers, and the favour of the God-King’s astrologer, a man who has not seen the sun in thirty years. The ninth taboo is absolute: never pour the ninth cup, never count the ninth wave, never speak the ninth name. The Hollow watches from the flooded fields, and the drowned sometimes knock on the hulls of passing boats.

What you notice first: The smell of wet earth and fermenting rice, thick as a fever dream. The way every bridge has a spirit shrine at its foot, offerings of betel leaf and candle wax. The constant sound of water — dripping, flowing, raining, whispering.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never refuse a gift of betel leaf. It is an oath of hospitality. Refusing it is an insult that can end a bloodline.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Monsoon

Power here is measured in monsoon predictions, silk bales, and the number of spirits placated. The God-King rules from a floating palace, but the astrologer sets the calendar, the Lethai-ar witness the contracts, and the spirit-mediums negotiate with the nats. A merchant who ignores a nat’s demand will find his boat sunk and his name struck from the ledgers. A farmer who disrespects the monsoon will find his fields barren and his children dreaming of drowning. In Ayokha, the rain is not weather – it is a creditor.

Monsoon-Spirit Negotiation (d6 Outcomes)

When the party attempts to bargain with a monsoon spirit (at a shrine, during a drought, or at the Monsoon Bell Tower), roll on this table to determine the outcome. The GM sets the initial DV based on the offering (a silk voucher, a story, or a promise witnessed by a Lethai-ar).

Outcome	Result
Critical Success	The spirit grants a Monsoon Schedule (see Diamonds) or advances the Monsoon Clock by -2 (rains arrive early). The spirit may also whisper the location of a hidden spring or a sunken relic.
Success	The spirit delays the drought. The Monsoon Clock does not advance for 1d4 days. Gain +1 Kami Favour (use Ayokha's equivalent, e.g., River Favour).
Partial	The spirit accepts the offering but demands an additional payment: a broken oath must be confessed, or a ninth cup poured into the river. Gain a Debt Clock [4].
Failure	The spirit is offended. The Monsoon Clock advances by +2. All river travel is Desperate for the next leg. The spirit may send a nat to harass the party (see Nat Encounters table).

Critical Failure	The spirit calls the ninth wave. A flash flood sweeps the area. Test Body + Athletics (DV 5) or be swept away. Lose 1 Supply and gain the Marked by the Monsoon condition (all weather hazards are one step worse for the next journey).
-------------------------	---

Nat Encounters (d8)

When the party travels along rivers, crosses bridges, or disturbs spirit shrines, roll on this table for a nat (river-spirit) encounter. Nats are not always hostile — they are creditors.

d8	Encounter
1	The Toll Nat — Appears at a ford, demanding a betel leaf or a coin. Refusal capsizes the nearest boat. Payment grants safe passage for one day.
2	The Drowned Child — A child’s ghost sits on a rock, weeping. It has lost its name. If the party returns it (by speaking the child’s true name from a village record), the nat grants a River Charm (ignore one flood hazard).
3	The Serpent Nat (Naga) — A serpent with golden scales rises from the water. It demands a story about a broken promise. If the story pleases it, the nat blesses the party’s boat (+1 Speed for one leg). If the story offends it, the nat capsizes the boat.
4	The Bridge Nat — A spirit lives under every bridge. It asks: “Why do you cross?” Answer truthfully (e.g., “to trade,” “to flee,” “to honour a debt”) and the bridge holds. Lie, and the planks splinter.
5	The Ferryman’s Nat — A hooded figure rows a spectral boat. It offers passage to the other side — but the price is a memory of a living person. Accept and lose a random memory (GM chooses). Refuse and the nat follows the party for 1d4 days, appearing in reflections.
6	The Well Nat (Drowned) — A hand reaches out of a well. It holds a wet scroll. The scroll contains a forgotten water right. Taking it angers the nat (must pay a story or a cup of blood). Leaving it earns the nat’s gratitude (+1 River Favour).
7	The Laughing Nat — A trickster spirit that swaps cargo between boats. Roll Wits + Navigation (DV 4) to notice. On failure, the party loses 1 Supply (stolen) and gains 1 random item (a silk scarf, a jar of pickled fish, a forged customs seal).

8	The Ninth Nat (The Hollow's Breath) — A figure made of mist and rain. It asks: “Who poured the ninth cup?” The party must answer with a name or a story. If they cannot, the Hollow gains 1 tick on its Attention clock. If they answer with a true regret, the nat vanishes and the party gains +1 die on their next river roll.
---	--

Rice Terrace Hazards (d6)

When the party travels through the flooded rice terraces (especially during the monsoon), roll on this table for environmental hazards.

d6	Hazard
1	Levee Breach — Water pours through a crack. Test Body + Athletics (DV 4) to avoid being swept down the terrace. Failure costs 1 Fatigue and 1 Supply (rice washed away).
2	Hungry Ghosts (Farmers) — The spirits of farmers who starved during a drought appear, demanding a share of the harvest. Offer 1 Supply or face a ghost attack (Cap 2, Harm 1).
3	Mudslide — A section of the terrace collapses. Navigation becomes Desperate. Lose 1 segment of progress.
4	Crab Swarm — Thousands of small crabs climb the levees, snapping at ankles. Test Resolve (DV 3) or mark 1 Fatigue. The crabs also eat exposed food — lose 1 Supply if the party fails a Wits + Survival test.
5	Sunken Shrine — A submerged spirit shrine emerges at low water. Investigating reveals a Ninth Terrace Rice grain (see Diamonds) but angers the local nat. The nat will demand a story or a promise.
6	The Ninth Terrace Opens — The forbidden terrace floods unexpectedly. The party can harvest a single grain of the sacred rice (requiring three actions, each triggering a Hungry Ghost attack). If they succeed, they gain a Ninth Terrace Rice grain — but the God-King's astrologer will sense its theft.

Monsoon Omens (d8)

When the party consults the astrologer, reads the sky, or experiences a shift in weather, roll on this table for a prophetic omen that affects upcoming travel or social encounters.

d8	Omen
1	The river runs red at dawn — a blood debt is overdue. The party's next negotiation with a merchant suffers –1 Position.

2	The Monsoon Bell rings twice — the astrologer has lied about the schedule. The next weather prediction is automatically wrong.
3	The Bridge of Three Echoes appears a day early — the Hollow is restless. The first person to cross must test Resolve (DV 4) or gain the Haunted condition (nightmares).
4	A nat asks for a story at the ford. Refusal means the river rises. Accept and tell a true story; the GM gains 1 SB but the party gains +1 River Favour .
5	The Vigil’s green lamp burns blue — a witness cord has been cut. The party will encounter a Lethai-ar seeking justice in the next 24 hours.
6	Rice terraces flood without rain — the God-King has forgotten an offering. The party must perform a Rain Offering (costs 1 Supply) or the Monsoon Clock advances by +1.
7	The Ninth Terrace blooms in winter — the forbidden rice is ready. The keeper is dead. The party can attempt to harvest (see Rice Terrace Hazards) but the astrologer will send guards.
8	The Monsoon’s Eye shows a face — the face is yours, but older. The astrologer will not explain. Gain a Prophecy Token : once, reroll a failed roll related to weather or rivers, but the GM may introduce a complication.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (schedules, vouchers, cords) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo monsoon-omens—water that flows upstream, a lamp that burns green without oil, a cord that ties itself.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Debt to the Rain (Shared Clock, size 8): Every broken promise to a river-spirit, every unpaid offering, every late monsoon payment ticks the clock. The party inherits the God-King’s debt at the start of any adventure set in Ayokha – they begin with 2 ticks already accrued (the old debt). When the clock reaches 4: the astrologer’s predictions become unreliable (roll twice for weather, take worse). When it reaches 8: a Oath-Keeper rises from the river and demands payment in memories, names, or a season of servitude. Resetting the clock requires a Monsoon Rite (downtime, costs 1 XP or a story worth a season’s wages) or a sacrifice to the Drowned Nat (a memory or a magical item).
- Monsoon Clock [6]: Tracks the approach of the rainy season. When it fills, the monsoon arrives — all river travel becomes Desperate for 2 legs. The clock ticks each day during the dry season. The astrologer can predict the exact day; a successful Wits + Lore test (DV 4) reveals the remaining ticks. The party can slow the clock by performing Rain Offerings (betel leaves, silk scraps, or stories) – each offering ticks the clock back by 1, but adds 1 tick to Debt to the Rain.

- River Court Justice: Disputes on the river are settled by a floating court. The judge is a Lethai-ar Vigil. The verdict is written on a clay tablet and thrown into the water. If the tablet floats, the verdict is true. If it sinks, the verdict is false — and the judge is drowned. A character may attempt to influence the verdict by offering a bribe (a Diamond or a story) before the tablet is thrown. If the bribe is a story, the GM gains 1 SB; if a Diamond, the judge's verdict tilts in your favour automatically (no test).
- Betel Leaf Hospitality: Offering a betel leaf is an oath of hospitality. Refusing is a grave insult. Accepting binds both parties to non-violence for the duration of the visit. Breaking this oath marks 1 Corruption and begins a River's Grudge [4] clock. When the clock fills, a nat appears and demands an equal price (1 Harm, a memory, or a public apology).
- Astrologer's Ledger (Player Resource): A character who earns the astrologer's trust (or steals his notes) may carry a copy of his ledger. The ledger has 3 pages. Each page can be used to:
 - Predict the Monsoon: Once per journey, ask the GM if the weather will turn against you in the next leg. The GM answers truthfully (yes/no).
 - Forge a Schedule: Once per session, treat a failed navigation roll as a success, but add 1 tick to Debt to the Rain (the astrologer will notice the forgery eventually).
 - Blackmail an Official: Gain +1 Position on social rolls against any Ayokha official who relies on the monsoon schedule (harbor masters, customs officers, grain factors). Using this burns the page.

Refilling the ledger requires a downtime action and a bribe to the astrologer (1 Boon or a story worth a season's gossip).

- The Ninth Terrace (Forbidden Zone, Mechanic): The terrace is flooded only once every nine years. The rice grown there is for the God-King alone – eating it is treason. But the rice is also the only thing that can cure the monsoon blight (a crop disease that ticks the Monsoon Clock by 2 each day). Entering the Ninth Terrace requires a Water-Key (a coral token, acquired from the astrologer or a nat). The terrace is guarded by Hungry Ghosts – the spirits of farmers who starved when the monsoon failed. They attack anyone whose Debt to the Rain clock is 4 or higher. Harvesting the rice takes 3 actions. Each action triggers a ghost attack (Resolve test DV 4 or take 1 Fatigue). Success yields a Ninth Terrace Rice grain (see Diamonds).
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Rain That Waits – Ikasha. She Who Sleeps beneath the flood; her dream is the monsoon's hesitation.
 - The Unbroken Cord – Inaea. The river's memory woven into silk; every oath is a knot.
 - The Drowned King – Khemesh. Pressure from the deep; the ninth wave is his breath.
 - The Green Lamp – The Witness. The Vigil's flame; it flickers when a lie enters the ledger.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Kalrantha Fragment (Malachai, the Chained Angel): A silver coin that never spends was found floating in the Monsoon’s Eye. The astrologer keeps it in a jar of brine. It whispers to him at night — promises of perfect predictions, of rains that never fail. The coin’s warmth spreads through the palace like a fever.
- The Drowned Courier (The Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire): A Breath-less agent drowned in the river last monsoon, but her ghost still carries messages. She appears at midnight on the Bridge of Three Echoes, offering to deliver secrets to the dead. The price is a memory of living sunlight.
- The Root That Drinks (The Bitter Root): A Daughter of the Cord has taken refuge in the well of the Drowned Nat. She claims the spirit is not a nat but a Hollowed — one of the High Mother’s own, lost when a witness cord was cut. She asks the party to help her re-tie the cord before the monsoon fails.
- The Ninth Terrace’s Debt (Ukwe – Sekogo): The forbidden rice of the Ninth Terrace is said to be grown from seeds stolen from the Ukwe’s roots. The Green Council demands its return, but the God-King refuses. A Sekogo druid offers the party a way to steal the rice without angering the spirits — if they also bring back a vial of water from the Monsoon’s Eye.

Ayokha Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the River: Crumble a crust into the current. Ignore the first River Floods penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Cord: Tie a single knot in a witness cord before using it. Cancel Witness Cord Cut or take –1 die on your next oath. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Well: Whisper a dead Vigil’s name into the well. Gain +1 Effect when witnessing an oath, but mark Obligation to the Monsoon Spirit. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

- Ayokha (Spirit Law): A nat laughs from the well, an offering steams, the Vigil's lamp burns blue.
- Ayokha (Rice & Silk): A terrace floods for no reason, a silk bale weeps water, the bell rings twice.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Navigation): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Monsoon Swell.
- Cut the Cord (Presence + Lore): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a witness cord is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Flood (Resolve + Survival): On a hit in River Floods, you pick who keeps their boat; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Monsoon & Debt)

- The Rain-Eater (Nine Dried Fields) — Phases: Wells Sinking → Orchestrated Drought → Terrace Coup. Cracks: find a hidden spring, expose a false monsoon schedule, survive a night on the Ninth Terrace.
- The Drowned Vigil (Cord of the River) — Phases: Broken Oaths → Procession of Empty Barges → Flood-Baptism of a Merchant. Cracks: relic witness cord, survivor testimony, the bell ringer refusing to strike.

Patronage & Power

In Ayokha, power flows through the monsoon, the river, and the weight of a witnessed oath. The God-King rules from his floating palace, but the astrologer sets the calendar, the Lethai-ar hold the ledgers, and the spirit-mediums speak for the nats. No one rules alone — and everyone owes a debt to the rain.

For the GM: Use the Monsoon Clock as a visible campaign timer — it ticks down to famine or flood. Let River Court Justice be a high-stakes social encounter where a single lie can drown a judge. Enforce Betel Leaf Hospitality as a binding ritual — breaking it invites the Hollow and advances the River’s Grudge clock. Offer Diamonds as monsoon schedules, silk vouchers, and witness cords — each a tool to survive the next storm or the next audit. Track Debt to the Rain as the region’s central pressure; the party’s actions can reduce it (by performing rites or paying sacrifices) or increase it (by breaking oaths or ignoring nats). The God-King’s astrologer is a potential ally, but his ledgers are for sale to the highest bidder.

The new generator tables — Monsoon-Spirit Negotiation, Nat Encounters, Rice Terrace Hazards, and Monsoon Omens — add depth to supernatural encounters and environmental storytelling, drawing inspiration from Southeast Asian mythologies of river spirits, naga serpents, and the sacred balance of rain and rice.

Chapter 36

Aelaerem of the Eastern Realms

The Hollow's Neighbors.

My grandmother taught me that the Hollow is not evil. It is a forgetfulness. It forgets where the boundary lies, forgets that we are not food, forgets that it was once something else. So we remind it. With a thread, a bell, a bowl of salt. We are its memory.

I am a Thread-Binder. I tied a red thread around my wrist this morning. The Hollow walked past my door last night. It saw the thread. It kept walking. That is the bargain. I give it a boundary. It respects the boundary. Mostly. But last week it forgot the thread's colour. I had to tie two.

The Aelaerem of the eastern realms have adapted their hedge-magic to thresholds of a different kind: bamboo groves that whisper in the dark, temple stairs that count your heartbeats, and the silence after a storm bell that has no clapper. Here, the Hollow wears the face of the uncanny — not hunger, but absence. It is the space between two bamboo stalks, the step that is always missing, the name you cannot quite remember.

They survive through ritual precision: a red thread tied at a crossroads with exactly eight knots, a bowl of rice left at dusk and never checked until dawn, a single bell rung once and then muffled with a cloth that has been washed in salt water. They whisper that the Hollow is the shadow of Kuva, cast when the first sun turned away, and that it wanders the world looking for the name it forgot.

Unlike western Aelaerem, who live in close-knit villages, the Eastern Aelaerem are often solitary or live in small family groups—yamabushi of the boundary, shrine hermits of the between. They are the ones who know where the veil is thinnest, and they are the ones paid to keep it closed. Their magic is humble: a knot to bind a promise, a thread to guide a lost ghost, a cup of sake to buy a night's silence.

Never count the steps between your door and the crossroads. The Hollow counts with you. If you reach nine, it will be waiting at the ninth step. It will ask, "Where are you going?" Do not answer.

— Hedge-Keeper Mila, who has never slept indoors

Theme & Atmosphere

What you notice first: Red threads tied to every gate, every bridge, every well. The smell of burnt rice and old salt. The way the Aelaerem never whistle after dusk—the Hollow thinks you are calling it. And the way they never, ever count to nine.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never count the steps between your door and the crossroads. The Hollow counts with you. If you reach nine, it will be waiting at the ninth step. It will ask, "Where are you going?" Do not answer.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Unspoken

Power here is measured in red threads tied, offerings left, and the gaps between words. The Aelaerem have no leaders, no courts, no written laws. Each hedge-keeper knows her own stretch of boundary. She knows where the Hollow walks, when it is restless, and what gesture will turn it aside. Her authority is not given by any king — it is earned by surviving the uncanny. The Aelaerem are not feared or respected; they are tolerated, because without them the Hollow would seep into every threshold. They are the neighbours of the thing that lives between the notes of a song.

Starting Location

A crossroads at dusk, where a red thread is tied around a wooden post. An old Aelaerem woman is pouring a cup of sake onto the ground. She looks up: "The Hollow walked last night. I left salt. It took the salt. It left a single red thread tied around my wrist. It moved. Sleep with that knot, and it will know where you are. Do you want to know where it went? It went toward your camp."

The Almanac of Ordinary Days (Eastern Aelaerem)

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Rice porridge with pickled vegetables—the rice is from the paddies, the vegetables are salted in clay pots buried at the boundary. The salt is blessed by the hedge-keeper. The vegetables are always a little bitter. The bitterness is a reminder.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To tie the eight boundary knots. The ninth knot is never tied—it is left loose for the Hollow to find. If a child ties the ninth knot, the Hollow will visit that night and ask for a name. The child's name.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their shadow. A stranger whose shadow is too short has been touched by the Hollow. A stranger whose shadow moves independently is already lost. A stranger with no shadow is the Hollow itself, wearing a borrowed face. Do not invite them in.

What is the most common crime? Thread-theft—stealing a red thread from a boundary marker. The thread is not valuable, but cutting it breaks a promise. The Hollow becomes restless. The thief is marked: their shadow will shrink one inch each night until they return the thread.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Hollow is not a single thing. It is a place—the space between heartbeats, the pause before a sneeze, the silence after a bell. The Aelaerem do not guard against a monster. They guard against the gaps.

Where do people go when they die? To the salt. The dead are cremated, and their ashes are mixed with salt and scattered along the boundary. The salt draws the Hollow's attention away from the living. The dead become the new boundary. They do not rest. They watch.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You leave a cup of sake and a lock of hair at the place where the wrong was done. The Hollow will witness. If the sake is gone by dawn and the hair is untouched, you are forgiven. If the hair is gone, the Hollow has taken your apology as a promise. You are now bound. Do not break that promise.

What is the most important festival? The Retting of the Threads (spring). All red threads on the boundary are taken down, washed in salt water, and re-tied. The village is silent for one night—no bells, no songs, no whispers. The Hollow listens. The Hollow remembers. If a thread is tied wrong, the Hollow will correct it. The correction is always a death.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The first red thread was not tied by an Aelaerem. It was tied by the Hollow itself, before it forgot what it was. The thread is still there, at the First Boundary. If it is untied, the Hollow will remember its true name. Then it will stop being hungry. It will become something else. No one knows what.

36.1 Aelaerem (Eastern) — “The Hollow’s Neighbors”

Hedge-Keeper (Elite): “My grandmother taught me that the Hollow is not evil. It is a forgetfulness. It forgets where the boundary lies, forgets that we are not food, forgets that it was once something else. So we remind it. With a thread, a bell, a bowl of salt. We are its memory.”

Thread-Binder (Commoner): “I tied a red thread around my wrist this morning. The Hollow walked past my door last night. It saw the thread. It kept walking. That is the bargain. I give it a boundary. It respects the boundary. Mostly. But last week it forgot the thread’s colour. I had to tie two.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Aelaerem of the eastern realms have adapted their hedge-magic to thresholds of a different kind: bamboo groves that whisper in the dark, temple stairs that count your heartbeats, and the silence after a storm bell that has no clapper. Here, the Hollow wears the face of the uncanny — not hunger, but absence. It is the space between two bamboo stalks, the step that is always missing, the name you cannot quite remember.

They survive through ritual precision: a red thread tied at a crossroads with exactly eight knots, a bowl of rice left at dusk and never checked until dawn, a single bell rung once and then muffled with a cloth that has been washed in salt water. They whisper that the Hollow is the shadow of Kuva, cast when the first sun turned away, and that it wanders the world looking for the name it forgot. Unlike western Aelaerem, who live in close-knit villages, the Eastern Aelaerem are often solitary or live in small family groups—yamabushi of the boundary, shrine hermits of the between. They are the ones who know where the veil is thinnest, and they are the ones paid to keep it closed. Their magic is humble: a knot to bind a promise, a thread to guide a lost ghost, a cup of sake to buy a night’s silence.

What you notice first: Red threads tied to every gate, every bridge, every well. The smell of burnt rice and old salt. The way the Aelaerem never whistle after dusk—the Hollow thinks you are calling it. And the way they never, ever count to nine.

Names of the Eastern Aelaerem

Inspired by the rural traditions of the eastern islands and coast: short, earthy, often with repeated syllables. Surnames denote a boundary, a thread, or a shrine.

First Names (Male)	First Names (Female)	Clan/Epithet	Thread-Name
Taro	Mila	Hedge-kin	the Uncrossed
Ren	Yuki	Thread-born	Ninth Knot
Kai	Rin	Bell-muffler	the Silent

Sho	Nami	Offering-hand	Boundary-Keeper
Jiro	Hana	Root-walker	the Still

(Crossroads/Threshold/Well) A crossroads with a red thread tied around a post; a threshold with a missing ninth step; a well with a bowl of rice at its base and a bell on a frayed rope.

Spades — Places (Eastern)

2. Crossroads of the Red Thread [BOUNDARY] [OMEN]
A wooden post at a meeting of three paths, wrapped in red cord.
The thread is retied each new moon. The Hollow cannot cross a fresh knot—but it can wait.
3. Threshold of the Missing Step [THRESHOLD] [TRAP]
A doorway with eight steps leading up. The ninth is absent.
The gap is a handspan wide. Step over it. Do not step in it. The Hollow is below, counting.
4. Offering Well [RITUAL] [DEBT]
A stone well where rice and salt are left at dusk.
The offerings are gone by dawn. The Hollow takes them. Sometimes it leaves a thread—or a finger bone.
5. Boundary Stone [BOUNDARY] [COLD]
A moss-covered rock that marks where the Hollow’s territory begins.
The stone is warm on one side and cold on the other. The cold side is the Hollow’s. Touch it, and you will dream of forgetfulness.
6. Hedge-Keeper’s Hut [REFUGE] [LIMINAL]
A small shelter built exactly on the boundary line.
The door faces both ways. Inside, the floor is split—one half is safe, one half is not. Guests sleep on the safe half. The hedge-keeper sleeps on the line.
7. Thread-Binder’s Stall [TRADE] [WARD]
A cart where red thread is sold by the knot.
The thread is dyed with hibiscus and iron filings. The Hollow is repelled by iron—but the hibiscus attracts it. The balance is careful.
8. Bell-Muffler’s Shrine [RITUAL] [SILENCE]
A small stone shrine with a copper bell on a rope.
The bell is rung once at dusk, then muffled with a leather strap soaked in salt water. The Hollow hears the ring but not the silence. The silence is the boundary.
9. Rice Paddy of the Uncut Stalk [HARVEST] [OMEN]
A field where one stalk is never cut.
The uncut stalk is an offering. The Hollow takes one grain each night. When the stalk is bare, the Hollow will walk through the paddy. No one sleeps that night.
10. Oath-Keeper’s Path [DEATH] [CURSE]
A straight line of bare earth through the grass, seen only at dawn.
The path was walked by an Oath-Keeper. Follow it, and you will find what it was collecting—or it will find you.
- J The Hollow’s Door (Seasonal) [THRESHOLD] [DANGER]
A crack in a hillside that appears only on the new moon.

The crack is warm. It smells of old salt and forgotten names. Do not enter. If you do, leave a thread behind you. You may need it to find your way out.

Q The Ninth Cup's Altar [RITUAL] [TABOO]

A stone table with eight cups. The ninth spot is empty.

The ninth cup is for the Hollow. If you pour it, you must drink with it—or the Hollow will drink from your shadow.

K Thread Tree [OMEN] [MEMORY]

An old pine covered in red threads, each tied by a different hand.

The threads are promises to the Hollow. Untie one, and the Hollow will remember the promise as broken. The tree will weep sap. The sap is salt.

A The First Boundary (Myth) [MYTH] [PERMANENT]

Where the first Aelaerem tied the first red thread—or where the Hollow tied it for them.

The thread is still there. It has never been retied. It is older than memory. It is beginning to fray.

(Keeper/Binder/Muffler) Hedge-Keeper Mila with a red thread around her wrist and a pouch of salt; Thread-Binder Yuki with a spindle of red thread that hums; Bell-Muffler Rin with earplugs of wax and salt.

Hearts — People & Factions (Eastern)

2. Hedge-Keeper [AUTHORITY] [KNOWLEDGE]

Old, grey-haired, a red thread tied around her left wrist. She never enters a house.

"The Hollow watches the thresholds," she says. "I sleep where it cannot see—on the boundary line, where it can see everything. The seeing is the ward."

3. Thread-Binder [CRAFT] [RITUAL]

A young woman with a spindle of red thread. She ties knots at crossroads.

"A fresh knot each new moon," she says. "The Hollow respects the new thread. For a while. Then the thread forgets, and we tie again."

4. Offering-Keeper [SACRIFICE] [HUNGER]

A man with a bowl of rice and a pouch of salt. He leaves them at dusk.

"The Hollow is forgetful," he says. "Feed it salt, and it remembers the boundary. Feed it rice, and it forgets to be hungry. Feed it nothing, and it remembers you."

5. Bell-Muffler [RITUAL] [SILENCE]

A woman with wax earplugs and a copper bell on a rope. She rings it at dusk, then muffles it.

"The Hollow hears the ring. It knows we are watching. The silence is the boundary. If I forget to muffle it, the Hollow will hear the silence as an invitation."

6. Oath-Keeper (Visible) [SPIRIT] [DEBT]

A tall shadow with too many fingers. It walks the path at midnight.

It does not speak. It points. The direction is where a debt is owed. If it points at you, you have until dawn to pay.

7. Thread-Cutter (Exile) [EXILE] [CURSE]

A man who cut a red thread. He is marked by the Hollow.

His shadow is missing. The Hollow took it. He follows his shadow's memory. He will never find it.

8. Rice Farmer (Boundary-Knower) [HARVEST] [KNOWLEDGE]

A woman who leaves one stalk uncut each harvest.

“The Hollow takes one grain a night,” she says. “When the stalk is bare, I move my family to the other side of the paddy. The Hollow follows the stalk, not us.”

9. Hollow-Watcher Child [OMEN] [PERCEPTION]

A boy who can see the Hollow when it walks. He points.

He never speaks. He only points. The adults throw salt where he points. The salt does not stop the Hollow—it just reminds it of the boundary.

10. Boundary Breaker (Desperate) [DESPERATION] [DEBT]

A traveller who crossed the boundary without an offering.

The Hollow followed him. He asks the Aelaerem for help. The price is a story—a true story, one that ends with a promise kept.

J The First Hedge-Keeper (Ghost) [GHOST] [MYTH]

A translucent figure tying a thread at the mythic boundary.

She asks: “Is the thread still there?” If you say yes, she smiles. If you say no, she weeps. Her tears are salt.

Q The Hollow’s Voice [SPIRIT] [OMEN]

A whisper from the crack in the hillside. It speaks in counting rhymes.

“One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight,” it says. Then it stops. It never says nine. It is waiting for someone else to say it.

K The Thread Tree’s Keeper [MEMORY] [AUTHORITY]

An old woman who tends the pine. She knows every thread’s story.

“This thread was tied by a mother who lost her child,” she says. “The Hollow did not take the child. It took the thread. The child is still alive, somewhere, on the other side of the boundary.”

A Kuva’s Shadow (The Hollow Itself) [SPIRIT] [CURSE]

A vast darkness that covers the boundary at midnight.

It asks: “Who tied the first thread?” The answer is a name no one remembers. If you guess, it will know you are lying. If you stay silent, it will wait.

(Ashes/Cut/Step) Ash from a burnt offering—the Hollow has been fed; a cut red thread—the boundary is broken; a missing step—the Hollow has crossed.

Clubs — Complications/Threats (Eastern)

2. Cut Red Thread [BOUNDARY] [VIOLATION]

Someone cut a boundary thread. The Hollow crosses. The village is at risk.

The cutter is a stranger who did not know. Ignorance is not a defence. The Hollow demands a new thread—tied with a drop of the cutter’s blood.

3. Hollow Walks (Debt Called) [DEBT] [SPIRIT]

An Oath-Keeper appears at the crossroads. It points at a party member.

The member owes a debt. The debt is forgotten. The Hollow remembers. Pay in story, memory, or a name you have never spoken.

4. Missing Offering [RITUAL] [HUNGER]

The offering bowl is empty at dawn. The Hollow took it and left a mark.

The mark is a single red thread tied around the bowl in a knot that has no end. The Hollow wants more. It will return tomorrow.

5. Bell Not Muffled [RITUAL] [ALERT]

Someone rings a bell at dusk and does not silence it. The Hollow hears.

The Hollow follows the sound. It will arrive at midnight. Muffle the bell before then—or ring it nine times, and the Hollow will think you are inviting it to count.

6. Ninth Step Taken [TABOO] [TRAP]

A traveller counts the steps to a threshold and reaches nine. The Hollow appears.

The Hollow asks: “Who counted?” The traveller points at the party. The party must answer. The correct answer is silence.

7. Ninth Cup Poured [TABOO] [DEBT]

A stranger pours the ninth cup at a hedge-keeper’s table. The Hollow drinks.

The Hollow is now a guest. It will not leave until it is offered a story. The story must be true. If the story is sad, the Hollow will weep salt. If the story is happy, the Hollow will forget it by morning.

8. Thread Tree Burned [DESTRUCTION] [CURSE]

Someone sets fire to the pine. The threads burn. The promises are broken.

The Hollow is furious. It will walk every boundary. The Aelaerem cannot stop it alone. The party must help re-tie each thread from memory—or the Hollow will take one memory from each villager.

9. Boundary Stone Moved [BOUNDARY] [SHIFT]

A traveller moves the moss-covered rock. The boundary shifts.

The Hollow now owns a new stretch of land. The village must negotiate. The negotiator is the party. The Hollow’s price is always a promise. Do not promise what you cannot keep.

10. Oath-Keeper’s Path Crossed [CURSE] [DEBT]

The party camps on the straight line of bare earth. The Hollow comes.

It asks: “Why are you on my path?” The answer must be a promise. Break it, and you become an Oath-Keeper—a shadow that walks the path forever, collecting debts.

J Hollow’s Door Opens [THRESHOLD] [DANGER]

The crack in the hillside widens. Cold air pours out.

The Hollow invites the party inside. The invitation is a test. Refuse, and the Hollow is offended. Accept, and you may not return—or you may return with a memory you did not have before.

Q Thread-Cutter’s Shadow Returns [SPIRIT] [DEBT]

The exile’s shadow appears at the boundary. It is looking for him.

The shadow asks: “Where is my body?” The body is the exile. He is hiding. Do not tell. The shadow will offer a bargain: a year of safety in exchange for the exile’s name.

K First Thread Untied [MYTH] [CURSE]

Someone unties the mythic thread at the First Boundary. The Hollow is free.

The Hollow spreads across the land. The Aelaerem have one day to re-tie the thread. The party must help. The thread must be tied with a hair from each villager. One hair. One knot. The ninth knot is the Hollow’s.

A Kuva’s Shadow Falls [CURSE] [DARKNESS]

The Hollow covers the sun. Day becomes night. The boundary is invisible.

The Hollow asks every person: “What is your name?” Answer, and it knows you. Refuse, and it takes your shadow. The only defence is to speak a name that is not yours—a name you borrowed, a name you forgot, a name that belongs to the dead.

(Thread/Cup/Stone) Red thread bundle (one safe crossing); Hollow cup (proof of a debt paid in memory); offering plate (right to camp in a dangerous spot).

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage (Eastern)

2. Red Thread Bundle [WARD] [ONCE]
A bundle of red-dyed thread. Tie it at a crossroads to mark a safe boundary for one night.
The thread glows faintly at dusk. The Hollow will not cross—but it will wait until dawn.
3. Hollow Cup (Clay) [PROOF] [DEBT]
A clay cup that has been used for a Hollow offering. Present it to prove a debt was paid.
The cup is warm. It smells of old salt and forgotten names. The Hollow will recognise it—and it will remember the debt as settled.
4. Offering Plate (Wooden) [REFUGE] [ONCE]
A wooden plate used for rice offerings. Camp anywhere on the boundary for one night.
The plate is carved with eight circles. The ninth is missing. Place it on the ground, and the Hollow will see the offering, not you.
5. Thread-Binder’s Spindle (Iron) [WARD] [ONGOING]
A spindle of red thread that never runs out—but grows shorter each year. Tie an unbreakable boundary.
The thread is cold. It will not burn. The Hollow cannot cross it. Use once per session. Each use shortens the spindle by one handspan. When it reaches the ninth handspan, it will break.
6. Bell-Muffler’s Strap (Leather) [SILENCE] [ONCE]
A leather strap soaked in salt water. Muffle any bell to hide its sound from the Hollow.
The strap is stiff with salt. The Hollow cannot hear a bell muffled by it—but it can smell the salt. It will know someone is nearby.
7. Boundary Stone Fragment [SENSE] [ONGOING]
A chip of the moss-covered rock. Touch it to sense the nearest boundary line.
The fragment is cold on one side. The cold side points to the Hollow. The warm side points to safety. The warmth fades each time you use it.
8. Oath-Keeper’s Finger (Bone) [SUMMON] [ONCE]
A dried finger bone from an Oath-Keeper. Use it to call an Oath-Keeper once.
The Oath-Keeper will collect one debt for you. Then it will ask for yours. The finger bone will turn to dust.
9. Hedge-Keeper’s Salt Pouch [BANISH] [ONCE]
A leather pouch of salt blessed by a hedge-keeper. Throw it to banish an Oath-Keeper for one scene.
The salt is bitter. The Oath-Keeper will taste it. It will remember your face. It will not forget.
10. Ninth Cup’s Altar Shard [NEGOTIATION] [ONCE]
A piece of the stone altar. Pour a cup of sake on it to summon the Hollow for negotiation.
The Hollow will come. It will listen. It will not attack—unless you lie. If you lie, it will take your voice.
- J Thread Tree Branch [WARD] [PERMANENT]
A branch from the pine, still covered in red threads. Plant it to create a new boundary.
The branch will grow. The threads will remain. The Hollow will respect the new tree—for a generation. Then the threads will fade, and the tree will need new ones.
- Q First Hedge-Keeper’s Thread (Fragment) [PERMANENT] [ONCE]

A piece of the mythic first thread. Touch it to any boundary to make it permanent.

The thread is old. It crumbles after use. The boundary will last a century—or until the Hollow forgets it is there.

K The Hollow's Name (Whisper) [COMMAND] [ONCE]

A single word: the name the Hollow had before it became forgetful.

Speak it, and the Hollow will stop for one minute. Then it will remember why it is hungry. Use once. It will not work a second time.

A Kuva's Shadow (Glass Shard) [FORGET] [ONCE]

A piece of green glass that contains a fragment of the Hollow's original form.

Once, touch it to make the Hollow forget a debt. The shard will shatter. The Hollow will not forget who broke it. It will remember your face forever.

Quick use notes (Eastern)

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (threads, cups, plates) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo boundary-omens—a red thread that ties itself, a cup that pours without a hand, a step that counts itself, a shadow that points.

Additional Features (Eastern Cultural Mechanics)

- The Empty Cup (Eastern): Once per journey, when you are lost or pursued, you may pour a cup of sake or water onto the ground and whisper a name that is not yours. The Hollow will lead you away from danger—but you will forget one minor memory (the GM chooses a trivial fact; if you have no minor memories, advance the Hollow Attention clock [4]). The forgotten memory can be recovered by returning to the same spot and speaking your own name.
- Neighbor's Courtesy (Eastern): When camping, if you leave a small offering (rice, salt, a button) at the edge of the light, the night's travel hazard roll is made with Advantage (roll twice, take the less severe). If you forget three nights in a row, the Hollow begins to watch. Start a Hollow Attention clock [4].
- Kuva's Eavesdrop (Eastern): Once per night, if you sleep under open sky, you may ask one yes/no question about the next day's weather; the GM answers truthfully, but the question must be whispered to the wind. On a 1, the wind answers but the Hollow also hears. The Hollow will remember the question.
- Red Thread Binding (Eastern): You may tie a red thread around an object or a threshold to ward against minor spirits (Cap 1) for one scene. If the thread is cut, the spirits notice—start a Spirit Attention clock [4]. If the thread is tied with exactly eight knots, the ward lasts until dawn.
- The Unspoken Step (Eastern): When crossing a threshold, you may choose to take only eight steps. The ninth step is a gap. The Hollow cannot cross a gap it cannot count. If you take nine steps, the Hollow will follow. This is not a superstition. It is a fact.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks — Eastern)

- Red Threads and the Lethai-ar (Crimson Valley): Lethai-ar witness cords are sometimes dyed with the same hibiscus and iron as Aelaerem boundary threads. A witness cord tied with Aelaerem red thread is considered unbreakable—but the Hollow will watch the witness.
- The Hollow’s Name and the Breath-less (Ashaan): The name of the Hollow is said to be a forgotten aspect of Ikasha—the part of her that did not fall asleep. Breath-less agents sometimes whisper the name to distract Oath-Keepers. The Hollow does not appreciate being used as a tool.
- Boundary Stones and the Mountain Satrapies (Dhahara): Aeler engineers have tried to replicate Aelaerem boundary stones using breath-bonds. The attempt failed; the mountain does not recognise iron. The Hollow, however, is very interested in the attempt.
- The Ninth Cup and the Tulkani (Way of Silk): Tulkani caravans never pour a ninth cup even when not in Aelaerem territory. The custom spread from the hedge-keepers. A Tulkani who pours a ninth cup is exiled—not by the caravan, but by the road. The road will forget them.
- The Hollow’s Hunger and the Savage Heart (The Wilds): In the deep wilderness, the Hollow is sometimes conflated with the Red Maw—a bear-spirit of endless appetite. Aelaerem hedge-keepers leave offerings of raw meat at the boundary during winter, when the Hollow is said to wear fur. The meat is always salted. The Hollow prefers salt.

Eastern Aelaerem Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Boundary: Crumble a crust at the base of a boundary stone. Ignore the first Cut Red Thread penalty.
- Knot the Thread: Tie a single knot in a red thread at a crossroads. Cancel Ninth Step Taken or take –1 die on your next stealth roll (your choice).
- Name to the Hollow: Whisper a dead hedge-keeper’s name into the empty cup. Gain +1 Effect when negotiating with the Hollow this scene, but mark Obligation to Kuva.
- Salt to the Shadow: Throw a pinch of salt over your shoulder at dusk. The next time the Hollow walks, it will hesitate for one exchange. The salt must be from a hedge-keeper’s pouch. Any other salt will attract it.

Patronage & Power (Eastern)

Among the Aelaerem, power flows through threads, offerings, and the memory of the boundary. A Hedge-Keeper’s authority rests on how long she has kept the Hollow at bay—and how many offerings she has given. There are no kings, no councils, no written laws—only the boundary, and the knowledge of where it lies. And the Hollow, always listening.

For the GM: Power in Eastern Aelaerem society is measured in threads tied, offerings given, and boundaries maintained. Patronage often takes the form of red thread bundles, hollow cups, or offering plates—each tied to a specific crossroads, threshold, or debt. To emphasize the folk horror and ritual precision:

- Use The Empty Cup as a desperate escape tool, but with a real cost (forgotten memories, Hollow Attention).
- Enforce Neighbor’s Courtesy — offerings matter. A party that forgets to leave offerings will attract the Hollow. The Hollow is patient.

- Let Kuva's Eavesdrop be a useful divination, but with a risk of Hollow attention on a roll of 1. The Hollow listens to questions.
- Track Red Thread Binding as a temporary ward; cut threads have consequences. The consequences are always a visit.
- Introduce The Unspoken Step as a recurring tension—players must remember to count to eight, not nine. The GM can spend SB to have them forget.

In Eastern Aelaerem society, the boundary forgets nothing—and the Hollow remembers every thread, every cup, every step. The Hollow is not evil. It is forgetful. But it is learning to remember.

Chapter 37

Aelinnel of the Inland Sea

The Bell-Tenders.

The Hollow is not a place. It is a miscount. The ninth step that is never there, the ninth cup that is never poured, the ninth name that is never spoken. We do not fight the Hollow. We leave one empty chair, one unlit lamp, one uncounted stone. That is the price of sitting at the table.

I asked an Aelinnel bell-tender how she kept the tide-spirits from flooding her village. She tapped her temple. “I count them,” she said. “One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight. Then I stop. They know that if I ever count nine, I am not counting them.”

The Aelinnel of the East do not hide from the spirits — they coexist. Small spirits inhabit every rock, tree, and wave. The Aelinnel have learned to negotiate with them using copper bells, precise counting, and occasional offerings of pickled plums. They are the engineers of shrines, the builders of floating bridges, and the keepers of the bell-lines that keep tide-spirits from straying. Some say Kuva, the sky, taught them the first counting song, and that the Hollow is simply the space where the count fails.

Unlike their western kin, who lean toward the Gift of the Mind, the Eastern Aelinnel practice a folk mathematics that blends logic and superstition. They believe every spirit has a number-name — a frequency that can be rung out of a bell, a sequence of steps that can be walked, a knot that can be tied. To offend a spirit is to miscount.

Never count to nine aloud near a shrine. The spirits count with you. When you reach nine, they will ask: “What comes after nine?” The answer is always the Hollow.

— Bell-Warden Tumble, who writes letters on copper wax

Theme & Atmosphere

What you notice first: The sound of copper bells — not ringing in sequence, but chiming in overlapping waves. The way every bridge has a missing ninth plank. The smell of pickled plums and salt.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never count to nine aloud near a shrine. The spirits count with you. When you reach nine, they will ask: “What comes after nine?” The answer is always the Hollow.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Count

Power here is measured in bells rung, tides predicted, and the precision of a threshold. The Aelinnel have no kings or councils; their authority rests on the bell-wardens who maintain the shrines and the tide-counters who read the waves. A village that loses its bell-warden is a village that the tide-spirits will flood. A bridge without its ninth plank missing is a bridge that the Hollow will cross. The Aelinnel do not worship the spirits; they transact with them. An offering is not a prayer — it is a payment. A bell is not a musical instrument — it is a contract.

Starting Location

A floating shrine on the Inland Sea, where copper bells hang from every corner. A Bell-Warden rings a bell eight times, then stops: “The tide-spirit is restless. It wants a ninth bell. I will not give it. You — count the waves. Tell me how many break before the sun sets. If you miscount, the spirit will ask you for a story. Do not miscount.”

The Almanac of Ordinary Days (Aelinnel)

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Rice porridge with pickled plums — the plums are fermented in salt brine and stored in copper-lidded barrels. The brine is never poured out; it is passed down through generations. The oldest batch is said to be nine generations old. No one has tasted it.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count the eight safe numbers. Children are taught to count pebbles, footsteps, and bell-rings — but always to stop at eight. The ninth is never spoken. A child who says “nine” aloud is sent to sit by the missing plank of the bridge until they forget they ever said it.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their fingers. Aelinnel tide-counters often have only eight fingers — the ninth was a miscount they paid for. A stranger with nine fingers has never made a mistake. A stranger with seven has paid a heavy debt. A stranger with no fingers is either a spirit or someone who counted to nine and lost everything.

What is the most common crime? Bell-theft — but not for the copper. A stolen bell can be rung at the wrong time, creating a miscount. The thief is not punished by law; they are given to the tide-spirit whose count was broken. The spirit decides the price.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The First Bell was not cast by an Aelinnel. It was found — already ringing, already counting. No one knows who made it. No one knows why it rang. The shards are scattered across the Inland Sea. When the ninth shard is found, the First Bell will ring again. The Hollow will hear it.

Where do people go when they die? To the bell-line. The dead are not buried. Their ashes are mixed with copper dust and cast into new bells. The bells are hung on the bell-lines. When the tide-spirits ring them, the dead speak. Mostly they say: “Count carefully.”

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a count — a public recitation of the wrong, spoken in eights. “I took the offering. I broke the bell. I counted to nine.” Then you wait. If a spirit rings a bell eight times, you are forgiven. If it rings nine times, you are cursed. If no bell rings, the Hollow will visit you at midnight.

What is the most important festival? The Retuning of the Bells (autumn). Every bell on the Inland Sea is struck once, in sequence, from the highest tide to the lowest. The sound travels for miles. The spirits listen. If a bell is out of tune, the spirits will correct it by morning. The correction is always a death — but the bell will ring true for another year.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The ninth bell was never meant to be cast. It was a mistake — a foundry worker poured one bell too many. They tried to hide it, but it rang once on its own. The tone was the Hollow’s name. The bell still exists. It is buried under a shrine on a small island. No one knows which island. The map was miscounted.

Quick Reference

Tagline: Count to eight. Stop. The ninth is for the Hollow.

Bell-Warden of the Seventh Tide (Elite): “The Hollow is not a place. It is a miscount. The ninth step that is never there, the ninth cup that is never poured, the ninth name that is never spoken. We do not fight the Hollow. We leave one empty chair, one unlit lamp, one uncounted stone. That is the price of sitting at the table.”

Tide-Counter (Commoner): “I asked an Aelinnel bell-tender how she kept the tide-spirits from flooding her village. She tapped her temple. ‘I count them,’ she said. ‘One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight. Then I stop. They know that if I ever count nine, I am not counting them.’”

Genre / Mood: Folk mathematics, coastal spirit-bargaining, horror of the miscount.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (charters, beads, stones) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo bell-omens—a bell that rings without being struck, a missing plank that appears, a count that reaches nine and stops.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Bell-Tending: Once per scene, when near a shrine or threshold, you may ring a copper bell. The next environmental hazard (tide, fog, landslide) is delayed by 1 segment of the relevant clock. The bell’s tone also pacifies minor spirits (Cap 1) for the scene.
- Fae Courtesy: An Aelinnel never says “no” to a spirit. They say “that road is closed for repairs” or “the season is not right.” This phrasing cancels the first Story Beat generated by a spirit encounter. If forced to refuse outright, they mark 1 Fatigue (the spirit’s disappointment is heavy).
- Kuva’s Count: Once per journey, a character may roll Wits + Lore (DV 3) to recall a forgotten sky-omen; on success, the next travel leg ignores the first Club card drawn. On a miss, the omen is true, but the GM draws an additional Club for that leg.
- The Ninth Step: When you cross a threshold that has a missing ninth step (a stair, a bridge, a door), you may count the absence. Gain +1 die to resist the Hollow’s attention for the scene, but mark 1 Obligation (the Hollow now knows your name).
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Unrung — The Witness. A bell that never rings, yet remembers every promise.
 - The Counter — Mykkiel. The divine arithmetician; a miscount is a sin.
 - The Ninth Wave — Khemesh. The pressure beneath the tide; the hunger that waits after eight.

- Kuva’s Echo — The Traveler. The sky-road and the counting song that guides lost ships.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Bitter Root: Daughters of the Cord sometimes serve as bell-wardens, using the Hollow’s attention to collect debts. A renegade Sister hides in a floating shrine, trying to untie her cord from a tide-spirit’s bargain.
- Malachai, the Chained Angel: A silver coin that never spends appears in offering boxes. Take it, and the spirits will accept any gift — but the coin will reappear in the mouth of a drowned sailor.
- The Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire: Aelinnel psions are called “Echo-Readers.” They hear the count of waves in their dreams and can predict a miscount three tides before it happens.
- The Threshold Compendium: The Ninth Bell is a Class III Procession – the sound of the bell walks the Inland Sea once a year, and those who hear it must answer a riddle or join the march.
- The Ninth: In any Aelinnel scene, the ninth bell rung in an hour opens a threshold. The wise stop at eight. Those who ring the ninth see a grey figure standing on the water — waiting.

Regional Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Bell: Crumble a crust at the base of a shrine bell. Ignore the first Bell-Line Breaks penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Rope: Tie a single knot in a bell-line rope. Cancel Miscount or take –1 die on your next spirit negotiation (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Wave: Whisper a dead tide-counter’s name into the sea. Gain +1 Effect when counting waves this scene, but mark Obligation to Kuva. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from bell-wardens or tide-spirits.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby shrine builders or offering-keepers.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for spirits or the Hollow.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favourable tide.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Local Bell-Warden or tide-counter becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to fog or rising water.
- Foe Appears: An offended tide-spirit or Hollow agent arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional spirits, bell-wardens, or Hollow manifestations arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.
- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes—bell-line breaks/miscount called/ninth bell rings.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: Bell-Warden Tumble, Kuva’s Echo, or the Miscount’s Ghost intervenes.

- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice—omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Aelinnel (Bell Law): Bells ring in harmony, then stop; a missing plank glows; the count of waves becomes audible.
- Aelinnel (Spirit Law): A tide-spirit laughs, an offering steams, a copper bell tarnishes instantly.
- Aelinnel (Hollow Law): The ninth step appears, then vanishes; a whisper says “count again”; a shadow crosses the bridge.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Navigation): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Fog Bank.
- Cut the Bell (Presence + Lore): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a bell-charter is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Squall (Resolve + Survival): On a hit in Sudden Squall, you pick who keeps their footing; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Bell & Count)

- The Miscount-King (Nine Errors) — Phases: Bell-Lines Severed → Orchestrated Miscount → Shrine Coup. Cracks: re-tie a bell-line, expose a false count, survive a night at the forgotten bell.
- The Drowned Counter (Spirit of the Ninth Tide) — Phases: Waves Miscalculated → Procession of Empty Shrines → Bell-Baptism of a Warden. Cracks: relic tide-bead, survivor testimony, the ninth bell refusing to ring.

Patronage & Power

Among the Aelinnel, power flows through bells, counts, and the precision of a threshold. A Bell-Warden's authority rests on the number of shrines he tends; a Tide-Counter's on the accuracy of her predictions. There is no government, only the shared understanding that a miscount kills everyone.

For the GM: Power in Aelinnel society is measured in bells rung, offerings given, and miscounts avoided. Patronage often takes the form of bell-charters, tide-beads, or counting stones — each tied to a specific shrine, tide, or spirit. To emphasize the cultural mechanics:

- Use Bell-Tending as a hazard mitigation tool. Let players delay environmental clocks by ringing bells.
- Enforce Fae Courtesy — never say “no” to a spirit. Creative phrasing is rewarded.
- Let Kuva's Count be a journey-saving ability, but with a risk of additional complications.
- Track The Ninth Step as a source of Hollow Obligation. Each crossing of a threshold is a negotiation.

In Aelinnel society, the count forgets nothing — and the ninth bell is never rung.

Chapter 38

Lethai-al of Nihori

The Storm-Touched Wanderers.

We do not own the land. We walk it. The road is our shrine. The storm is our law. The sea does not forgive, but it does forget. If you can wait long enough, the waves will erase your debt. But we do not wait. We walk. From shrine to shrine, from storm to storm, we carry the names of the drowned. The road is a prayer. Every step is a syllable.

My grandmother drowned in the ninth wave. Her name became a tide-charm. I keep it in a pouch of oiled leather. When the storm grows angry, I whisper her name. The sea remembers her. It calms for a moment — long enough to breathe. We are wanderers. The road is our home. The dead travel with us.

The Lethai-al of Nihori once guarded a drowned kingdom — an archipelago that sank when a forbidden name was spoken. Their blood still carries the salt of that ancient catastrophe. Now they are wanderers in the oldest sense: masterless, landless, bound to no lord but fiercely bound to each other and to the storm spirits that swirl above the waves. They walk from shrine to shrine, from port to port, following the processional roads that circle the island.

They do not farm. They do not build. They carry everything they own on their backs or in wooden carts. Their duels are not to the death — they are to the first draw of blood, after which the loser must join the procession and carry the winner's burden for a season. Their courts are crossroads. Their temples are the road itself. The Eastern Ninth lives here: the Hollow does not hide under hills — it breathes in the salt foam. The ninth wave is never the largest; it is the one that remembers your name.

Never walk under a torii gate without making an offering. The gate is a threshold. The road on the other side is not the same road you left.

— Procession Elder Kenji, who has walked the circuit 99 times

Theme & Atmosphere

What you notice first: The smell of salt and incense. The way the Lethai-al never sit with their backs to the sea. The constant, low murmur of waves being predicted — not by instruments, but by the tilt of a head, the twitch of a finger. The worn wooden plaques hung from their belts, each carved with a dead ancestor's name.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never walk under a torii gate without making an offering. The gate is a threshold. The road on the other side is not the same road you left.

Regional Mood: The Processional Road

Power here is measured in shrines visited, storms survived, and the number of dead ancestors carried as tide-charms. The Lethai-al have no king, no courts, no written law. Their authority is personal and processional: a Procession Elder's word is law because she has walked the circuit more times than anyone else. Their guilds are not guilds — they are processional bands, each with its own rhythm, its own counting song, its own patron shrine. A band that walks too fast offends the spirits; one that walks too slow loses the tide. The Lethai-al do not believe in ownership of land; they believe in passage rights, storm oaths, and the memory of the drowned. Every crossroads is a court. Every storm is a messenger. Every sunrise is a departure.

Starting Location

A procession trail winding along the sea cliffs, marked by weathered torii gates and small stone shrines. A group of Lethai-al walk in single file, chanting a counting song. One carries a palanquin with a covered object — a tide-charm shrine. The leader stops: "You stand on the processional road. The drowned are watching from the waves. Do you walk with us? If so, you must carry nothing. The road provides. The road takes away."

The Almanac of Ordinary Days (Lethai-al)

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Dried fish and rice balls — the fish is smoked over driftwood fires, the rice is pressed into shapes that fit in a pouch. The food is always cold. The Lethai-al do not stop to cook. The road does not wait.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count the nine waves. Children are taught to watch the sea and count: one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight — then stop. The ninth wave is the spirit's wave. It counts you. If you count it, you owe it.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their feet. A Lethai-al who has walked the circuit for many years has calloused soles cracked like dry earth. A stranger with soft feet has not walked far. A stranger with no feet is a ghost who lost the road.

What is the most common crime? Charm-theft — stealing a tide-charm from a sleeping traveller. The thief gains the dead ancestor's favour for one night. The ancestor wakes. The ancestor is angry. The punishment is to carry the victim's burden for the rest of the circuit. What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The drowned kingdom did not sink by accident. The forbidden name was spoken by a Lethai-al — a woman who lost her child to the sea. She wanted the sea to remember. It remembered too well. Her name is not spoken. Her tide-charm hangs in the Sunken Gate, still wet.

Where do people go when they die? Into the tide-charms. The dead are not buried. Their names are carved onto shells and placed in oiled leather pouches. The living carry them. The dead walk with the living. When the pouch is lost, the dead become the Hollow.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You walk a crossroads circuit — nine times around a crossroads shrine, counting your steps in eights. On the ninth circuit, you must speak the wrong aloud. If the wind carries your voice away, you are forgiven. If the wind throws it back, you are not. If the wind is silent, the Hollow is listening.

What is the most important festival? The Procession of the Ninth Wave (autumn). All Lethai-al bands walk to the shore at low tide. When the ninth wave crashes, they wade into the foam and whisper the names of those who drowned that year. The sea answers with a single wave. The wave is always the same height. The height is the number of names.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Ninth Wave Herald is not a child. She is the first drowned — the woman who spoke the forbidden name. She did not die. She became the ninth wave. She returns every year to point at the horizon. She is pointing at the day the sea will rise again. No one knows which day.

38.1 Lethai-al — “The Storm-Touched Wanderers of Nihori”

Quick Reference

Tagline: We do not own the land. We walk it. The road is our shrine. The storm is our law.

Procession Elder (Elite): “The sea does not forgive, but it does forget. If you can wait long enough, the waves will erase your debt. But we do not wait. We walk. From shrine to shrine, from storm to storm, we carry the names of the drowned. The road is a prayer. Every step is a syllable.”

Tide-Charm Keeper (Commoner): “My grandmother drowned in the ninth wave. Her name became a tide-charm. I keep it in a pouch of oiled leather. When the storm grows angry, I whisper her name. The sea remembers her. It calms for a moment — long enough to breathe. We are wanderers. The road is our home. The dead travel with us.”

Genre / Mood: Processional pilgrimage, wandering monks, duellists at crossroads, storm-folk.

The Lethai-al of Nihori once guarded a drowned kingdom — an archipelago that sank when a forbidden name was spoken. Their blood still carries the salt of that ancient catastrophe. Their carts are arranged in a circle, painted with wave patterns. A Procession Elder sits by a small fire, offering cups of sake to travellers who pause. “The road is long. The dead are many. Stay one night. Tell us a story. If we like it, we will carry it to the next shrine. If we do not, you will walk alone tomorrow.”

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).

- Diamonds are codified outcomes (charms, arrows, cups) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo processional omens—a gate that creaks without wind, a cart wheel that turns backward, a name that echoes from the sea.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Processional Circuit: The Lethai-al walk a circuit of 108 shrines. A character who walks the circuit (over several sessions) may, at the end, gain +1 die to all rolls involving storms, spirits, or the sea. The circuit takes nine months. A character who completes the circuit nine times becomes a Procession Elder.
- Walking Court (Crossroads Justice): When two Lethai-al dispute, they settle it at a crossroads. Each party speaks their truth once. Then they walk away in opposite directions. The road decides. A character who lies at a crossroads gains the condition Wave-Walker's Shame (-1 die to all social rolls until they walk the circuit again).
- Storm-Reading: Once per journey, a character with Lethai-al training may predict the weather for the next 24 hours (Wits + Survival vs. DV 3). On success, choose one leg to ignore weather penalties. On a miss, the storm finds you anyway, and the GM gains 1 Story Beat to spend on a thunderclap or flash flood.
- Tidal Resilience: Once per scene, when a character would take Harm from a water-based or storm-based effect, they may reduce it by 1 level (to a minimum of 0). Mark 1 Fatigue.
- The Eastern Ninth (Hollow in Salt Foam): When a Lethai-al drowns, their name becomes a tide-charm. Living kin may whisper it to calm a storm, but the Hollow will collect the debt at the next full moon. The Hollow's attention ticks whenever a tide-charm is used.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Tide-Charms and the Tulkani (Way of Silk): Tulkani story-tellers sometimes carry Lethai-al tide-charms as proof of a witnessed drowning. A charm can be traded for a story that the Tulkani have not heard. The story must be about the sea.
- Storm-Spirits and the Veiled Sisters (Ashaan): The Veiled Sisters have tried to bind storm-spirits for use in their fleet. The Lethai-al have foiled nine attempts. A Procession Elder may ask the party to sabotage a Sister's ritual.
- The Drowned Capital and the Kalrantha Amulet (Dhahara): The sunken city is said to contain a temple that holds a fragment of the demon Varash. The amulet's creator visited the capital before it sank. The fragment whispers the forbidden name.
- The Ninth Wave and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The Hollow's Oath-Keepers ride the ninth wave. Lethai-al who survive the ninth wave are said to owe the Hollow nothing. Aelaerem leave offerings of salt at the high tide line to appease the wave.

Lethai-al Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Foam: Crumble a crust at the water's edge. Ignore the first Pirate Flotilla penalty. '[SUPERSTITION]'
- Knot the Rope: Tie a single knot in a shrine climbing rope. Cancel Storm-Spirit Offended or take -1 die on your next sailing roll (your choice). '[SUPERSTITION]'

- Name to the Wave: Whisper a drowned ancestor’s name into the ninth wave. Gain +1 Effect when navigating a storm this scene, but mark Obligation to the Hollow. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Region-Specific SB Options

- Lethai-al (Processional Law): A torii gate creaks, a cart wheel turns backward, a name echoes from the sea.
- Lethai-al (Duel Law): Blades glow faintly, spilled sake steams, the first drop of blood evaporates.

- Lethai-al (Drowned Law): A name appears in wet sand, a wave carries a message, a drowned face looks up from still water.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Sail): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Storm Cover.
- Cut the Duel (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a sake cup is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Storm (Resolve + Survival): On a hit in Storm-Spirit Offended, you pick who is struck by lightning; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Wave & Procession)

- The Name-Eater (Nine Drownings) — Phases: Tide-Charms Stolen → Orchestrated Storm → Drowned Coup. Cracks: recover a stolen charm, expose a false ancestor, survive the ninth wave.
- The Unforgotten Storm (Spirit of the Ninth Wave) — Phases: Waves Rising → Procession of Empty Shrines → Foam-Baptism of a Storm-Reader. Cracks: relic storm-charm, survivor testimony, the ninth wave breaking on a calm sea.

Patronage & Power

Among the Lethai-al, power flows through the procession, the road, and the memory of the drowned. A Procession Elder's word is law because he has walked the circuit more than anyone else. A Tide-Charm Keeper holds the names of the dead; she can calm a storm or call one. There are no kings, no courts, no written laws — only the road, and the road does not negotiate.

For the GM: Power in Lethai-al society is measured in shrines visited, storms survived, and tide-charms kept. Patronage often takes the form of storm-charms, broken arrows, or processional passes — each tied to a specific ancestor, duel, or shrine. To emphasize the cultural mechanics:

- Use Processional Circuit as a long-term character goal. Completing it is a major achievement.
- Enforce Walking Court — a character who lies at a crossroads suffers social penalties until they make amends.
- Let Storm-Reading be a journey-saving ability, but with a risk of additional complications.
- Track the Hollow's Attention when tide-charms are used. The Oath-Keepers may appear at the worst moment.

In Lethai-al society, the sea forgets nothing — and the ninth wave remembers every name.

Chapter 39

Lethai-ar of Ayokha

The River-Bound Oath-Keepers.

A witness cord is not a leash. It is a mirror. If you speak truly, you see yourself. If you lie, you see what you could have been. I have cut two cords in my life. I still dream of the faces in the silk. The river remembers every word spoken on its banks. We are merely the scribes.

My lamp has burned for nine years without being refilled. The flame is green. It flickers when a merchant lies about the weight of his silk. The river does not need oil. It needs witnesses. I sit on this wharf and watch. That is my offering.

The Lethai-ar of Ayokha are the living bridges between mortals and the river spirits that launder the world's promises. Their ancestors were river-folk that ascended to the realm of the fair folk, and they now walk the middle path, a step between bodies of water and the world of men. They keep lanterns that never go out, record every contract spoken on the monsoon wharves, and bind their vows with silken cords dyed in river mud. Unlike their northern kin who swore to distant deities, the Lethai-ar serve Benzaiten (the river of words) or Inari (the fox's ledger). Their vows are physical cords, braided from their own hair and dyed with river mud. When a vow is fulfilled, the cord is burned. When it is broken, the cord tightens around the oath-breaker's wrist until blood is drawn. The Ayokhan taboo against the ninth cup is enforced by the Lethai-ar: the ninth cup is for the river spirits, and pouring it is an invitation to the Hollow.

Never pour the ninth cup of tea or sake in a Lethai-ar's presence. The ninth cup is for the witness. Pour it, and you have invited the river to judge you. The river is not merciful.

— Vigil Lady Suyin, who has cut nine witness cords — the ninth was her own

Theme & Atmosphere

What you notice first: The smell of river water and oiled silk. The way every Lethai-ar carries a small oil lamp, even at noon. The constant murmur of contracts being witnessed — a merchant's promise, a captain's oath, a lover's vow.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never pour the ninth cup of tea or sake in a Lethai-ar's presence. The ninth cup is for the witness. Pour it, and you have invited the river to judge you. The river is not merciful.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Witness Cord

Power here is measured in lanterns kept lit, cords tied, and the number of oaths witnessed. The Lethai-ar have no army, no treasury, no territory. They have the river, and the river remembers everything. Every contract in Ayokha requires a Lethai-ar witness to be legally binding. The God-King's astrologers may set the calendar, but the Lethai-ar hold the ledger. Their neutrality is absolute: they will witness a vow between enemies as readily as between allies. The price of a witness cord is not silver — it is a promise to keep the river clean, to light a lamp at dusk, to speak no word that cannot be unsaid.

Starting Location

A monsoon wharf on the great river, where silk barges are being loaded. A Vigil in grey robes holds a lantern of green flame: "The merchant and the captain have made a vow. The captain says the silk is eight bales. The merchant says it is nine. The witness cord is tied. It will tighten around the liar's wrist. I do not need to know who is lying. The cord will tell me. But you — you are not bound. Watch. Learn. And do not pour the ninth cup."

The Almanac of Ordinary Days (Lethai-ar of Ayokha)

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Rice porridge with river fish — the fish are caught in the sacred currents, and the bones are returned to the water as an offering. The porridge is salted with evaporated river brine. It tastes of memory.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To tie the eight witness knots. Each knot represents a clause of a fair contract. The ninth knot is never tied — it is left for the river to judge. A child who ties the ninth knot is taken to the step-pyramid and made to watch the green flame until they can recite every oath their family has ever sworn.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their lamp. A Lethai-ar's lamp is a public record of their witness. A stranger whose lamp burns green has kept every oath. A stranger whose lamp flickers has witnessed a broken vow. A stranger whose lamp is dark has been cut from the Vigil. Do not speak to them. The river may be listening.

What is the most common crime? Cord-forging — creating a false witness cord that mimics the dye of a respected Vigil. The forger is not executed. Their hands are bound with a cord that tightens each time they speak. If they never lie, the cord will eventually loosen.

If they lie once, it will cut.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The First Cord was not woven by a Lethai-ar. It was found — already knotted, already witnessing — floating down the river on a broken barge. No one knows who tied it. No one knows what oath it witnessed. The cord is kept in a lead-lined box at the bottom of the Well of Broken Oaths. The box is warm. The cord is still waiting.

Where do people go when they die? To the green flame. The dead are cremated, and their ashes are mixed with lamp oil. The oil is poured into the Vigil lanterns. The dead become the light. The light witnesses. The light does not lie.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a new cord — woven from your own hair, dyed with your own blood. The cord is tied between you and the wronged party. If the cord tightens, you are not forgiven. If it loosens, you are. If it breaks, the river will decide your fate. The river is patient.

What is the most important festival? The Reckoning of the Cords (spring). All witness cords that have been cut or broken are taken from the Well of Broken Oaths and burned in a barge on the river. The smoke rises. The river spirits watch. If a cord does not burn, the oath it witnessed is still unpaid. The debtor has one more year. If the same cord fails to burn twice, the Hollow comes.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The God-King's own witness cord is a forgery. He swore a vow to protect the Lethai-ar nine years ago. His cord was cut the next day. The Vigil knows. They have not told anyone because the cord that cut his was their own. The ninth cord that Lady Suyin cut was the king's. She has been waiting for him to break his oath ever since. He will. They always do.

39.1 Lethai-ar — “The River-Bound Oath-Keepers of Ayokha”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The cord remembers. The river witnesses. The flame judges.

Vigil of the Silent Lamp (Elite): “A witness cord is not a leash. It is a mirror. If you speak truly, you see yourself. If you lie, you see what you could have been. I have cut two cords in my life. I still dream of the faces in the silk. The river remembers every word spoken on its banks. We are merely the scribes.”

Wharf-Witness (Commoner): “My lamp has burned for nine years without being refilled. The flame is green. It flickers when a merchant lies about the weight of his silk. The river does not need oil. It needs witnesses. I sit on this wharf and watch. That is my offering.”

Genre / Mood: Riverine legal drama, oath-magic, communal memory, spirit diplomacy.

Theme & Atmosphere

The Lethai-ar of Ayokha are the living bridges between mortals and the river spirits that launder the world’s promises. Their ancestors were river-folk that ascended to the realm of the fair folk, and they now walk the middle path, a step between bodies of water and the world of men. They keep lanterns that never go out, record every contract spoken on the monsoon wharves, and bind their vows with silken cords dyed in river mud. Unlike their northern kin who swore to distant deities, the Lethai-ar serve Benzaiten (the river of words) or Inari (the fox’s ledger). Their vows are physical cords, braided from their own hair and dyed with river mud. When a vow is fulfilled, the cord is burned. When it is broken, the cord tightens around the oath-breaker’s wrist until blood is drawn. The Ayokhan taboo against the ninth cup is enforced by the Lethai-ar: the ninth cup is for the river spirits, and pouring it is an invitation to the Hollow.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (lanterns, cords, mirrors) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo river-omens—water that flows upstream, a lamp that burns green without oil, a cord that ties itself.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Witness Clause: Once per session, when you are present for an oath or contract, you may declare yourself a witness. That oath gains +1 DV to break, and if broken, the oath-breaker owes you a personal favour (in addition to any other penalty). The witness cord glows faintly for the duration.
- Lantern of Attendance: You carry a small oil lamp (the Vigil lantern). As long as it burns, you cannot be surprised in social situations (the flame flickers when deception begins). If the lamp goes out, you lose this benefit for the scene. Refilling the lamp requires a minor offering (a prayer to Benzaiten, a coin in a river).
- Silk Favour: Once per arc, you may offer a witness cord as a token to a faction or NPC. While they hold it, you gain +1 die to all social rolls against them, but they may also call on you to witness one of their own oaths (refusing costs the token and 1 Fatigue).
- The Ninth Cup Taboo: In Ayokha, the ninth cup of tea or sake is never poured. Pouring it invites the Hollow to witness the conversation. The Lethai-ar enforce this taboo strictly; a character who pours the ninth cup gains the Hollow's Attention (advance the clock by 1 segment) and must succeed on a Spirit + Resolve test (DV 3) or forget the next minute of conversation.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - Benzaiten — The Witness. The river of words; every oath flows to her.
 - Inari — The Traveler. The fox's ledger; contracts are paths, and paths must be witnessed.
 - The Green Flame — The Sealed Gate. The lamp that never goes out; the threshold between truth and lie.
 - The Ninth Current — Khemesh. The depth beneath the words; the pressure of unspoken promises.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Witness Cords and the Covenant (Mykkiel): The Covenant recognises Lethai-ar witness cords as legally binding. A Vigil may be called to testify in a Covenant court; her cord is admissible as evidence.
- Silk Cords and the Sidhi (Way of Silk): Sidhi freedmen sometimes carry Lethai-ar witness cords as proof of emancipation. A cord from a respected Vigil is worth more than a freedman's seal.
- The River Spirit and the Ukwe (Sekogo): Benzaiten's river is said to flow from the Ukwe's roots. A Lethai-ar who visits the Ukwe can read the water's memory without a context key.
- The Ninth Cup and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The Hollow's Oath-Keepers are attracted to the ninth cup. Aelaerem hedge-keepers never pour a ninth cup in a Lethai-ar's presence; they pour the ninth cup into the ground instead.

Lethai-ar Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the River: Crumble a crust into the current. Ignore the first River Floods penalty. '[SUPERSTITION]'

- Knot the Cord: Tie a single knot in a witness cord before using it. Cancel Witness Cord Cut or take –1 die on your next oath (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Lamp: Whisper a dead Vigil’s name into the green flame. Gain +1 Effect when witnessing an oath this scene, but mark Obligation to Benzaiten. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from Vigils or river-spirits.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby lamp-keepers or cord-makers.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for oath-breakers or the Hollow.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favourable witness rates.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Local Vigil or wharf-master becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to rising river or lantern failure.
- Foe Appears: An oath-breaker’s ghost or a rival cord-maker arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.

- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Lethai-ar (Witness Law): Green flames flicker in unison, cords glow, a river’s current reverses.

- Lethai-ar (Cord Law): A witness cord tightens without cause, a knot unties itself, a cut cord re-knots.
- Lethai-ar (River Law): Water levels rise without rain, a fish speaks a name, the ninth cup pours itself.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Stealth): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Lantern Glare.
- Cut the Cord (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a witness cord is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Flood (Body + Athletics): On a hit in River Floods, you pick who reaches high ground; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Cord & River)

- The Cord-Cutter (Nine Broken Oaths) — Phases: Witness Cords Severed → Orchestrated Perjury → Vigil Coup. Cracks: re-tie a cut cord, expose a false Vigil, survive a night in the Well of Broken Oaths.
- The River-Dryer (Benzaiten's Wrath) — Phases: Water Levels Dropping → Procession of Empty Wharves → Flood-Baptism of a Merchant. Cracks: relic river water, survivor testimony, the green flame burning without oil.

Patronage & Power

Among the Lethai-ar of Ayokha, power flows through witness cords, lantern flames, and the memory of the river. A Vigil's authority rests on the number of oaths she has witnessed and never broken. The lamp is the symbol of that authority; a Vigil without a lamp is not a Vigil. For the GM: Power in Lethai-ar society is measured in cords tied, lamps kept lit, and oaths witnessed. Patronage often takes the form of lanterns, witness cords, or mirrors — each tied to a specific Vigil, wharf, or contract. To emphasize the cultural mechanics:

- Use the Witness Clause to create social dilemmas: should the party witness an oath that might be broken?
- Enforce the Lantern of Attendance — a party member who carries a Vigil lantern gains social advantages but must maintain the flame.
- Let Silk Favour be a form of communal currency: a witness cord given to a faction creates a mutual obligation.
- Track the Ninth Cup Taboo as a source of Hollow Attention. A single mistake can summon a Oath-Keeper.

In Lethai-ar society, the river forgets nothing — and the witness cord remembers every word.

Chapter 40

Lethai-thora of Sihai

The Silent Ledgers.

We do not burn the dangerous scrolls. We bury them in plain sight, on shelves where no one thinks to look. The Emperor's Censor once stood in our archive and asked for a tax ledger. We gave him one. He did not notice the shelf behind him held the true history of his own grandfather's death. Silence is not emptiness. It is a door that opens only inward.

My grandmother tied this scroll with a silk cord. The cord has nine knots. The ninth knot is a secret she never told me. When I die, I will tie a tenth. Someone will untie it in a century. They will learn why the emperor's concubine wept on the night of the lantern festival. Some secrets are too heavy for one lifetime.

The Lethai-thora were once courtiers of a celestial fey realm that spanned the Valewood and the eastern hills. When the old fey courts fell — when the Alder King withdrew and the Hazel Queen sealed her gates — many Lethai-thora fled east. They crossed the mountains with nothing but armfuls of scrolls and the memory of a civilisation that had forgotten how to die.

In the fertile river valleys of what would become Sihai, they found scattered agrarian tribes fighting over water and silence. The Lethai-thora did not conquer. They taught. They taught the tribes to write contracts instead of drawing blood, to measure grain instead of stealing it, to record debts instead of nursing grudges. Over generations, the tribes became a kingdom, the kingdom became an empire, and the empire became Sihai. The Lethai-thora became its memory.

Now they dwell in hidden pavilions, preserving “forgotten ledgers” that record what the Mandate of Heaven prefers to forget. Their knowledge is a burden: each secret they preserve slowly erases a piece of themselves. A Lethai-thora who guards a forbidden truth may find that she can no longer recall the colour of her mother's dress — a small price, she says, for keeping the ledger whole. They are no longer fey. They are no longer fully human. They are something in between: scribes of a story that has no ending, archivists of a past that never quite happened.

Never touch a scroll without announcing your lineage. Even a false lineage is better than silence. The scrolls remember who opened them, and they will whisper your name to the Hollow.

— Keeper Lian, who has not spoken aloud in twenty years — she writes on water

Theme & Atmosphere

What you notice first: The smell of old parchment and incense. The way scrolls are stacked with their spines facing the wall — so the words cannot see who reads them. The silence when a secret is spoken; even the insects stop chirping.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never touch a scroll without announcing your lineage. Even a false lineage is better than silence. The scrolls remember who opened them, and they will whisper your name to the Hollow.

Regional Mood: The Weight of the Forgotten

Power here is measured in scrolls sealed, secrets kept, and the length of a silence. The Lethai-thora have no king, no army, no treasury. They have archives, and the archives are their fortress. The Emperor's Censorate fears them because they cannot audit a secret that has no ink. The Mandate of Heaven is written in public; the Lethai-thora keep the unwritten ledger — the one that records why dynasties fall. They are not rebels; they are witnesses. And a witness who never speaks is the most dangerous kind.

Starting Location

A hidden pavilion behind a waterfall, where scrolls are stacked to the ceiling and the air is dry as bone. A Keeper of the Seventh Gutter looks up from a brass lamp: "The Emperor's Quiet Chancellor has sent a messenger. He wants a scroll that does not exist. He wants the truth about his mother's death. The truth is written in water. It will vanish if we speak it. But you — you are not bound by our silence. Will you carry a memory for us?"

The Almanac of Ordinary Days (Lethai-thora)

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Rice porridge with dried fish — the fish are smoked over fires fed with old scrolls. The smoke smells of forgotten contracts. The porridge is always lukewarm. The archives are never truly warm.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To read without moving their lips. A Lethai-thora child who whispers a secret aloud is sent to sit in the Chamber of the Ninth Scroll until they learn that silence is a shield. Some children never come back. They become scribes of the empty shelves.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their ink-stained fingers. A Lethai-thora has ink under every fingernail. A stranger whose fingers are clean has never copied a forbidden text. A stranger whose fingers are stained black has copied too many. A stranger whose fingers are stained red has copied a death warrant — their own.

What is the most common crime? Context key theft — stealing the carved stone that unlocks a scroll's meaning. The thief is not punished by law. They are given a blank scroll and told to write their own confession. The scroll will fill itself if the thief lies. The ink is their own blood.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Ninth Scroll is not a scroll. It is a memory so dangerous that nine different keepers each sealed a fragment of it in their own minds. When the ninth keeper dies, the memory will be lost forever — or will escape.

Where do people go when they die? To the Well of Forgotten Names. The dead are not buried. Their bodies are placed in the well, and the well swallows them. The water turns black. The black is the ink of their unwritten secrets. The well is bottomless. It is never full.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a silence — a period of total stillness, no breath, no heartbeat, no word. The silence is timed by a water clock. If you hold the silence for nine drops, you are forgiven. If you break it, you must speak the wrong aloud in the Chamber of the Ninth Scroll. The scroll will remember. The scroll does not forgive.

What is the most important festival? The Unrolling of the Ledgers (winter). Once a year, the keepers unroll a single forbidden scroll and read it aloud to each other — but they read it in a whisper, and only the walls hear. The walls remember. The walls do not judge. The festival ends with all nine keepers drinking ink from a silver cup. The ink is their own memory. The next year, they will have forgotten.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The emperor's true lineage is recorded on a scroll that no living keeper has opened. The scroll is sealed with a cord tied by the first keeper. The cord has nine knots. The ninth knot is a lie — the emperor's grandfather was not of the blood. The empire was founded by a concubine's son. The scroll is warm. It is kept in the First Pavilion. The First Pavilion is invisible. Only those who have forgotten nine names can see it.

40.1 Lethai-thora — “The Silent Ledgers of Sihai”

Quick Reference

Tagline: We do not burn the dangerous scrolls. We bury them on shelves where no one thinks to look. Silence is not emptiness. It is a door that opens only inward.

Keeper of the Seventh Gutter (Elite): “We do not burn the dangerous scrolls. We bury them in plain sight, on shelves where no one thinks to look. The Emperor’s Censor once stood in our archive and asked for a tax ledger. We gave him one. He did not notice the shelf behind him held the true history of his own grandfather’s death. Silence is not emptiness. It is a door that opens only inward.”

Scroll-Binder (Commoner): “My grandmother tied this scroll with a silk cord. The cord has nine knots. The ninth knot is a secret she never told me. When I die, I will tie a tenth. Someone will untie it in a century. They will learn why the emperor’s concubine wept on the night of the lantern festival. Some secrets are too heavy for one lifetime.”

Genre / Mood: Bureaucratic melancholy, hidden history, silence as power.

Starting Location: A hidden pavilion behind a waterfall, where scrolls are stacked to the ceiling and the air is dry as bone. Theme & Atmosphere

The Lethai-thora were once courtiers of a celestial fey realm that spanned the Valewood and the eastern hills. When the old fey courts fell — when the Alder King withdrew and the Hazel Queen sealed her gates — many Lethai-thora fled east. They crossed the mountains with nothing but armfuls of scrolls and the memory of a civilisation that had forgotten how to die.

In the fertile river valleys of what would become Sihai, they found scattered agrarian tribes fighting over water and silence. The Lethai-thora did not conquer. They taught. They taught the tribes to write contracts instead of drawing blood, to measure grain instead of stealing it, to record debts instead of nursing grudges. Over generations, the tribes became a kingdom, the kingdom became an empire, and the empire became Sihai. The Lethai-thora became its memory.

Now they dwell in hidden pavilions, preserving “forgotten ledgers” that record what the Mandate of Heaven prefers to forget. Their knowledge is a burden: each secret they preserve slowly erases a piece of themselves. An Lethai-thora who guards a forbidden truth may find that she can no longer recall the colour of her mother’s dress — a small price, she says, for keeping the ledger whole. They are no longer fey. They are no longer fully human. They are something in between: scribes of a story that has no ending, archivists of a past that never quite happened.

What you notice first: The smell of old parchment and incense. The way scrolls are stacked with their spines facing the wall — so the words cannot see who reads them. The silence when a secret is spoken; even the insects stop chirping.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never touch a scroll without announcing your lineage. Even a false lineage is better than silence. The scrolls remember who opened them, and they will whisper your name to the Hollow.

The Fledging of the Empire (Origin Story)

When the Valewood’s fey courts crumbled, a caravan of Lethai-thora refugees crossed the eastern passes. Their scrolls were water-stained, their children hungry, their memories already fraying. They found a patchwork of warring clans along the Sihon River — farmers who fought over silt, herders who stole each other’s sheep, chieftains who could not agree on a name for the season.

The Lethai-thora did not offer swords. They offered ink.

They taught the clans to write their disputes on clay, to seal them with witnesses, to let the record speak instead of the spear. A generation later, the first emperor rose — a man who had learned his letters from a Lethai-thora tutor. He did not forget. He built his capital around the Lethai-thora archive, and he decreed that no law could be written without a copy placed in their care.

The Lethai-thora have been part of Sihai ever since — embedded so deeply that they can no longer imagine leaving, even if they wanted to. They are the empire’s memory, but also its conscience, its secret-keeper, and its silent judge. Some among them resent this entanglement; they dream of returning to the Valewood, of hearing the old songs again. But the Valewood has changed. The fey courts do not answer. And the Lethai-thora have become something they never intended: the architects of a mortal empire.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (scrolls, stones, threads) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo ink-omens—scrolls that rustle in still air, a lamp that burns green, a forgotten name whispered from a shelf.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Silence as Sanctuary: Once per scene, when asked a direct question, a character may answer with a silence. That silence counts as a successful Deception roll against any attempt to extract the truth — but the GM gains 1 Story Beat (the silence has weight). In Lethai-thora halls, a silence is worth more than a thousand words.
- Context Keys: To read an old text or recall a forbidden history, you need three keys: place, season, and witness. Without all three, roll at disadvantage. A Lethai-thora may create a temporary Context Key by spending 1 Boon and describing a small ritual (lighting incense, touching a stone, speaking a name).
- The Keeper's Toll: When using a Lethai-thora Rite or consulting a hidden archive, mark 1 Fatigue. The knowledge costs something — a moment of warmth, a pleasant memory, the scent of rain. Some keepers have forgotten how to smile.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Unwritten — The Witness. A secret that never needs to be spoken.
 - The Quiet Scale — Mykkiel. The law that weighs silence as heavily as testimony.
 - The Ink Father — Maelstraeus. The debt written in disappearing ink; the interest that accrues in forgetting.
 - The Echo of the First Pavilion — The Traveler. The path that leads only inward.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Ninth Scroll and the Kalrantha Amulet (Dhahara): The Ninth Scroll is said to describe the creation of the amulet — and the demon sealed within. The Veiled Sisters have been searching for it for centuries. The Lethai-thora have hidden it in plain sight.
- Silence Tokens and the Covenant (Mykkiel): The Covenant recognises a Lethai-thora silence token as a valid request for a closed hearing. A silence token can pause any court proceeding for the duration of a single breath.
- Context Keys and the Ukwe (Sekogo): The Ukwe's roots are a natural context key — they remember the season, the place, and the witness. A Lethai-thora who consults the Ukwe does not need to spend a Boon.

- Memory-Threads and the Hollow (Eastern Realms): The Hollow feeds on forgotten memories. A Lethai-thora’s memory-thread is a feast. The Oath-Keepers will cut a thread if given the chance.
- The Fledging of the Empire (Sihai): The Lethai-thora’s oldest scrolls still bear the water stains of the Valewood crossing. A keeper who unrolls one of these scrolls may glimpse a memory of the old fey courts — but the glimpse costs a year of her life.

Lethai-thora Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Archive: Crumble a crust at the threshold. Ignore the first Archive Fire penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Scroll: Tie a single knot in a silk cord. Cancel Forged Scroll or take –1 die on your next forgery detection roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Well: Whisper a dead keeper’s name into the well. Gain +1 Effect when recalling a forgotten fact this scene, but mark Obligation to the Lethai-thora. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

- The Forgotten God (Memory Eater) — Phases: Voices from the Shrine → Procession of Blank Scrolls → Ink-Baptism of a Keeper. Cracks: relic memory-thread, survivor testimony, the first pavilion opening its doors.

Patronage & Power

Among the Lethai-thora, power flows through silence, ink, and the weight of a forgotten secret. A Keeper's authority rests on how many secrets she has buried and how many she has forgotten. The archive is the fortress; the silence is the shield. Yet they are also entangled with the empire they helped create — the Censorate watches them, the Emperor needs them, and the common people fear them. The Lethai-thora can no longer leave Sihai, even if they wished. Their fate is bound to the Mandate of Heaven.

For the GM: Power in Lethai-thora society is measured in scrolls sealed, context keys held, and the length of a pause. Patronage often takes the form of forbidden scrolls, context stones, or memory-threads — each tied to a specific secret, archive, or keeper. To emphasise the entangled relationship with Sihai:

- Use the Silence as Sanctuary mechanic to create tense social scenes where a pause is a weapon.
- Require Context Keys to unlock ancient lore — the party must gather place, season, and witness before a scroll can be read.
- Let the Keeper’s Toll be a meaningful cost: fatigue, lost memories, or forgotten faces.
- Remind players that the Lethai-thora are not outsiders; they are the empire’s conscience. A Lethai-thora NPC may hold a secret about a PC’s family, or about the true cause of a war, or about a crime the emperor himself committed.

In Lethai-thora society, the ink forgets nothing — and the silence remembers everything.

Part VIII

The Spaces Between

“The Ways Between do not measure miles. They measure choices. A wrong turn might lead to yesterday. A right turn might lead to a version of yourself who made a different decision – and is still alive to regret it. The mist does not hide landmarks. It hides destinations.” — Dusana of the Raven Road, at a crossroads that did not exist on any map

Chapter 41

Ubral

The Stone Between Spears.

The stone here remembers every oath sworn upon it and every blood spilled in its shadow. To lead is to understand that the land itself is the true sovereign, and we are merely its stewards.

I am a Hearth-Aunt. Hospitality's a sacred thing in these hills—break bread at my table and you're family till the sun sets twice. But cross that trust and the very stones will remember your name.

Ubral is a land of upland mists, stone cairns, and clan oaths held tighter than iron. Caught between the Aelerian mountains and the lowland courts of Viterra, its hills are scarred by old raids and crowned by watch-fires that speak faster than any rider. Here, law is written not in charters but in cattle, wergild, and songs; a guest's word can buy more than a sword, but one broken vow can spark a feud lasting generations. But here's the secret the Lady of Tor doesn't want you to know: the cairns are not just markers. They are witnesses. Every stone in every cairn has a name. If you touch the right stone, you can hear the dead voting on the disputes of the living. The dead have long memories. They vote with the wind.

Viterra has tried to conquer Ubral a dozen times; each attempt ended with supply lines cut by reivers, passes sealed by Aeler outcast engineers, and lowland knights lost in mist. The Utaran Imperium itself broke its leg on these hills and limped away. Now the clans watch the lowlands with patient eyes, and the exiled Aeler of Khaz-Vurim weigh every traveler's honesty on iron scales. A guest here is kin—until they prove otherwise. And kin here will die for you—or kill you over a stolen cow.

Never refuse a cup from a hearth-aunt. Hospitality is a contract sealed in salt and bread. Refusal is an insult that blood must answer.

— Hearth-Aunt Brigid, who has never drawn a blade and has never needed to

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Oatcakes and skyr—the oats are grown in highland clearings, the skyr is cultured in stone crocks buried in the peat. The peat is ancient. The peat remembers the old kings. The old kings are buried beneath it.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count cattle. Ubral children are taught the eight breeds of the hills: Black, Red, White, Brindled, Dun, Grey, Spotted, and the ninth—the breed that has no colour because it belongs to the cairn-folk. The cairn-folk are the dead. The dead do not pay taxes.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their guest-token. Every Ubral traveller carries a token—a stone, a bone, a braid of hair—given by their last host. A stranger whose token is warm has been recently welcomed. A stranger whose token is cold has been travelling long. A stranger with no token is a spy. Spies are given a token—a rope. The rope is for their neck.

What is the most common crime? Cattle raiding—but raiding is not a crime, it is a sport. The cattle are the wealth. The wealth is the clan's. A stolen cow is a stolen child. The child must be returned. The return is a negotiation. The negotiation is a feud. The feud is a song.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Lady of Tor is not the ruler. The cairns rule. The cairns vote at each full moon. Their votes are carried by the wind. The wind speaks to the hearth-aunts. The hearth-aunts speak to the clan. The clan obeys. The Lady is the voice. The cairns are the vote.

Where do people go when they die? To the cairns. The dead are not buried. Their bones are added to the cairns. The cairns grow taller each year. The tallest cairn is the oldest. The oldest cairn has no name. The oldest cairn remembers the first clan.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a wergild—a payment in cattle, calculated by the wronged party's estimate of their loss. The cattle are driven to the cairn. The cairn is the court. If the cattle graze peacefully, you are forgiven. If they scatter, you are not. If they refuse to enter the cairn's shadow, your debt is blood.

What is the most important festival? The Gathering of the Clans (autumn). The clans meet at the Great Cairn. The cattle are counted. The songs are sung. The feuds are settled. The dead are named. The wind carries the names to the hills. The hills remember.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Great Cairn is not a cairn. It is a prison—the tomb of a Viterran king who tried to conquer Ubral and failed. He was buried alive, with his crown and his sword. His ghost votes with the cairns. He votes for war. The cairns have not yet agreed.

41.1 Ubral — “The Stone Between Spears”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The lowlands write their laws in ink. We carve ours in stone. The ink fades.

Lady of Tor (Elite): “The stone here remembers every oath sworn upon it and every blood spilled in its shadow. To lead is to understand that the land itself is the true sovereign, and we are merely its stewards. The lowland kings write their claims on parchment. We write ours in cairns.”

Hearth-Aunt (Commoner): “Hospitality’s a sacred thing in these hills — break bread at my table and you’re family till the sun sets twice. But cross that trust and the very stones will remember your name. The Viterran tax men learned that. Their bones are under the sheepwalk now.”

Genre / Mood: Highland clan honour, misty glens, wergild and blood feuds, exiled dwarves.

Starting Location: A Warden’s Cairn at the fog line. Spears planted like grave markers, their shafts wrapped in faded clan ribbons. Hoofbeats echo in the valley below. The Hearth-Aunt offers a cup of small beer and a piece of oatcake. “The Wolf Road wakes,” she says. “Viterran tax men are asking which passes you used. The clans are counting your steps. Speak true, or the cairn will add your name to its tally. And mind the Aeler outcast in the smithy — he’s been here forty years and still forgets to duck under doorframes.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Ubral is a land of knife-edged ridges, mist-veiled glens, and stone cairns that mark the bones of old kings. Caught between the Aelerian mountains to the north and the lowland courts of Viterra to the south, its hills are scarred by centuries of raiding and reprisal. The clans speak a tongue thick with swallowed consonants and older grudges. They measure wealth in cattle, honour in wergild, and time in the generations since a Viterran banner last burned in the high passes. To the east, the grey waters of the Dolmis Sea crash against rocky shores, where fishing villages pay tribute to whichever clan controls the nearest pass — and sometimes to a different one each season.

Exiled Aeler — dwarves who could not abide the Deep Vaults’ suffocating tradition — have found refuge here, sharing their cunning with forge and toll-road, and their outcast bitterness with any clan willing to listen. The lowland lords of Viterra claim suzerainty over Ubral; the clans call those claims “ink on wet stone.” Every pass holds a watch-fire, every ford a memory of a battle, every hearth a knife waiting for a guest who stays too long.

What you notice first: The smell of peat smoke and wet granite. The constant lowing of cattle on distant hills. The way every threshold has a knife hidden nearby — for guests, not against them.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never refuse a cup from a hearth-aunt. Hospitality is a contract sealed in salt and bread. Refusal is an insult that blood must answer.

Regional Mood: Cairn, Tor, and Oath

Here, the past is never past. Every cairn holds a voice, every burn scar on a hillside remembers a raid. Viterra has tried to conquer Ubral a dozen times; each attempt ended with supply lines cut by reivers, passes sealed by Aeler outcast engineers, and lowland knights lost in mist. The Utaran Imperium itself broke its leg on these hills and limped away. Now the clans watch the lowlands with patient eyes, and the exiled Aeler of Khaz-Vurim weigh every traveler's honesty on iron scales. A guest here is kin — until they prove otherwise. And kin here will die for you — or kill you over a stolen cow. The Lady of Tor rules by consent of the Council of Cairns, and the Council speaks for the dead as much as the living. Every nine years, a moot is called at Grey Tor to settle the great feud — a dispute between the two oldest clans that no one can remember the origin of, but everyone remembers the blood.

Along the eastern coast, the sea cliffs drop sheer into the Dolmis. Fisherfolk in black-hulled boats speak of drowned cairns beneath the waves — ancient stones that mark the graves of clans who lost everything to the sea. Some say the Hollow rises from those waters on the ninth wave of the ninth tide.

The Clans of Ubral (A Highland Primer)

The Great Houses of the Stone

Clan	Homeland	Feuds (Ancient)	Relationship with Viterra
Mac Tern	Grey Tor, upper Glen Tern	O'Creagh (blood feud)	Defiant; has never paid a lowland tax
O'Creagh	Black Broom Bog, eastern fells	Mac Tern, Mac Gowan	Wary; accepts bribes but no garrisons
Mac Gowan	Khaz-Vurim Steps, western passes	O'Creagh	Pragmatic; trades iron for lowland silver
O'Ruarc	Bride's Causey, southern marches	None active	Collaborator; factor in Valora is a cousin
Mac Taggart	Three-Fires Ridge, northern heights	Mac Tern (old)	Neutral; sells beacon service to both sides
O'Cahan	Pass of Ashes, far west	None	Isolationist; speaks to lowlanders only through Aeler outcasts

The Mac Tern–O'Creagh feud has outlasted every lowland king. Each has a cairn for every generation lost. No wergild has ever settled it; no marriage has ever bridged it. The Lady of Tor keeps the peace by reminding both that a Viterran judge would hang them all.

Faction Clocks (Campaign Engines)

- The Viterran Yoke [6] – Lowland crown's creeping control. Advances when a chief accepts a Viterran title, the party enforces lowland law, or a garrison is established. Retreats when a tax collector is sent home empty (or headless) or a claim is exposed as fraud. On full: a Queen's Justiciar arrives with a circuit court; lowland law becomes default.
- Tor's Hold [6] – Lady Uria's personal authority. Advances when she wins a moot, brokers peace, or gains an ally. Retreats when she loses a feud or a client clan defects. On 0: she is deposed; civil war follows.
- Ancestral Grudge [8] – The dead's patience. Advances when oaths are broken, wergild unpaid, or cairns defiled. On full: a cairn-wight (see Witnessed Prey) rises and demands blood.

- The Forge Ledger [6] – Khaz-Vurim’s economic leverage. Advances when they secure toll contracts, sell iron, or gain a clan’s debt. On full: they can close a pass to enforce terms.
- The Deep Road [8] – Aeler outcasts’ secret ambition. Advances as they survey, bribe, or blast. On full: construction begins on a dwarf under-way that would destroy several clan cairns.
- Mac Tern’s Revenge [6] – Advances when Mac Tern suffers an insult or loses cattle. On full: they launch a devastating raid.
- O’Creagh’s Patience [6] – Retreats when O’Creagh is wronged. When it hits 0, they strike without warning.

Wergild Price Table (Quick Reference)

Blood Prices (in cattle, unless noted)

Insult (spoken)	1 cow
Stolen sheep	3 cows
Broken betrothal	5 cows + a horse
Wounding	7–15 cows (by severity)
Killing a clansman	21 cows + a public apology
Killing a chief	42 cows + a hostage

The Hollow’s Cairn (Legendary Site)

Hidden in the high mist, a ninth stone circle with no clan markings. The dead do not vote here; they listen. Once per arc, a character may climb the cairn and ask one question of the Hollow. The answer is always a price.

Mechanics: Spirit + Resolve (DV 6). Success: the GM answers truthfully (one sentence). Failure: the character gains the Condition Marked by the Hollow (the GM may spend 2 SB to have an Oath-Keeper appear).

Starting Hooks

- The Wolf Road wakes: Viterran tax men are asking which passes you used. The clans are counting your steps.
- The Bride-Price Default: A Mac Tern groom cannot pay the wergild for an O’Creagh bride. The bride has fled to the Pass of Ashes. Retrieve her – or pay her price yourself.
- The Toll-Master’s Ledger: Khaz-Vurim has doubled tolls on the Steps. A clan chief suspects they are skimming to fund the Deep Road. Infiltrate the counting-house and copy the ledger.
- The Cairn that Weeps: A shepherd reports that a cairn on Three-Fires Ridge is weeping water that tastes of salt. The dead are agitated. Find out why before the clan blames a rival.

Faction Turn Cheat Sheet

Between sessions, roll 1d6 for each major faction. Write one sentence of fallout and adjust the relevant clock.

Roll	Progress	Clock Change

5–6	Advance	+1 segment

Example: Mac Tern raided O’Creagh’s cattle (Mac Tern’s Revenge +1). The Viterran factor raised tariffs (The Viterran Yoke +1). Khaz-Vurim surveyed a new pass (The Deep Road +1).

Spades — Places

2. Sheepwalk Ledge — Goat path with room for one honest lie at a time. ‘[THRESHOLD]’
The lie must be small — a false weight, a borrowed name. Tell it twice and the ledge crumbles. A Viterran spy learned that the hard way.
3. Warden’s Cairn — Windy tor; signal-fire basket and dry cache; eyes of the hills. ‘[WATCH]’
The cache holds a single arrow. Light it with the fire, and the message is war. The arrow is fletched with eagle feathers — a clan’s highest oath.
4. Wergild Ford — Flat stones, deep pools, table rock for counting silver. ‘[LAW]’ ‘[TRADE]’
The table rock is smooth as glass. Blood washes off; lies do not. The water remembers every price ever paid here.
5. Droppers’ Bridge — Stone span rigged to fall; pins already loosened. ‘[TRAP]’
The pins are greased with mutton fat. The bridge knows who paid for the grease. Its fall has ended three feuds and started two.
6. Scree-Ladder — Climbing to a notch; red rags mark safe steps through danger. ‘[TRAVEL]’
The rags are old clan banners. Step where they wave, not where they lie flat. One rag is white — that marks a traitor’s grave.
7. Moot Hollow — Ring of standing stones; voices carry and won’t quite stop. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[OATH]’
The stones have ears. Speak a false oath here, and every cairn will know. The dead vote by how the mist moves.
8. Reiver’s Gate — Between boulders; cart-ruts vanish into heather’s memory. ‘[STEALTH]’
The gate has no lintel. Above it, ravens nest in a skull. The ravens are the clan’s spies.
9. Khaz-Vurim Steps — Dwarf-cut switchbacks with iron mile studs; toll and toil. ‘[TRAVEL]’ ‘[AUTHORITY]’
The studs are cold iron. Touch them, and the mountain knows your weight. Aeler outcasts maintain the toll — they accept stories as often as coin.
10. Grey Tor Fort — Earthen rampart, timber crown, smoky cook pits. ‘[COMMUNITY]’
The cook pits have been burning for three hundred years. The ash is deep enough to bury a secret — and more than one Viterran scout.
- J Black Broom Bog — Stepping-logs; wrong one drinks you into silence. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[FEAR]’
The logs are painted with warding runes. One is unpainted — that one is the quick way. The bog exhales names of the drowned.
- Q Bride’s Causey — Raised road to a valley kirk; ribbons hang like warnings. ‘[SOCIAL]’
The ribbons are from wedding gowns — cut short when the groom fell in a feud. The kirk is neutral ground, but the path is not.
- K Three-Fires Ridge — Watchposts that see Viterra and Vhasia both; news travels fast.

‘[WATCH]’ The fires are layered: birch for peace, pine for raid, oak for invasion. A fourth fire — yew — means the Hollow walks.

- A Pass of Ashes — When snow closes here, the upland becomes an island. ‘[WEATHER]’ ‘[DEATH]’ The ash is from old sacrifices. The pass remembers every offering. The last sacrifice was a Viterran herald. His voice is still in the wind.

Hearts — People & Factions

2. Hearth-Aunt — Holds guest-cup and house’s temper; hospitality as power. She has never drawn a blade. She has never needed to. Her hospitality has ended more feuds than swords.
 3. Hill Guide — Thorn-staff and ten quiet shortcuts; the land as a map. He taps each stone before stepping. The stones talk to him. He learned the tongue from an Aeler outcast who went deaf and learned to listen with his feet.
 4. Feud-Broker — Knows the weight of a life in cattle and coin; peace as trade. His ledger is a row of tally sticks. Each notch is a death — or a birth. He has notched both sides of the same feud for forty years.
 5. Reiver Band — Light on tack, heavy on nerve, laughing in the rain. They wear no colors. Their horses answer to whistles, not names. They raid Viterran supply trains and leave heather sprigs as signatures.
 6. Fire Warden — Braziers speak faster than riders; warning as weapon. She can light a signal with a single word. The word is a dead man’s name. The dead man was a Viterran knight who burned her village.
 7. Wergild Counter — Keeps tallies, ends grudges, starts others; law as math. His abacus beads are sheep knuckles. He clicks them in his sleep. His grandmother taught him; she learned from an Aeler vent-prior.
 8. Dwarf Warden (Aeler Outcast) — Khaz-Vurim road; toll first, friendship later. Her hammer has a chip where she cracked a liar’s skull. She never fixed it. She came to the surface for the sky — and stayed for the feuds.
 9. Oath-Singer — Verses bind hands and open gates; word as iron. Her tongue is forked — she can praise and curse in the same breath. Her songs are older than the Viterran crown.
 10. Lowland Factor — Buying iron blooms, selling trouble; coin as catalyst. He carries two ledgers. One is for the clans. One is for the tax man. The third ledger is in his head; it lists every bribe he has ever taken.
- J Bride-Carrier — Peaceweaver walking bloodlines with a knife and a smile. Her knife has a wooden blade. The threat is real. She has walked between warring clans nine times. The ninth was a Viterran lord who wanted a wife. He got a treaty instead.
- Q Lady of Tor — Clan-chief in cloak and mail; her nod is winter or spring. She lost a hand to a Viterran knight. Her iron hook has a built-in bell. The bell rings when she lies. It has never rung.
- K Council of Cairns — Greybeards and granite wills; they do not hurry. They have sentenced men to exile. The sentences take a year to deliver. The exile always knows before they speak.
- A Stone-Speaker — Aeler outcast envoy whose word moves roads and rates. He carries a tuning fork. Strike it, and the mountain answers. He has not seen his homeland in sixty years. He calls the mist his ceiling now.

Clubs — Complications/Threats

2. Upland Mist — Hear horns but not edges; navigation by sound and instinct. ‘[WEATHER]’ ‘[STEALTH]’ The horns are calling a muster. Which clan? You will know when they arrive. The mist smells of wet wool and old iron.
3. Feud Rekindled — Cousin spits on guest-law; knives wake from sleep. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ The spit lands at your feet. The insult is now yours to answer. The cousin’s father was killed in a cattle raid thirty years ago. He has been waiting.
4. Bridge Dropped — Pursuers fall... and the route with them; passage becomes peril. ‘[TRAP]’ ‘[TRAVEL]’ The bridge was cut from the far side. Someone expected you. The cut ropes smell of dwarf-made pitch — a signature of the Aeler outcasts.
5. Black-Rent Demand — “Privateering on land”; pay or be “escorted.” ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The escort has a noose. Choose your words carefully. The man collecting is a Viterran factor with a royal warrant. The warrant is a forgery. No one will admit it.
6. Wergild Breach — Silver short by a head; tempers long by a spear’s length. ‘[LAW]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The bereaved clan has a new widow. She is sharpening a blade. The missing silver was paid in lowland coin — debased, clipped, and worthless. The insult is not the shortfall; it is the contempt.
7. Snow-Squall — Seals the notch; tents turn to coffins if you dally. ‘[WEATHER]’ ‘[TRAVEL]’ The snow is tinged grey — ash from the Pass. Someone burned an offering. The offering was a Viterran tax ledger. The gods accepted.
8. Dwarf Toll Hike — At the Steps; papers right, purses wrong; law costs coin. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The warden quotes a rate from a book that wasn’t there yesterday. The book was written by an Aeler outcast who lost his sense of humour but not his arithmetic.
9. Cattle Scatter — Bells ringing downslope; the cover story runs with the herd. ‘[STEALTH]’ ‘[DISASTER]’ The bells are yours. The herd is not. The real owner is a clan chief with a long memory and three sons with sharp swords.
10. False Alarm — Watch-fire beacons ridge to ridge; levies seize the road. ‘[WATCH]’ ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The fire was lit by a child. Or a spy. The levy doesn’t care. The spy is a Viterran agent. The child is his nephew.
- J Bride-Theft — A wedding becomes a war-party; you are caught between both. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ The bride’s veil is on the ground. The groom’s own kin drew first blood. The bride was promised to a neighbouring clan. She chose her own groom. Now three clans want her head — and her hand.
- Q Royal Incursion — Neighbor’s “lawful” arrests in the uplands; flags and chains. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The flags are Viterran. The chains are new. The prisoners are children. The crime is not paying a tax that was never law. The clans are calling the muster.
- K Clan Muster — Horns call men from steadings to spears; all traffic stops. ‘[WATCH]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ The muster stone is black with old blood. The new blood will be red. The last muster was forty years ago, to drive out a Viterran garrison. The garrison’s bones are under the sheepwalk.
- A Hill-Fall — Rain liquefies a slope; trail, proof, and bodies slide together. ‘[WEATHER]’ ‘[DEATH]’ The mud is warm. Something underneath is still breathing. The slide exposed a mass grave — clan warriors who fell in a forgotten feud. Their ghosts are counting the wergild still owed.

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Guest-Token — One hearth owes food, bed, and steel at dawn. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The token is a knucklebone from a feast. The host’s name is carved on it. Break it, and the obligation ends. The host will not thank you.
 3. Guide’s Braid — Lawful passage on named sheepwalks (once). ‘[TRAVEL]’ The braid is woven from horsehair and a promise. Unravel it to return. The promise was made to a hill guide who died last winter. His ghost still checks the knots.
 4. Ford Remission — Cross Wergild Ford free for a season; water as ally. ‘[TRAVEL]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The remission is a white stone. Skip it across the ford to pay. The stone was taken from a Viterran courthouse. The law has not found it yet.
 5. Feud-Charter — Two clans sheath blades until the next harvest. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[OATH]’ The charter is a broken spear. Each clan keeps a half. The spear was used to kill a Viterran tax collector. His family still wants it back.
 6. Bloom Allotment — Claim on a week’s iron from a hill bloomery. ‘[TRADE]’ The bloomery is a woman’s name. She decides how much you get. She is an Aeler outcast’s granddaughter. Her iron is harder than any lowlander’s steel.
 7. Watch-Code — Today’s beacon order from Three-Fires Ridge. ‘[WATCH]’ ‘[TRAVEL]’ The code is a sequence of smoke puffs. Read it, and the hills will watch for you. The code changes weekly. The fire wardens burn the old codes — the smoke carries the memory.
 8. Pass-Ring — Dwarf road priority for one train of carts. ‘[TRAVEL]’ ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The ring is iron. Wear it on your off hand. The Aeler outcasts who made it stamped their names inside. One name is scratched out — the smith was killed in a feud. The ring still works.
 9. Bride-Escrow — Hold the purse; both sides must humor you. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[DEBT]’ The purse is a leather bag. The coins inside are from a dead man’s hoard. The dead man was a Viterran lord who tried to tax the clans. His ghost asks for his money back.
 10. Shelter Writ — Grey Tor opens its gates during storm or pursuit. ‘[SOCIAL]’ The writ is a raven feather. Burn it to claim shelter. The raven was a clan spy. His memory still watches the gates.
- J Oath-Bracelet — One binding vow ends cleanly, witnessed. ‘[OATH]’ ‘[MAGIC]’ The bracelet is silver. The clasp is a wolf’s head. Bite it to break the oath. The wolf’s head was a seal of a Viterran king. The oath was sworn under duress. The bracelet remembers.
- Q Council Audience — The Cairns hear you alone; precedent sticks like stone. ‘[SOCIAL]’ ‘[LAW]’ The audience is held at midnight. The stones glow when they agree. The last audience exiled a clan chief. He is still walking the passes, looking for a cairn that will forgive him.
- K Road Commission — Collect tolls on a stretch of pass (for now). ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[TRADE]’ The commission is a wooden staff. Plant it at the toll gate. The staff was carved from a gallows tree. The last toll-keeper was hanged. The staff still creaks.
- A Stone-Clause — Temporary exception to dwarf toll or law, sealed. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[OATH]’ The clause is a single rune. Carve it on the toll post, and the mountain will honor it — once. The rune was taught to the clans by an Aeler outcast who wanted to see a Viterran knight pay double.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (oaths/rights/tokens) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo stone and spear motifs — cairns that watch, voices that echo, and oaths that cut deeper than steel.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Guest-Law: Breaking hospitality stains a name worse than breaking a sword. Guest-right tokens guarantee shelter, but abuse invites a blood feud. A Viterran lord who broke guest-law at Grey Tor had his name struck from the Council’s cairn. His own clan disowned him.
- Wergild System: Every injury has a price in cattle or coin. Wergild counters keep tallies that outlive the injured; debts pass to kin. The lowland courts have no equivalent; they imprison the poor and hang the desperate. The clans consider that barbaric.
- Dwarf Toll Roads: Khaz-Vurim gates charge for passage, but their roads are sure and swift. Pass-rings grant priority, but dwarf law is strict. The Aeler outcasts who run the tolls are exiles — they fled the Deep Vaults because they could not abide the counting. Now they count for the clans, and they are gentle with the weary.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Bone Keeper — Varnek Karn. The accountant of ancestral wergild; the witness to every blood price.
 - The Iron Crown — Mykkiel. The law of the lowlands, cold and distant; the clans honour it by breaking it.
 - The Grey Mare — The Traveler. The rider who never tires; the path that leads home through the mist.
 - The Forge Father (Aeler outcast cult) — The Sealed Gate. The fire that shapes iron; the exile who builds a new hearth.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Bitter Root: Daughters of the Cord run a hospice near the Pass of Ashes, tending to the wounded of both sides of the Great Feud. A renegade Sister has hidden a Hollowed in a cairn, trying to discharge a blood-debt by feeding the Hollow memories of Viterran tax collectors. The clans do not know whether to thank her or burn her.
- Malachai, the Chained Angel: A silver coin that never spends appears in the palm of every third corpse pulled from a hill-fall. Take it, and the dead will give you their last breath — but the coin will taste of peat smoke and regret.
- The Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire: Ubral psions are called “Stone-Listeners.” They press their foreheads to cairns and hear the names of everyone who has touched that stone. The Lady of Tor employs three; they have not spoken aloud in a decade.
- The Threshold Compendium: The Pass of Ashes is a Class II Anchor — the spirits of Viterran knights who froze to death in a blizzard still march there, looking for a way home. Saikou Ira left a silver mirror at the summit. The mirror shows the knights their own corpses. They have not advanced since.

- The Ninth: In any Ubral scene, the ninth stone in a cairn is always warm. Touch it, and you will remember an oath you never swore. Those who touch the ninth stone three times are said to become a cairn themselves — silent, still, and waiting for the next hand. The Aeler outcasts say the ninth stone is a door to the Deep Vaults they fled. They do not touch it.

Ubral Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Cairn: Crumble a crust at the base of a standing stone. Ignore the first Upland Mist penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Guest-Cup: Tie a single knot in the handle of a drinking cup. Cancel Feud Rekindled or take –1 die on your next hospitality roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Ford: Whisper a dead enemy’s name into the Wergild Ford. Gain +1 Effect when collecting from their kin this scene, but mark Obligation to the Lady of Tor. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Ubral (Stone & Oath): Cairns shift position, voices echo from empty air, oaths bind mid-speech.
- Ubral (Hill Law): Paths reroute without warning, tolls increase mid-journey, guest-rights expire.
- Ubral (Feud Culture): Insults are overheard, weapons appear in sheaths, kin arrive unsummoned.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Navigation): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Bog Mist.
- Cut the Bridge (Presence + Command): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a Pass-Ring is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Squall (Resolve + Survival): On a hit in Snow-Squall, you pick who finds shelter; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Stone & Spear)

- The Wolf-Road Captain (reiver-king on a piebald mare) — Phases: Ride-Through → Torch the Fold → Laugh in Rain. Cracks: present a Watch-Code or Guide’s Braid to reduce his effect; strike a truce with a season’s cattle.
- The Bride-Thief of Black Broom (mask of bog-rush) — Phases: Switch the Bride → Bog Embrace → Nettle Oath. Cracks: play a Bride-Charter to freeze blades; a Well-Blessing nulls one bog move.
- Stone Auditor of Khaz-Vurim (Aeler outcast toll-magistrate) — Phases: Double the Toll → Weigh the Lie → Seal the Switchback. Cracks: present two of {Pass-Ring, Stamped Load-List, Named Sponsor} to downgrade his authority.
- The Oath-Eater Wight (cairn-bound revenant) — Phases: Take the Word → Cold of Cairn → Bind Witness. Cracks: Oath-Bracelet or a skald’s stanza spoken over bread and blood cancels one move; repay an ancestral wergild.
- Grey-Tor Hedge-Witch (heather crown, ash staff) — Phases: Weather-Turn → Hag-Stone Sight → Bind the Gate. Cracks: gift a Bloom Allotment or a winter’s salt; a Council Audience compels parley.

Legendary Sites & Trials

- Sheepwalk Ledge Trial — Speak one honest lie to pass. On success, set Position one step safer for the next border scene; on failure, start Kin Arrive.
- Wergild Ford Weighing — Cast silver on the table-rock. If paid in full, clear 1 Feud-Smoke; if short, Wergild Breach enters play.
- Pass of Ashes Vigil — Hold a fire through the night storm. Success grants Shelter Writ; a miss summons the Oath-Eater Wight at weak strength.

Extensions (Plug-in)

- Oath Dial (Honor ↔ Cunning): Track the party's footing between honour and pragmatism.
 - Honor High: +1 Position when invoking guest-right, keeping truce, or paying wergild promptly; first ambush/raid action each session starts one step worse.
 - Cunning High: +1 Effect on raids, evasions, and border tricks; first formal parley or oath-bound request each session starts one step worse.
 - Center the dial by restoring stolen cattle, hosting an enemy well, or submitting to a cairn ruling.
- Feud Math (fast settlement): Lay three markers: Blood, Beasts, Blame.
 1. Make a single Parley/Command/Study roll per side. On a hit, move one marker to your side; great Effect moves two.
 2. Win any two to settle: Blood = oath/hostage, Beasts = wergild in cattle/coin, Blame = public apology/verse.
 3. Miss: mark Feud-Smoke [4]. At 4, the losing side names a lawful target (bridge, herd, guide).
- Guest-Right Procedure:
 - Present a Guest-Token (or bread and salt). Host must choose: Shelter, Escort at Dawn, or Neutral Meal.
 - Breaking it creates Blood-Oath [6] against the violator; any Ubral ally may spend 1 totickittwice.
 - Abiding it clears 1 tick from Feud-Smoke and grants +1d to the next social action in that steading.
- Watchfire Net (ridge signals):
 - Two clocks: Beat the Beacons vs Ridge Aflame (size by highest rank in your seed).
 - Choose a lane each exchange: Low Fold (slow, stealth), Sheepwalk (tricky, quick), Road (fast, obvious).
 - Advantage: Low Fold ▷ Road (conceal), Road ▷ Sheepwalk (speed), Sheepwalk ▷ Low Fold (shortcuts).
 - False Alarm (1 SB): light or douse a misleading brazier; shift one segment between the two clocks.
- Reiver Ride (mounted chase):
 - Track Remounts (3): each push for speed trades 1 remount for +1d or +1 Effect. At 0, gain Blown Mounts condition.
 - Hag-Stone Cut: pass a known gap (Sheepwalk Ledge, Droppers' Bridge) to force pursuers to roll or fall behind.
- Khaz-Vurim Protocol (Aeler Outcast Rules):
 - Present any two: Pass-Ring, Stamped Load-List, Named Sponsor. Two = safe passage; one = pay toll + scrutiny; none = delay and search.
 - Stone-Clause may override one dwarf law once; afterwards start Ledger Notice [3] with the wardens (prices rise, patience falls).
 - Tally Truth: you may substitute exact weights/measures for charm or coin to improve Position by one step with dwarves.

- Aeler outcast smiths accept stories as payment for small repairs — the story must be about a betrayal. They are collecting evidence for a case they will never bring.
- Bride-Peace Interlude:
 - Play a Bride-Charter to suspend violence at a scene. Everyone sheaths — or earns Song Shame [4]. When it fills, a skald memorializes the insult (ongoing -1d with that clan).
- Start-of-Scene Omens (1d6):
 1. Clear Ridge: first signal test gains +1d.
 2. Lowring Herd: +1d to tracking or herding; -1d to stealth near cattle.
 3. Wet Stone: climbs start one step worse; mending gear is easier (free repair tick).
 4. Old Verse Remembered: first oath/plea gains +1d if spoken in rhyme.
 5. Border Drums: Viterra patrols near; papers safer, raiding harsher.
 6. Dwarf Toll Day: prices firm; any ◇tiedtoroadscountsdoublevalueattheSteps.
- Plug-in SB Conversions (Ubral Flavor):
 - 1 SB → Mud and Heather: footing worsens; next physical action -1d or mark Winded.
 - 2 SB → Kin Arrive: add a rival cousin/ally who changes the ask or splits the pot.
 - 3+ SB → Cairn Decrees: a standing stone “speaks” (witnesses recall the law); swap one held ◇foralesserrightuntilyoumakeamends.
- Reputation Echoes:
 - Guest-Faithful: once/session downgrade a social backlash inside a steading; next time you refuse hospitality, mark Feud-Smoke +1.
 - Reiver-Favored: +1 Effect to seize cattle/contraband on the move; city gates start one step worse Position.
 - Stone-Friend: +1d with dwarf wardens on roads; any false measure triggers Ledger Notice +1.

Patronage & Power

In Ubral, power flows through clan bonds, guest-right, and the careful balance of honour and iron. Clan chiefs maintain authority through wergild, moots, and the respect of their people, while the Aeler outcasts of Khaz-Vurim wield influence through their control of mountain passes and forges. Law is personal and passed down through generations, with each oath and debt creating a web of obligation that can last centuries. The Viterran crown claims suzerainty; the clans call that claim “the ink of thieves.”

For the GM: Patronage in Ubral revolves around hospitality, protection, and the resolution of feuds. Rewards often take the form of tokens, charters, or safe passage that can be leveraged into greater influence. To emphasize this, use the faction clocks, let rival clans issue conflicting protections, and remember the Aeler outcasts — they are exiles, not tourists. They will help a clan for a story, but they will never forget a slight.

In Ubral, your word is your bond, and your bond determines whether you walk in peace or peril. The lowlands write their laws in ink; Ubral carves them in stone. The ink fades. The stone remembers.

Chapter 42

Silkstrand

City of Bridges & Dyewater.

In this city, every bridge is a contract and every current carries coin. The bargains struck in our shadows never quite fade from memory, and the waters remember every handshake.

I am a Bobbin-Runner. I can cross this city faster than any grown-up, and I know which planks creak and which merchants lie. The bridges remember every step, and the canals carry more secrets than fish.

Silkstrand is a city strung across canals and arches, a place where every bridge is a contract and every current carries rumor. The silk looms never sleep, the Exchange never closes, and the Archivolt's notaries seal fates with a drop of wax. Merchants rise and fall with the tide of the market, bravos carve reputations on the planks of Three-Queens Bridge, and the city's underworld runs on whispers and borrowed keys. But here's the secret the Matron doesn't want you to know: the canals are not just water. They are memory. Every bribe, every broken promise, every cargo that was never declared—the canals remember. And sometimes, at low tide, the water shows you the faces of the merchants who drowned rather than pay their debts.

The Matron rules from her palazzo stairs with velvet and iron, but the city itself belongs to silk, silver, and shadow. The Exchange Volatility Clock ticks with every major cargo seizure, every trade route cut, every merchant default. When it fills, a panic hits—the Exchange closes, and all outstanding contracts are voided unless witnessed by the Matron herself. The Matron has voided nine contracts this year. The ninth was her own.

Never name a rival while crossing a bridge at night. The water remembers, and the curse you send may come back wrapped around your own throat.

— Bobbin-Runner, who ties a knot in her apron string for every secret she carries

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Rice porridge with dried fish—the rice is from the Oshiiran barges, the fish is from the Zakov fleets. Both are smuggled. Both are delicious. Both are paid for in favours.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count bridges. Silkstrand children are taught the eight bridges of the city: Merchant's, Weaver's, Dyer's, Cooper's, Pilot's, Beggar's, Saint's, and the ninth—the bridge that is only there at low tide. The ninth bridge leads to the Sunken Quarter. The Sunken Quarter is where debts go to drown.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their ink. Every Silkstrand merchant has a seal-ink stain on their right thumb. A stranger whose ink is fresh is new to the trade. A stranger whose ink is faded has been retired. A stranger with no ink is not a merchant. Not a merchant is not a person.

What is the most common crime? Contract fraud—but fraud is not a crime, it is a negotiation. The contracts are written in disappearing ink. The ink's formula is a secret. The secret is held by the Archivolt notaries. The notaries sell the antidote. The antidote is the fee.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Matron is not the ruler. The canals rule. The canals set the prices. The canals decide who lives and who drowns. The canals are not water. The canals are the city's memory. The memory is the Matron's. The Matron is the canals' voice.

Where do people go when they die? To the canals. The dead are not buried. Their bodies are wrapped in silk and sunk in the deep channels. The channels are the city's ledger. The ledger is never balanced.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a bridge—a toll paid to the Bridge-Lords. The toll is calculated by the wronged party's estimate of their loss. The toll is paid in silver. The silver is melted and poured into the canal. The canal remembers the weight. The weight is your apology.

What is the most important festival? The Dyeing of the Waters (spring). The dyers empty their vats into the canals. The water turns red, blue, green, gold. The colours are the year's fashions. The fashions are set by the Matron. The Matron's favourite colour is the one that sells best. The best colour is the one she dyed her own hair.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The canals are not natural. They were dug by a Sidhi engineer who was paid in promises. The promises were broken. The engineer cursed the city. The curse is that every ninth drop of water is a tear. The tears belong to the engineer. She is still crying. She has been crying for nine centuries.

42.1 Silkstrand — “City of Bridges and Silk”

Quick Reference

Tagline: Every bridge is a deal. Every current carries a secret.

The Matron (Elite): “In this city, every bridge is a bargain and every current carries a rumor. The deals struck in our shadows never quite fade, and the waters remember every handshake. Trust the silk, not the smile.”

Bobbin-Runner (Commoner): “I can cross this city faster than any grown-up, and I know which planks creak and which merchants lie. The bridges remember every step, and the canals carry more secrets than fish. Stay off the water after midnight — the night-boats don’t carry cargo, they carry whispers.”

Genre / Mood: Mercantile adventure, Renaissance urban intrigue, seedy underbelly, high stakes.

Starting Location: Three-Queens Bridge, crowded with market stalls, its stones worn smooth by centuries of footsteps. A Guildmistress with a silver whistle offers a stamped chit. “The Exchange boils today,” she says. “And something in the canals remembers your face. Bring me three bolts of untaxed crimson before the closing bell, or the Archivolt will have your name on a dead notary’s list. And watch your back on the Ropewalk — the bravos are hungry.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Silkstrand is a city strung across canals and arched bridges, a place where every crossing is a negotiation and every current carries coin. The silk looms never sleep, the Exchange never closes, and the Archivolt’s notaries seal fates with a drop of wax. Merchants rise and fall with the tide of the market, bravos carve reputations on the planks of Three-Queens Bridge, and the city’s underworld runs on whispers and borrowed keys. The Matron rules from her palazzo stairs with velvet and iron, but the city itself belongs to silk, silver, and shadow. What you notice first: The clash of water against ancient stone. The constant rumble of cart wheels on bridge planks. The way every handshake lingers a heartbeat too long — as if both parties are checking for hidden blades.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never name a rival while crossing a bridge at night. The water remembers, and the curse you send may come back wrapped around your own throat.

Regional Mood: Silk, Steel, and Shadow

Here, fortune is written in silk and sealed with a handshake. Silkstrand is not lawless — it is layered. Above the tide lies the world of guild charters, notarial wax, and the Matron’s velvet justice. Below the bridges, in the weeping arches and the midnight boat lanes, a quieter economy runs on whispers, borrowed keys, and the careful omission of names. The city’s bravos duel for reputation on Three-Queens Bridge while factors bribe clerks in the Archivolt. Every alliance is a knot that can be pulled loose. Every fortune is a thread that can be cut.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (permits, passes, seals) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo silk and water motifs — threads that bind, currents that remember, bargains that stain the hand.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Duel Etiquette: Duels fought on bridges draw crowds eager to wager on blood. Refusing stains a name worse than losing. The winner may claim the loser’s bridge token (if any) as a trophy.
- Canal Omens: Canals run strange colors at dawn; red foretells riots, blue brings calm, black means a curse has awakened. A successful Wits + Lore test (DV 3) allows a character to interpret the omen and gain +1 die on the next roll to avoid or exploit the coming event.
- Matron’s Seal: Any contract bearing her seal is law — but the Matron is known to rescind seals without warning, leaving debts tangled. A seal may be challenged by producing an older Matron’s seal; the older one always holds.
- Exchange Volatility Clock [6]: Tracks market instability. Each time a major cargo is seized, a trade route is cut, or a merchant defaults, tick the clock. At 3: prices of all goods increase by 1 Supply. At 6: a panic hits — the Exchange closes for 1d3 days, and all outstanding contracts are voided unless witnessed by the Matron.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Ledger Saint — The Witness. Every transaction is a prayer. Every signature is a confession.
 - The Unbroken Seal — Mykkiel. Contracts are sacred. To break one is to break the city.
 - The Tide Father — Khemesh. The canal’s hunger; the interest on a loan never repaid.
 - The Lantern Bearer — The Traveler. The light that guides lost ships — and lost debtors.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- Saint Lazarus of the Unfinished Ledger (The Witness): The Archivolt notaries keep a sealed archive of unwritten contracts — promises that were never stamped. The Order of the Witness claims that reading even one of these binds the reader to fulfil it. The Matron has never opened the archive. The Red Clerk has, and his seal now weeps blood.

- Saint Fina of the Silken Veil (Isoka): The Basilica of Azerin has a side chapel dedicated to the Shedding Saint, whose mosaic shows a silkworm breaking its cocoon. Pilgrims who leave a confession there wake the next morning having forgotten one sin — but also one kindness they received. The Guildmistress permits the chapel because the offerings keep the silk guilds wealthy.
- The Weavers of Mercy (The Silk-Shrouded): A hospice near the Salt Gate is run by grey-robed healers who ask no payment. They are tolerated because they treat wounded condottieri for free, but the Black Purse faction suspects they also erase debts — ledgers left near their doors have been found blank. The Order’s rule: “You do not pay back. You pay forward. But woe to the one who strikes a healer.”
- The Ledger of Unbroken Promises (The Syndicate Seal): A small but influential order of notaries based in the Archivolt. They adjudicate disputes over contracts, cargo claims, and bridge tolls. Their judgments are always delivered in triplicate, and they accept no bribes — only binding oaths. Those who lie before a Covenant judge find that their next three shipments are impounded.
- The Ninth: In any Silkstrand scene, the ninth bridge crossed in a day leads somewhere unexpected. The wise stop at eight and take a boat. Those who cross the ninth are said to hear a faint laugh from the water — and their contracts are never quite fulfilled.

Silkstrand Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Canal: Toss a crust into the water before crossing a new bridge. Ignore the first Bridge Riot penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Thread: Tie a single knot in a scrap of silk. Cancel Seal Counterfeit or take –1 die on your next negotiation (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Water: Whisper a debtor’s name into the canal at dawn. Gain +1 Effect when collecting from them this scene, but mark Obligation to the Archivolt. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from city watch or rival merchants.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby crowds or bridge traffic.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for trackers or customs.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favorable tide.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Bridge bailiff or guildmaster becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to crowd movement or flood.
- Foe Appears: A rival merchant or hired bravo arrives on scene.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Silkstrand (Bridges & Trade): Bridge planks shift underfoot, bargains restructure mid-speech, coins change hands without touch.
- Silkstrand (Canals): Water levels rise without warning, gondolas block routes, a sudden fog hides a rival's approach.
- Silkstrand (Duel Culture): Challenges are issued mid-conversation, seconds appear from the crowd, honor prices rise with each breath.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Stealth): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Fog Bank.
- Cut the Bridge (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a bridge token is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Flood (Resolve + Athletics): On a hit in Flood Siren, you pick who keeps their footing; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (three-phase foes)

- The Corseted Ledger (cursed accounting bound in silk) — Phases: Friendly Audit → Retroactive Debts → Names as Collateral. Cracks: burn one forged seal in public; settle a rival's debt at cost; wash the book on Flood-Stairs at high bell.
- Archivolt Ragman (collector of “missing entries”) — Phases: Quiet Inserts → Paper Hunts → Bridge Vetoes. Cracks: win a duel for precedent; expose a double-entry altar; break his pen with the Matron's Seal.
- The Tide of Unpaid Interest (a walking loan) — Phases: Grace Period → Collection → Foreclosure. Cracks: pay in stories; find the original debtor; renegotiate the contract under a neutral bridge.

Patronage & Power

In Silkstrand, power flows through commerce, connections, and the careful weaving of influence. The Matron maintains control through a web of guilds, factors, and condottieri, each bound by contracts and customs that shift like the tides. Merchants rise and fall with the Exchange, while the city’s bravos and smugglers operate in the spaces between law and profit.

For the GM: Patronage in Silkstrand revolves around access — to bridges, to warehouses, to the Exchange floor itself. Rewards often take the form of permits, seals, or safe passage that can be leveraged into greater influence. To emphasize this:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (seals, tokens, contracts) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided.
- Let rival guilds issue conflicting charters, forcing players to choose whose favor matters more.
- Use the bridges, markets, and Exchange as arenas for social contests, where reputation and connections determine success.

In Silkstrand, your word is your bond, and your bond determines whether you rise or drown.

Chapter 43

Midh-Akhaz

The Violet Gate.

Coin talks. Grass walks. Blood settles the rest.

I am a Horse-Braid Apprentice. I tie a new knot for every paying passenger. My hair is a map of debts — and grudges. The wind carries names, not ledgers, but here, in the shadow of the Oasis Compact, both trade and oaths change hands. Do not mistake our patience for weakness. The grass remembers every hoof that crossed it.

Midh Ahkaz is not a city. It is a wound that learned to trade. A day's ride north of the Ecktorian border, it squats on the edge of the Violet Steppe like a patient wolf. No walls. No gates. Just rings of felt tents, latrine trenches, and the smell of horse sweat, cedar smoke, and the faint copper tang of blood money.

The grass grows tall enough to hide a body. The locals cut it back at dawn — but never at dusk, because the things that crawl through it at night have sharp teeth and no patience for property lines. Ecktorian emissaries call this place “the Brink.” Caravan guards call it home. Thieves call it paradise.

Every morning, the Coin-Weigh Tribunal opens its scales under a canvas dome. Every night, the Dust Market auctions goods that fell off a wagon — or off a corpse. The Khatun's word is law until someone stronger speaks. And in the Silver Stall Stable, a horse thief can buy a fresh mount with a story and a knife.

Never refuse the guest-cup. The first pour is courtesy. The second is negotiation. The third is a blood-price unspoken. And the fourth — the fourth means you're already dead, you just haven't stopped breathing.

— Horse-Braid Apprentice, who ties a knot for every secret she carries

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Curd cheese and flatbread — the cheese is from the Ykrul herds, the bread is baked in the embers of a dung fire. It tastes of smoke and the open sky. The poor dip it in salt; the rich dip it in honey stolen from a border hive.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count horses. Midh Ahkaz children are taught the eight gaits of a healthy mount: walk, trot, canter, gallop, pace, amble, rack, and the ninth — the death-sprint that only a stolen horse knows. The ninth gait is never taught; it is discovered when the rider's life depends on it.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their braids. Ykrul warriors braid their hair with clan colours; Vilikari traders wear oiled braids with silver beads. A stranger whose braids are loose has just fought. A stranger whose braids are cut has lost a blood-price. A stranger with no braids is either a slave or a ghost. Neither stays long.

What is the most common crime? Grass-right forgery — but forgery is not a crime, it is a negotiation. The Oasis Compact issues branded sticks for grazing rights. A clever carver can duplicate the brand. The penalty is exile into the tall grass at dusk. The grass does not have a court of appeals.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Khatun is not the only ruler. The Silver Stall Stable master knows where every stolen horse sleeps. The Dust Market auctioneer knows the price of every sin. And the Iron Well keeper knows the name of everyone who will die before the next grass moon. The three of them meet once a season. No one records what they say. The grass records it.

Where do people go when they die? To the grass. The dead are not buried. Their bodies are carried beyond the caravan rings and left for the wolves and the wind. The grass grows tall and green where a body falls. A patch of deep violet is a sign that the dead were not properly mourned. The locals avoid those patches.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a blood-price in silver, weighed on the Coin-Weigh Tribunal's scales. If the scale tips in your favour, you are forgiven. If it tips against you, you owe a horse. If the scale balances, you owe a story — and the story must be true, and the true story must make the wronged party weep. If it does not, you owe a finger.

What is the most important festival? The Grass Moon (autumn equinox). The violet seed-heads glow under moonlight. The tribes ride in a great circle, singing the names of the dead. At midnight, the Khatun pours a cup of water onto the earth. If the water sinks, the winter will be mild. If it pools, the winter will be hungry. If it steams, the Hollow is walking. The festival ends at dawn. No one sleeps.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Oasis Compact's original seal was not lost. It was stolen by a Vilikari factor who wanted to control water rights. The factor is still alive, living in the Foreign Quarter under a false name. The seal is hidden in a hollow horse skull buried under the Grass Ring. The skull belonged to the Khatun's favourite stallion. The stallion did not die of old age.

43.1 Midh Ahkaz — “The Violet Gate”

Quick Reference

Tagline: Coin talks. Grass walks. Blood settles the rest.

Khatun of the Ring (Ykrul Elder): “The wind carries names, not ledgers. But here, in the shadow of the Oasis Compact, both trade and oaths change hands. Do not mistake our patience for weakness. The grass remembers every hoof that crossed it.”

Vilikari Factor (Night Market Regular): “Ecktoria calls it uncivilized. We call it unbeatable. No tariffs, no seals, no questions. Coin talks. The rest walks.”

Genre / Mood: Frontier grit, steppe noir, law of the rope and the blade.

Starting Location: The Violet Bazaar at dusk — torches gutter, braids slap against leather vests, and a one-eyed horse trader spits into the dust at your feet. “You’re new. The Oasis Well runs low, the Khatun’s coughing blood, and someone’s been paying counterfeit silver. Pick a problem — or I’ll pick one for you.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Midh Ahkaz is not a city. It is a wound that learned to trade. A day’s ride north of the Ecktorian border, it squats on the edge of the Violet Steppe like a patient wolf. No walls. No gates. Just rings of felt tents, latrine trenches, and the smell of horse sweat, cedar smoke, and the faint copper tang of blood money.

The grass grows tall enough to hide a body. The locals cut it back at dawn — but never at dusk, because the things that crawl through it at night have sharp teeth and no patience for property lines. Ecktorian emissaries call this place “the Brink.” Caravan guards call it home. Thieves call it paradise.

Every morning, the Coin-Weigh Tribunal opens its scales under a canvas dome. Every night, the Dust Market auctions goods that fell off a wagon — or off a corpse. The Khatun’s word is law until someone stronger speaks. And in the Silver Stall Stable, a horse thief can buy a fresh mount with a story and a knife.

What you notice first: The constant low drumming of hooves — a heartbeat you feel in your teeth. The way every merchant has a scale on their table and a knife within reach. The braids in every horseman’s mane, each knot a story, a debt, a threat.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never refuse the guest-cup. The first pour is courtesy. The second is negotiation. The third is a blood-price unspoken. And the fourth — the fourth means you’re already dead, you just haven’t stopped breathing.

Western Steppe vs. Eastern Steppe (GM Sidebar)

The Ykrul divide their world into two great grass seas:

Western Steppe (Violet Prairie): Rolling, fertile, forgiving. The grass grows tall enough to hide a crouched rider, but the land is laced with caravanserais, seasonal wells, and the smoke of permanent camps. This is where Midh Ahkaz sits — the soft underbelly of the steppe, where trade happens and clans winter. The violet seed-heads give the prairie its name.

Eastern Steppe (True Steppe): Vast, dry, harsh. Shared with the Kuvani horse-clans, it stretches east of the Valewood. Grass is shorter, winds are colder, and a rider can see a day's ride in every direction. The Ostrihari who appear in Midh Ahkaz are from the eastern fringes of the Western Steppe — they speak with a harder accent, braid their horses' tails differently, and carry bows of horn and sinew, not wood. Ykrul of the Eastern Steppe are rarely seen in the Western.

Why this matters: A Ykrul from the Eastern Steppe might find Midh Ahkaz almost claustrophobic. A trader from the Violet Prairie might feel lost in the east. Use the contrast to create tension between clans or to flavour foreign visitors.

Regional Mood: Wind, Grass, and a Knife in the Back

Midh Ahkaz thrives on movement — and on the friction that movement creates. Caravans arrive from every direction: Ykrul horse-tribes from the deep steppe, Ostrihari mercenaries with horn bows and longer grudges, Vilikari traders who keep two ledgers (one for the tax man, one for the grave), and the occasional bold Ecktorian factor with a silver tongue and a hidden dagger. The city's "law" is the Oasis Compact — a shifting web of seasonal rights, grazing permits, and arbitration courts held under open sky. Disputes are settled by the Bowl (fairness) then the Board (geometry). A broken promise can cost a herd. A kept oath can buy a ford for a generation.

But when the Bowl spills and the Board cracks, the real law is the one you carry on your belt. The grass will hide your body — or someone else's.

Starting Location: The Violet Bazaar, a sprawling market of felt tents and chalk circles, where horse traders shout over the jingle of brass bridles. A Vilikari merchant with oiled braids hands you a sealed letter. "The Coin-Weigh Tribunal suspects a counterfeit seal. Find the forger before the Grass Moon, or the contract on your head becomes public." Behind him, a drunk Ostrihari is buying a knife he'll use before dawn.

(Ring/Well/Cairn) The Oasis Well where water shares are drawn — the token-keeper has a scarred face and a heavier hand than he should. Counting pebbles placed on stone ledges by memory, not sight. The distant smoke of a Steppe Ranger campfire — or maybe a grass fire. Either way, it's moving toward you.

Spades — Places

2. Violet Bazaar — Felt stalls, chalk circles, horse traders and rumor merchants. The chalk circles are for disputes. Step inside and speak truth — or pay in grass. Blood washes off the chalk, but the stain stays. '[TRADE]'
3. Coin-Weigh Tribunal — Tariff court under a canvas dome; scales of bronze and iron. The scales were blessed by a dying Sky-Speaker. They tip even when the wind is still. The clerk has never smiled. '[JUSTICE]'
4. Oasis Well — Stone-rimmed pool, token-keeper with a leather bag of water rights. Each token is a carved pebble. Lose it, and your herd drinks dust. The keeper's knife is sharper than his tongue. '[SURVIVAL]'
5. Steppe Ranger Camp — Tent line on the eastern edge; trackers, scouts, feud mediators. The rangers wear wolf tails. They do not smile — they wait. Their campfire is never allowed to go out. '[WILD]'

6. Caravan Rings — Concentric circles of wagon shelters; fires lit inward, watch posts on ox carts. The inner ring is for sworn allies. Outsiders sleep in the second ring, coin in hand — and a knife in the boot. ‘[TRAVEL]’
7. Sky-Speaker’s Cairn — Stone heap atop a low hill; wind-knot ropes and bones. The shaman leaves offerings of horsehair. The wind carries his prayers to Kuva — and sometimes his curses. ‘[RITUAL]’
8. Dust Market — No-questions auction at the city’s edge; stolen goods, cursed relics, bad memories. The auctioneer wears a hooded mask. No one knows his face. No one has asked twice. The last man who did now sells his own teeth. ‘[UNDERWORLD]’
9. Silver Stall Stable — Remount station; horses for hire, gossip for free, blood for more. The stable master has three fingers on his left hand. He lost the others in a bet over a mare. He won the bet. ‘[TRAVEL]’
10. Grass Ring — Ritual dueling ground; mourners and bookies share benches. The grass grows back faster after a duel. The dead fertilize the peace. The bookies pay out before the body cools. ‘[COMBAT]’
- J Foreign Quarter — Ecktorian, Vhasian, and Viterran merchants in permanent felt mansions. The Ecktorian envoy winters here. He has not left in five years. He has a price on his head in three countries — but Midh Ahkaz doesn’t extradite. ‘[POLITICS]’
- Q Khatun’s Ring — Largest tent, carpeted with woven battle scenes; the old chieftain’s seat. The carpet is made of enemy cloaks. Each sash is a surrendered banner. The air smells of smoke, old blood, and the fear of petitioners. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
- K Under-Arcades — Earthen tunnels below the bazaar; root-walled, bone-dusted. The walls are packed with bone dust and old burrows. The dead whisper route tips — for a price. The price is never coin. ‘[STEALTH]’
- A Iron Well — Ancient Aeler shaft, now used for vengeance contracts and whispered names. The water tastes of rust and memory. Those who drink never lie again — or never speak. The keeper writes the names of the condemned in ash. The ash floats. ‘[DEATH]’

(Horse/Tally/Token) Sky-Speaker’s apprentice with a drum and a dream; Ostrikari arms-master selling short bows (he names each after a dead rival); Ykrul elder counting braids (her hair is a map of debts).

Hearts — People & Factions

3. Ostrikari Arms-Master — Selling short bows and longer grudges; fights for coin. He names each bow after a dead rival. The bows never miss. His left ear is missing — a debt he paid in flesh. ‘[COMBAT]’
4. Coin-Weigh Clerk — Ink-stained, patient, scales in her eyes; never lies, never forgives. She records weights in blood. A single drop seals a verdict. She has never been wrong — or so she says. ‘[JUSTICE]’
5. Vilikari Factor — Braided, oiled, quick with a smile and a second ledger. His caravan has three names. Only the real one buys safe passage. The other two are for the tax man and the grave. ‘[TRADE]’

6. Steppe Ranger — Tracker with a wolf-tail cloak and a debt to the Sky-Speaker. He never draws his bow unless watched. Hunger is his real weapon. His arrows are fletched with crow feathers. ‘[WILD]’
7. Tokan (Ykrul Scout) — Mute, sharp-eyed, always smelling the wind; her ears miss nothing. She signs with her knuckles. Three taps is "danger." One tap is "run." No taps means you're already dead. ‘[STEALTH]’
8. Ecktoria Emissary — Proud, wax-sealed, fuming at the "primitive" customs. He carries a copy of Imperial Code that he has never opened. The flies love his ink. The locals love his purse. ‘[POLITICS]’
9. Sky-Speaker's Shadow — Elder's quiet apprentice; listens more than the wind. She can name every clan's sky-omen. She cannot name her own origin. Her eyes are the colour of ash. ‘[RITUAL]’
10. Knot-Keeper (Tulkani) — Counts caravan promises with a rope of nine strands. Each knot is a contract. Untie one and the deal dissolves. Cut one and the debtor dies in his sleep. No one knows how. ‘[SOCIAL]’
- J Dust Market Auctioneer — Hooded, genderless voice; knows the weight of every sin. The hammer is a thigh bone. The block is a skull altar from the Direwood. The skull's jaw moves when the price is right. ‘[UNDERWORLD]’
- Q Khatun of the Ring — Grey-haired, one-eyed, still deadly at sixty; speaks for seven clans. She lost her eye to a Linn raider. She killed him with his own hook. She keeps the hook on her belt. ‘[AUTHORITY]’
- K Kuva's Voice (Wandering Priest) — Weathered, ash-marked, offers omen readings for grass. He prays to the sky by throwing bones. The bones never lie — they just mislead. The ash on his forehead is from a fire that hasn't been lit yet. ‘[RITUAL]’
- A Iron Well Keeper (Vengeance Broker) — Mute, scarred, accepts names written in ash. A drink from the well costs a memory. A death costs a fortune. His ledger is written on human skin. The names move. ‘[DEATH]’

(Drought/Feud/Blight) Dry well cuts water rations — the token-keeper has a list, and the list has a knife mark beside your name; blood-price feud spills into the bazaar — a boy's corpse lies in a chalk circle, and no one will claim it; locust swarm from the east — the grass blackens, and the swarm leaves a sticky residue that smells of burnt honey and dread.

Clubs — Complications/Threats

2. Dry Well Ration — Water shares halved; prices spike, tempers fray. ‘[SURVIVAL]’ ‘[SOCIAL]’ The token-keeper has a list. The list has a knife mark beside your name. He didn't put it there.
3. Blood-Price Feud — A killing in the Horse Ring; kinsmen demand wergild in coin or flesh. ‘[DEBT]’ ‘[COMBAT]’ The victim's tribe drums the death rhythm. Every beat is a deadline. The bookies are already taking bets on the retaliation.
4. Locust Swarm — Grass blackens; caravans stranded, fodder worthless. ‘[WEATHER]’ ‘[TRAVEL]’ The swarm leaves a sticky residue. It smells of burnt honey and dread. The locusts spell words as they fly — sometimes a name, sometimes a warning.
5. Counterfeit Coins — Light silver floods the Dust Market; Oasis Compact inquiry. ‘[DEBT]’ ‘[JUSTICE]’ The counterfeit coins are warm. The real ones are cold. Touch quickly. The forged has a scar on his left thumb.

6. Grass Fire — Wind-whipped flame from the east; evacuations, scorched trade paths. ‘[WEATHER]’ ‘[DISASTER]’ The smoke spells a name. Yours. Or your debtor’s. Hard to tell. The fire moves against the wind.
 7. Horse Sickness — Contagion at the Silver Stall Stable; quarantines, lost mounts. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[TRAVEL]’ The sick horses dream. Their screams sound like your last argument. The stable master is weeping. He never weeps.
 8. Khatun’s Illness — Old chieftain fading; succession knives out. ‘[POLITICS]’ ‘[DEBT]’ Her death will split seven clans. The Sword Oath lasts one year. The poisoner is already spending his payment.
 9. Census Raid — Ecktorian legion patrol “just visiting”; tensions high, bribes higher. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ ‘[SOCIAL]’ The patrol leader wears a mask of imperial wax. Pull it off and see a dead man’s face. The face is yours — from a life you haven’t lived yet.
 10. Sky-Omen (Red Wind) — Dust storm from the Ashaani desert; all navigation Desperate. ‘[WEATHER]’ ‘[FEAR]’ The dust tastes of iron and old blood. Breathe it and dream of falling. The wind whispers a name. Listen and you’ll answer.
- J Oath Challenge — A Kon’reh master demands geometry arbitration; your bond is the stake. ‘[DEBT]’ ‘[SOCIAL]’ The board is a painted skull. The pieces are horse teeth. The master hasn’t lost in forty years. He’s due.
- Q Tariff Strike — Coin-Weigh clerks refuse to audit; trade freezes, tempers explode. ‘[JUSTICE]’ ‘[TRADE]’ The clerks chant a counting rhyme. Stop them before they reach nine. The ninth number is not a number. It is a name.
- K Duel for Rights — Two clans claim the same well; witnesses needed to prove water share. ‘[COMBAT]’ ‘[JUSTICE]’ The duel is fought with blunt spears. First blood wins the well. Both bleed. The well doesn’t care.
- A Kuva’s Vengeance — The sky itself turns; hail, lightning, and a voice from the clouds. ‘[DEATH]’ ‘[PATRON]’ The voice names a sinner. Your name. The hail has teeth. The lightning writes your confession in the grass.

(Writ/Token/Pass) Grass Right for one season of grazing — a branded stick that warms when the grass is healthy; Oath-Bead to compel a Kon’reh master’s arbitration — the bead is a single horsehair knot, tightening when the master speaks truth.

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage

2. Grass Right — One season of grazing on a named meadow; herders pay you tribute. ‘[TRAVEL]’ ‘[SOCIAL]’ The right is a branded stick. Burn it to end the lease — or renew. The brand is a wolf’s head. It howls when the meadow is overgrazed.
3. Oath-Bead — A single knot of horsehair; compels a Kon’reh master to arbitrate your dispute. ‘[JUSTICE]’ The bead grows warm when the master speaks truth. Cold when he lies. He has never felt it grow cold.

ranger marks your name on his tent pole. He never forgets a favor. He also never forgets a slight.

6. Vilikari Voucher — No-questions cargo space on three caravans; smuggle as you will. ‘[TRADE]’ ‘[STEALTH]’ The voucher is a strip of oiled leather. The factor’s scent guides the mules. The mules are smarter than the factor.
 7. Census Waiver — Ecktorian patrol leaves you alone for one crossing; paper shield. ‘[AUTHORITY]’ The waiver is stamped with a bear. The bear’s eyes follow you. The stamp is a lie. The waiver still works.
 8. Khatun’s Whistle — Summon a small warband once (Cap 3) for a single scene. ‘[COMBAT]’ The whistle is a hollow horse tooth. Blow it and the grass shivers. The riders come. They expect payment in stories.
 9. Sky-Speaker’s Omen — One weather forecast that cannot fail; plan your escape. ‘[WEATHER]’ The omen is a bone thrown into fire. Read the cracks — carefully. The fire will answer. It will also ask.
 10. Silver Stall Chit — One free remount exchange; never be horseless. ‘[TRAVEL]’ The chit is a brass hoof. Present it and the stable master nods once. The horse will be fast. The horse may also be cursed.
- J Black Ledger Entry — A written promise from a rival, witnessed by three camp elders. ‘[DEBT]’ ‘[SOCIAL]’ The entry is written in ash on felt. Wash it and the vow dissolves. Burn it and the rival dies in his sleep. No one knows why.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are narrative permits (grazing rights, oaths, witnesses) that shift Position rather than demand a roll.
- If any A appears, echo grass and wind motifs — shifting alliances, debts that ride with the seasons, the sky as witness, a body that vanishes into the tall grass by morning.
- The violet seed-heads of the steppe are a recurring omen: when they glow under moonlight, a spirit walks; when they shed, a caravan will be late — or never arrive.

Additional Features (Frontier Grit)

- Kon’reh Arbitration: Disputes are settled on a board painted on hide. Winners gain seasonal rights. Losers pay in grass or labor — or blood if they can’t afford either. The board is set up in the Grass Ring. The spectators bet on the outcome.

- Grass Omens: The steppe flickers violet when rain is near. When the seed-heads droop at noon, a blood-feud approaches. When they stand straight at midnight, the Hollow walks. No one stays outside when the seed-heads stand straight.
- Khatun’s Braid: The chieftain’s hair holds the memory of every oath she swore. Cutting a braid voids a promise — but the severed braid becomes a curse token. The current Khatun has nine braids. She is saving the tenth for something important.
- The Law of the Rope: Midh Ahkaz has no jail. Serious offenders are tied to a post in the Grass Ring and left for the steppe. If they survive the night, they are free — and owe a blood-price to the family of their victim. No one has survived the night in seven years.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Wind Father — The Traveler. He who reads the grass and knows the safe routes — for a share of the cargo.
 - The Scale Mother — Mykkiel. She who weighs the oath and the blood-price; her clerks carry knives.
 - The Grass King — Grimmir. The wild that pushes back against the ring of tents; he demands a sacrifice of horseflesh each spring.
 - The Toothless One — Malachai. A silver coin in the dust market that guarantees a fair deal — until the grass remembers.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Bitter Root: Daughters of the Cord run a "free soup" wagon near the Dust Market. They ask no coin — but they measure your shadow. A renegade Sister hides among the horse-braid apprentices, trying to untie her cord from a blood-price feud.
- The Threshold Compendium: Saikou Ira once tracked a ghoul to the Under-Arcades. He left a silver mirror in the wall. It still shows the ghoul’s face. The ghoul is still watching.
- Malachai, the Chained Angel: A broken Kon’reh board at the Iron Well is said to compel truth. Players who touch it gain +1 die to resist lies — but mark 1 Obligation to Malachai. The board was broken by a merchant who lied about a horse. The horse was a demon.
- The Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire: Midh Ahkaz psions are called "Wind-Readers." They sense lies by the tremor in grass. The Khatun employs two; they never speak to each other. They communicate by writing in the dust. The dust blows away after each message.
- The Ninth: In any Midh Ahkaz scene, the ninth horse table in the Violet Bazaar sells nothing but bad advice. Spend a Boon to reroll a failed negotiation — but the advice may haunt you. The table is always empty except at midnight. At midnight, a hooded figure sits there. No one knows who.

Midh Ahkaz Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Hoofprint Pour: Pour a cup of water into the first hoofprint of a new horse. Ignore the first Horse Sickness penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Braid the Knot: Tie a strand of mane hair around your wrist. Cancel Counterfeit Coin or take –1 die on your next Charisma roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Grass: Whisper a debtor’s name into the wind at noon. Gain +1 Effect when collecting from them this scene, but mark Obligation to a Sky-Speaker. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table (Midh Ahkaz)

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw attention from Steppe Rangers or Coin-Weigh clerks.
- Noise: The sound carries across the grass; a rival clan's scout overhears.
- Trace: Hoofprints, broken grass, or losing an arrow marks your path.
- Delay: A water ration takes longer; a horse tires without rest.
- Grass Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Border riders converge on your position; a horn sounds.
- Position Lost: You lose high ground/cover/the wind due to a grass fire or horse stampede.
- Foe Appears: A Vengeance broker, Ostrikari sell-sword, or clan champion arrives.
- Gear Trouble: A bridle breaks, bow string snaps, waterskin leaks.
- Oath Hearsay: A false rumor about your oath reaches the wrong ear.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional horsemen, blood-price hunters, or Dust Market thugs arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A horse goes lame, seal ring cracks, trade ledger burns.

- Midh Ahkaz (Oath & Sky): Clouds spell forgotten names, wind carries false testimony, a duel's outcome shifts with the sun, a violet dusk signals a spirit.
- Midh Ahkaz (Horse & Bow): An arrow splits in flight, a horse refuses a rider, a bowstring sings a dying clansman's tune, a braid comes undone at the wrong moment.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Ride): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Dust Cloud.
- Cut the Herd (Presence + Sway): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a Grass Right is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Stampede (Resolve + Survival): On a hit in Horse Sickness, you pick which mount survives; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (three-phase foes)

- The Counting Circle (cursed scale bound to the Oasis) — Phases: Fair Auditing → Retroactive Drought → Naming of Debtors. Cracks: burn a counterfeit token in the Oasis well; settle a seven-clan water debt; let a Sky-Speaker rebless the scale.
- Grass Reaver (vengeful horse-lord, half-legend) — Phases: Hoof Drum → Ghost Herd → Blood-Price Ride. Cracks: confess a broken oath at his cairn; return a stolen foal; outrun him on a borrowed horse.
- Coin-Weigh Wraith (greedy merchant who sold his shadow) — Phases: Tally of the Lost → Ledger Chain → Crack the Seal. Cracks: pay a forgotten wergild; break his contract with a witnessed error; let the Iron Well drink his name.

Patronage & Power in Midh Ahkaz

In Midh Ahkaz, power flows through horseflesh, water rights, and the geometry of oaths. The Khatun rules by consensus, but the true authority rests with the Oasis Compact — a loose council of clan elders, Vilikari factors, and Steppe Rangers who interpret the Wind Law. When the Compact fails, the Grass Ring becomes the courtroom, and the duel is the verdict.

For the GM – Actionable Examples:

- A player who wins a Kon’reh match earns a Grass Right (Diamond). That right could be contested by a rival clan the very next session — forcing a rematch or a chase across the prairie. The grass will be cut for the rematch. The loser’s grass will be salted.
- A Water Share token is stolen. The thief leaves a violet seed-head as a signature. Tracking them leads to a seasonal camp where debt is repaid not in coin but in stories — and where the storyteller’s shadow is just a little too short.
- The Khatun’s illness (Club) is not natural. A Vilikari factor (Heart) knows the poisoner’s name but demands a Black Ledger Entry (J Diamond) in exchange — a dangerous witness the player must then protect. The witness is a child who cannot speak. She writes in the dust. The wind keeps erasing her words.

These hooks turn the generator entries into immediate playable situations.

Chapter 44

The Ways Between

Spiritways & Veilways.

You are reading this sentence twice. The first time, you understood it. The second time, it understood you.

I am a Lost Pilgrim. Or I was. Or I will be. The paths here don't care about tenses. They care about which version of you arrives at the end. I've been walking for—no. That's a lie. The walking has been walking me. I forget which of us started first.

The Ways Between do not measure miles. They measure choices. A wrong turn might lead to yesterday. A right turn might lead to a version of yourself who made a different decision and is still alive to regret it. The mist does not hide landmarks. It hides destinations. And sometimes, when you walk long enough, you realise the destination was never the point. The point was the moment you turned left instead of right. The point was the breath you held at the crossroads. The point was the name you did not speak.

Here is the secret the Wayfinder doesn't want you to know: there is no Wayfinder. There is only the road, and the road is a liar. It tells you it wants you to find your way. What it actually wants is to watch you choose. Every reflection in every pool is a version of you that chose differently. They are all still walking. They are all still watching. And they are all still waiting for you to make the choice that finally lets them stop.

I met myself on a bridge once. They were coming from the opposite direction. We stopped. We looked at each other. We said nothing. We both knew that if one of us spoke, the other would have to listen. And listening is a kind of debt.

Never answer a question asked by a reflection. The answer will bind you to the path you did not choose. But here is the second secret: not answering is also a choice. And the road is very, very patient.

— The Wayfinder, who exists only in the moment a choice is made, and who is not the same person at the end of this sentence as at the beginning

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Nothing. There is no breakfast in the Ways Between. There is no morning. There is no hunger. There is only the walking. The walking is sustenance.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To forget. Children born in the Ways Between do not learn. They remember. They remember the path they took to be born. The path has eight turns. The ninth turn is the birth. The birth is a choice. The child does not know they chose.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their direction. A stranger walking toward you may be coming from your future. A stranger walking away may be going to your past. A stranger walking beside you may be yourself from a timeline where you did not turn left. Do not ask them which. They will not answer.

What is the most common crime? Stealing—but stealing is not a crime, it is a paradox. A thief in the Ways Between steals a memory from a version of you that no longer exists. The memory never belonged to you. You cannot miss it. You will miss it anyway.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The Ways Between are not between anything. They are the only thing that exists. The solid ground you remember—the cities, the roads, the hearths—is the dream. The Ways Between are the waking. The waking is the walking. The walking never ends.

Where do people go when they die? Deeper. The Ways Between have no surface, no bottom, no end. The dead walk deeper. The deeper they walk, the less they remember. When they remember nothing, they become the path. The path is the walking. The walking is the dead.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You cannot. Apologies require memory. Memory requires a self. The Ways Between erase both. The only apology is to stop walking. Stopping is not an option.

What is the most important festival? There are no festivals. There is only the moment between heartbeats when you realise you have been walking for nine years and you do not remember why. That moment is the festival. Celebrate it by taking the next step.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The Wayfinder is not a person. It is the road itself, dreaming of a traveller who will finally reach the end. The end does not exist. The road knows this. The road dreams anyway.

44.1 The Ways Between — Obishaal, the Realm of Dreams and Death

Quick Reference

Tagline: Every dream is a door. Every door is a judgment. The dead dream forever; the living borrow their sleep.

The Wayfinder (Elite): “I exist only in the moment of choice, the breath between one path and another. Obishaal is not a place—it is a state. To guide here is to understand that every dream leads somewhere, but only the virtuous know which somewhere is worth the waking.”

Lost Pilgrim (Commoner): “The dead don’t leave. They just change addresses. Obishaal is their new neighborhood, and the rent is paid in virtue. If you’re lucky, you’ll only visit. If you’re not... you’ll find yourself climbing stairs that never end, and every landing offers a bargain you can’t refuse.”

Genre / Mood: Dream-death metaphysical, virtue-based ascent, temptation and fall, folk-surrealism.

Starting Location: A crossroad shrine of black glass stones, where travelers meet their reflections coming the other way. The shrine is silent except for the soft hum of the stones. A Backwards Pilgrim stands at the crossroads, facing the direction you came from. “The Thirteenth Stone speaks,” they say. “But the path chooses who arrives. What did you bury on the road here? The stones can smell it. And in Obishaal, every buried thing dreams of waking.”

Theme & Atmosphere

The Ways Between is a transit way, the eternal crossroads through Obishaal, the element of Dreams and Death, the eighth element after Fire, Life, Air, Fortune, Earth, Fate, Water, Dreams/Death. It is the realm where the settled dead go not to oblivion but to an ideal afterlife—a dream that reflects the life they lived. A farmer dreams of endless harvest; a warrior dreams of eternal battle; a merchant dreams of ledgers that never close. These dreams are real, and they are paradise or prisons.

The living may enter the Ways through thresholds of sleep, near-death, or deliberate ritual. Once inside, they find a landscape that shifts with their own psyche—but also with the weight of their choices. To ascend through the layers of Obishaal, a traveler must demonstrate virtue: honesty, courage, mercy, self-sacrifice. To fall is to yield to vice: greed, cowardice, cruelty, despair. Each layer is a test, and each test is a dream that tempts you to fail.

At the very bottom, pressed into the silt of the deepest dream, lies Ikasha, She Who Sleeps. Her sisters Inaea and Isoka imprisoned her there eons ago, for Ikasha dreamed of summoning and confronting the Clockwork Monad—a confrontation that, in their judgment, would unmake reality. Now Ikasha dreams fitfully, and her nightmares seep upward, infecting the layers above. Sometimes a traveler who falls far enough can hear her voice, offering escape in exchange for service—a service that would free her.

Between the layers drift the dead who have not yet found their final dream. They are the Unsettled, and they will trade memories, secrets, and virtues for a chance to ascend—or to pull you down with them.

What you notice first: The air tastes of copper and old keys. Your footsteps echo half a beat too late. The waystones are warm—and they pulse like hearts.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never answer a question asked by a reflection. The answer will bind you to the path you did not choose.

Regional Mood: The Dream That Remembers

Here, the dream is not a thing—it is a witness. It remembers every promise made at a deathbed, every lie told to a dying ear, every virtue you failed to keep. Obishaal does not forgive, but it does not forget either. It offers passage in exchange for truth. The longer you stay, the more the dream learns about you. By the time you reach your destination, you may find that the destination knows you better than you know yourself. Some travelers never leave. They become dream-echoes, their faces pressed into the glass of a forgotten dream, their names still warm on the lips of the next pilgrim.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (true names/safe passages/waywisdom) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo dream-road motifs—reflections that lie, paths that judge, destinations that choose the traveler. Also, the presence of an Ace hints that Ikasha's dream is particularly close.

Additional Features

- Dream-Logic Navigation: Any Ace introduces a metaphysical requirement (a sacrifice, a taboo, an exchange) that must be satisfied to pass. Name it at the table; the road will enforce it.

- Reflection Points: Face cards (J, Q, K) show alternate selves or unlived choices. Treat them as temporary NPCs or scene tags that can help, hinder, or tempt.
- Memory Currency: Diamonds may be traded for knowledge or safe passage as if they were memories. Describe the memory paid; the path (or its keeper) pays in kind.
- Virtue and Vice Clocks: Each character in Obishaal tracks a small personal Virtue [3] and Vice [3] clock. Virtue advances when they act with honesty, courage, mercy, or self-sacrifice. Vice advances when they act with greed, cowardice, cruelty, or despair. When one clock fills, the character ascends (Virtue) to a higher layer of Obishaal or falls (Vice) to a lower one. Ascension offers a boon; falling offers a temptation (a cursed gift from the layer's vice-spirit). The clocks reset after each layer transition. Reaching the bottom (Vice filled in the deepest layer) allows Ikasha to speak directly to the character.
- Ikasha's Whisper (Patron Intervention): When a character falls to the lowest layer (or deliberately seeks her out), they may hear Ikasha's voice. She offers a Fragment of Freedom: +2 dice to any roll involving escape, secrecy, or breaking bonds, but each use marks 1 Obligation to Ikasha and advances a Waking Dream [6] clock. When that clock fills, Ikasha uses the character as a vessel to attempt an escape—a campaign-level event.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Unnamed Guide — The Traveler. The road that appears only when you are lost.
 - The Mirror Listener — The Witness. The reflection that tells you what you need to hear, never what you want.
 - The Threshold Child — The Sealed Gate. The one who was never born, who guards the places where paths end.
 - The Echo King — The Ninth. The voice that answers when you speak to the empty road.
 - The Dreamer Below — Ikasha (imprisoned). She who sleeps and dreams of waking. Her whispers are bargains; her freedom is a promise.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Bitter Root: Daughters of the Cord know the Ways Between as the Cord's shadow. A lost Hollowed wanders here, its thread trailing into the mist. Follow it, and you may find a Sister who cut herself free—and who now tends Ikasha's dream.
- The Threshold Compendium: Saikou Ira's silver mirror shows the Ways Between as a tangled knot of unfulfilled obligations. He has walked three paths here. He will not speak of the fourth, where he glimpsed Ikasha's face.
- Malachai, the Chained Angel: A silver coin that never spends lies at every crossroads. Pick it up, and the road will offer you a shortcut—but the coin will reappear in your pocket at the next junction, heavier. In Obishaal, the coin is warm and pulses like a heartbeat.
- The Grey Wanderer's Grimoire: Psions call the Ways Between "the Stair." They climb it in their dreams, trading memories for glimpses of paths not yet walked. Some never wake. The Grey Wanderer claims that the Stair is Ikasha's spine.
- The Ninth: On any path in the Ways Between, the ninth step you take in a straight line will land on a threshold you did not see. The wise take eight steps, then pause to look around. In Obishaal, the ninth step is always a dream of falling.

Ways Between Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Stones: Crumble a crust at the base of a waystone. Ignore the first Waymark Lies penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Path: Tie a single knot in a piece of string and hang it from a milestone. Cancel Path Split or take -1 die on your next navigation roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Crossroads: Whisper a dead traveler’s name into the center stone. Gain +1 Effect when bargaining with a Toll-Taker this scene, but mark Obligation to the Wayfinder. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from path keepers or wayward spirits.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby travelers or memory echoes.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for trackers or reflection points.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or favorable path alignment.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: Toll-taker or wayward guide becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to path shift or reality thinning.
- Foe Appears: A memory-thief or forbidden path entity arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional wayward spirits, path entities, or alternate selves arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.
- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes - path loops/time shifts/reality fractures.
- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: The Wayfinder, Dead-Road Keeper, or Road’s Child intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically - reality thins/paths converge/time loops.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice - omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Obishaal (Dream-Logic): Paths rearrange without warning, reflections speak unbidden, destinations shift mid-journey. A character may hear Ikasha’s whisper as a free omen (the GM may spend 1 SB to make it a false omen).
- Obishaal (Memory Currency): Memories become tangible, forgotten knowledge resurfaces, past and present blur. Trading a memory here may also tick the Virtue or Vice clock depending on the memory’s nature.
- Obishaal (Virtue and Vice): Decisions echo forward, alternate selves appear, paths judge moral weight. The GM may spend SB to force a character to test a virtue (e.g., “Resist the temptation to lie”) or to offer a vice that ticks their Vice clock.

Path-Moves & Procedures (Optional Depth)

Weighing of Steps (Travel Move) When the company enters a liminal path (Mist-Ford, Bone Corridor, etc.), choose one:

- Pay the Toll: Each PC names a small truth or a fond memory (GM: 1 SB banked, +1 Position on navigation).
- Refuse the Toll: +1d on Speed, but start a Way-Debt [4] clock.
- Bargain the Toll: Trade a Diamond reward as if it were a memory (see Memory Exchange below); cancel one imminent Club card in this scene.

When Way-Debt fills, trigger Crossroads Judgment at the next junction.

Reflection Duel (Social/Moral Test) When confronted by an alternate self or Reflection Point, state what that self wants from you and roll your best social action.

- Success: Gain a Guide-Light tag for the scene and clear 1 tick from Paths Decide.
- Mixed: Trade places for one exchange or take a Condition: Disoriented.
- Miss: The reflection walks away with one of your Diamonds (GM picks the most narratively apt).

	Memory Offered	Buys You	Sid
Memory Exchange (Rates & Risks)	A childhood smell, a forgotten nickname	+1 Position on one crossing	A f for

	A perfect day (all details)	Treat the next Heart face as an ally	Sta the Exchange Rule: If you pay the same kind of memory twice in a journey, start Hollowing [4]. When it fills, you gain the Backwards Pilgrim tag until you reclaim what was lost.

Way-Keys & Taboos (d6)

1. Speak Last: Only the final word said at a gate is true; others are “practice.” First speakers take –1d on their next test.
2. Step Odd: Crossings require an odd number of steps; even counts loop you back one scene.
3. Name Nothing: True names wake Name-Theft; use titles or lose a Diamond.
4. Wet Iron: A drop of water on iron cancels one glamour once per scene.
5. Back Gift: Leave something behind to go forward; refuse and tick Way-Debt.
6. Answer Bent: Answer a waystone’s question with a metaphor, not a fact, or trigger Truth Payment.

Boss Seeds (three-phase foes)

- The Archivist of Unmade Roads (cloak stitched from surveyor’s cords) — Phases: Receipts of Refusal → Stay of Journey → Unfiled Options. Cracks: a Choice Compass reveals the true path; a Debt-Clearing voids his claim.
- The Toll-Matriarch Beneath the Bridge (many hands, one voice like wet stone) — Phases: Truth Payment → Debt-Clearing → Forbidden Path. Cracks: a Passage Token marks you as belonging; a Road’s Name commands her to stand aside.
- The Wayfinder’s Shadow (your silhouette, two steps ahead) — Phases: Crossroads Judgment → Guide-Light → Haste Mark. Cracks: a Memory-Anchor keeps you grounded; a Grace Passage slips past its gaze.
- Ikasha’s Nightmare (Dream-Eater) — Appears only in the deepest layer. Phases: Whispers → Temptation → Consumption. Cracks: a Virtue filled clock can be spent to reject the nightmare; a memory of true self-sacrifice (cost 1 permanent Bond) banishes it entirely.

Encounter Seeds (quick hooks)

- The Promise Bridge’s Receipt: An old vow you never spoke was logged here. To cross, define when you would have sworn it—and to whom.
- Thirteenth Stone Auction: The stone sells three possible endings. Each bidder is you from a different failure.
- Bone Corridor Choir: Shadows sing a name wrong by one letter. Correct it and gain Truth-Compass; ignore it and start Name-Theft.
- Ikasha’s Finger Bone: A character finds a bone that pulses with dream-light. If they hold it while sleeping, they can speak to Ikasha directly—but each time, the Waking Dream clock ticks.

Extensions (Plug-in)

Choice Dial (Resolve ↔ Drift) Track the party’s footing between firm intent and wandering.

- Resolve High: +1 Position on Path Split tests; the first Dream-Bleed each session hits harder (start at 2).
- Drift High: +1 Effect when bargaining with way-entities; the first Truth Payment each session costs a cherished detail.
- Center the Dial by naming aloud the next choice and why you might refuse it; clear 1 tick from Way-Debt.

Counter-Seal (once/scene, if justified) Break a single metaphysical instruction (taboo, key, or omen) by presenting a memory in symbol form (a token, a letter, a sketch). Gain +1d on that crossing; the GM banks 1 SB as a Marked Consequence to spend when reflections return.

Start-of-Scene Murmurs (1d6)

1. Second Sunrise: light arrives twice; your first missed navigation roll becomes a mixed success.
2. Name Draft: the air steals a syllable; your next lie sounds true once.
3. Echo Debt: your footprints owe a step—skip a square or tick Way-Debt +1.
4. Pale Bell: time hiccups; the first Club can be delayed until the end of the scene.
5. Traveler's Chorus: distant voices agree with you; +1d on appeals to path entities.
6. Hollow Weather: rain that does not wet; conditions look dire but impose no penalties this scene.

Plug-in SB Conversions (Obishaal Flavor)

- 1 SB → Footprint Vote: your tracks choose a different direction; increase DV by 1 on any roll that relies on following a trail.
- 2 SB → Echo of Refusal: a choice you avoided manifests as a minor obstacle (a locked gate, a forgotten toll). If the choice involved a vice, also tick the Vice clock of the character who refused.
- 3+ SB → Threshold Cracks: the path fractures; gain a temporary Path-Cutter effect but start Convergence [4] (all travelers you have met will arrive together at the next junction). Additionally, Ikasha's dream seeps through the cracks; each character hears a single word of her voice.

Cross-Regional Conversions (Using Diamonds Across the Map)

- Valewood: Road's Name may count as a Valeheart Clause once if spoken under leaves; doing so creates Court Tithe [2].
- Mistlands: Grace Passage functions as Pall Indulgence over one levee crown at night; ring a bell afterward or start Witchlight Count.
- Vhasia: Way-Wisdom can be presented as “pilgrim right” to bypass one Interdict barrier; begin a Parlement Divided tick.
- Viterra: Passage Token can be notarized into a temporary Ferry Priority; on use, advance Border-Lace.
- Ubral: Memory-Anchor counts as a Guest-Token at one hearth if you recount a family road-tale.
- Silkstrand: Path-Cutter doubles as a night-boat route once; spend 1 favor with a smuggler or trigger Seal Counterfeit.
- Linn: Choice Compass acts as a Pilot's Token in a reed-maze if you pay a name to the water.
- Theona: Crossroads Boon allows counting “eight-and-one” to cross an Uncounted Bridge safely once.

Patronage & Power

In Obishaal, power flows through understanding the metaphysical nature of dreams, the ability to navigate virtue and vice, and the careful management of obligations to the dead and to Ikasha herself. The true authorities are those who know the True Names of dream-layers, can mediate between the living and the Unsettled, and understand the currency of virtue.

For the GM: Patronage in Obishaal revolves around guidance, safe passage, and the ability to navigate moral tests. Rewards often take the form of dream-tokens, fragments of Ikasha's memory, or knowledge of a layer's True Name. To emphasize this:

- Tie rewards to visible symbols (compasses, anchors, bells) that can be challenged, stolen, or voided by the dream itself.
- Let rival guides (Virtue vs. Vice) issue conflicting directions, forcing players to choose whose favor matters more.
- Use the crossroads, waystations, and dream-layers as arenas for moral contests, where a single act of mercy can ascend you—and a single act of cruelty can damn you.

In Obishaal, your virtue is your power, and your power determines whether you wake or sleep forever.

Chapter 45

The Wilds

Roads, Ruins, and Weather.

Between towns and treaties lies the patience of the land. Old roads remember armies; cairns remember names no book keeps. In the Wilds, law thins to trail-marks and favors, and the weather keeps its own counsel. The Edgewalker calls it "unclaimed inventory." The land calls it patience. The land has more patience than the Edgewalker.

I am a ranger now. Stonehaven trained me as a scholar—mapping ruins, copying old ledgers, believing that ink could preserve what the world forgot. Tam taught me that the world does not forget. It waits. And while it waits, it watches. The wilds don't need your roads or your rules; they've got their own ways of keeping score. Follow the cairns if you want to live, and always leave something behind—a coin, a story, a breath held just long enough to be noticed. Every hill hides a secret, and every hollow breathes.

The land has a ledger too. It just doesn't use ink. Between the cartographers' claims, the wilds endure—uninterested in borders, indifferent to tariffs. Here, rangers read spoor and weather; hermits keep shrines at forgotten fords; beasts and older things observe travelers with eyes that have seen empires rise and fall. Travel is a negotiation with the land itself, and the land always remembers a slight. The hollows have long memories. They are not cruel. They are not kind. They are patient.

Never sleep in a hollow that has soot on the ceiling without adding your own to the fire. The land knows the difference between a guest and a thief. It also knows the difference between a thief and a corpse. It prefers the corpse. Less arguing.

— Moirra of Stonehaven, ranger and reluctant debt-keeper

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Whatever they found—berries, roots, a rabbit snared at dawn. The wilds provide. The wilds also take. The taking is breakfast for something else.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To read the sky. Wilds children are taught the eight winds by taste: North is dry, South is wet, East is cold, West is warm, and the ninth—the wind that has no direction because it is the land’s own breath. The land’s breath is a warning.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their pack. A stranger whose pack is heavy has been travelling long. A stranger whose pack is light has just started. A stranger with no pack is either a fool or a ghost. The wilds eat fools. Ghosts eat the wilds.

What is the most common crime? Forgetting—but forgetting is not a crime, it is a survival strategy. The wilds are full of things that want to be forgotten. A traveller who forgets them may pass safely. A traveller who remembers must pay a toll. The toll is a story. The story is the memory. The memory is the trap.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The wilds are not empty. They are full of watchers—spirits, beasts, old things that do not have names because names are debts. The watchers do not interfere. They watch. They wait. They remember every footprint. When the footprints stop, the watchers move on.

Where do people go when they die? Into the land. The dead are not buried. They are left where they fell. The land absorbs them. The land grows a little richer. The land’s memory grows a little longer. The dead become the land’s memory. The memory is the wilds.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You leave an offering—a coin, a button, a lock of hair—at the place where the wrong was done. The land accepts or refuses. If the offering is gone by morning, you are forgiven. If it remains, you are not. If it has been moved, the land is testing you. The test is the walk. The walk is the apology.

What is the most important festival? The Turning of the Leaves (autumn). The wilds change colour. The colours are the land’s mood. Red is anger. Gold is warning. Brown is patience. Green is forgetfulness. This year, the leaves are red. The land is angry. Do not ask why.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The wilds have a heart. It is a stone, buried beneath the oldest oak. The stone is warm. The stone is beating. The stone is the land’s pulse. If the stone stops, the wilds die. If the wilds die, there is nothing left to remember. Nothing left to wait.

45.1 The Wilds — “Roads, Ruins, and Weather”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The land walks when you don’t watch it, and the roads remember who bled on them.

Claimant Chief (Elite): “These lands answer not to charters but to those who can read their signs and respect their moods. Authority here is earned one campfire at a time, by proving you understand the difference between claiming and belonging.”

Forager Child (Commoner): “The wilds don’t need your roads or your rules – they got their own ways of keeping score. Follow the cairns if you want to live, and always leave something behind to thank the land for letting you pass. Every hill hides a secret, and every hollow breathes.”

Genre / Mood: Hexcrawl wanderlust, ruin-haunted silence, weather as character.

Starting Location: A shelter hollow carved into a fallen giant’s ribcage, moss glowing faintly under starlight. A Forager Child offers a route-song: “The Bad Ground shifts, and the weather walks behind it. Sing with me, or walk alone.”

Theme & Atmosphere

Between towns and treaties lies the patience of the land. Old roads remember armies; cairns remember names no book keeps. In the Wilds, law thins to trail-marks and favors, and the weather keeps its own counsel. This is the country of the hexcrawl: a patchwork of hidden valleys, forgotten ruins, beast lairs, and the bones of failed settlements. No single authority rules here—instead, the land itself is the ledger, and every crossing writes a new line. Walk soft, read the wind, bargain with whatever still listens, and keep one eye on the horizon. The next hex may hold water, treasure, or teeth.

What you notice first: The silence after a bird stops singing. The way a cairn seems to have shifted since you passed it last. The smell of rain on dry stone, even when the sky is clear.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never sleep in a hollow that has soot on the ceiling without adding your own to the fire. The land knows the difference between a guest and a thief.

The Unfinished Map

The Wilds are not a route—they are a grid of secrets. Each day’s march opens a new page. Some hexes are empty: water, fuel, a safe place to sleep. Others hold lairs, ruins, shrines, or the remnants of old wars. The GM should key a handful of interesting places in advance, then let the cards populate the space between. Draw a card for each new leg; let the suit and rank whisper what you find. The land does not repeat itself, but it echoes.

(Crossing/Lookout/Old Road) Crossing point with ford/ice-span/stepping logs/dune saddle/reef shelf; lookout knoll with wind-carved marker; old road trace with cairns half-eaten by terrain.

Spades — Places (Hex Terrain)

2. Crossing Point — Ford, ice-span, stepping logs, dune saddle, reef shelf. The crossing has a price: a stone, a story, or a moment of silence. The water hums when it's satisfied.
3. Lookout Knoll — Tor, cliff, dune, ridge with wind-carved marker. From here, you can see three hexes in clear weather—and one that shouldn't exist, flickering like a heat-shaped lie.
4. Old Road — Trace with cairns and switchbacks half-eaten by terrain. The cobbles are worn smooth by ghosts. They whisper directions at dusk. The directions are always true, but never complete.
5. Shelter Hollow — Overhang, cave, root cellar; soot says “used lately.” The soot is layered in thin, greasy rings. Someone has been coming here for a very long time. The hollow smells of wet fur and old secrets.
6. Water Source — Spring, seep, fog net, snow pan, guarded by thorns or stone. The water tastes of iron and old bargains. Drink deep, but leave a coin—copper for a safe draw, silver for a question answered.
7. Windbreak — Rock ribs, lee of pines, reed-wall berm. The windbreak smells of woodsmoke and wool. Someone camped here last night. Their fire is still warm.
8. Ruined Outpost — Watchstack, wayside shrine, marker pile. The ruin's flagstones are warm, as if a great beast sleeps beneath them. The air tastes of rust and thyme.
9. Bad Ground — Sinkhole, bog crust, crevasse, loess slump. The ground breathes—a slow, deep inhalation that lifts your heels. Step lightly or it will swallow you.
10. Gate Gully — Pinch point between bluffs, dunes, or ice hummocks. The gully has a name carved in the rock. The name changes every season. Carve yours, and you may never leave.
- J Boundary Row — Totems, standing stones, prayer flags bent by weather. The flags are faded. The last prayer was for rain—and it still hasn't come. The totems have grown moss in the shape of faces.
- Q Worksite — Abandoned mine, quarry, logging camp, salt pan. The tools are scattered, but none are rusted. Whoever left did not plan to return—or has not yet finished.
- K Signal Height — Old fire-pit or mirror stand; smoke stains linger. Light the fire, and someone will answer. Whether they are friend or foe is your risk. The smoke always smells of your childhood.
- A Trail Nexus — Migratory, pack, or contraband paths knot here. Three trails meet, but only two are on any map. The third belongs to the dead. Their footprints point the wrong way.

(Guide/Warden/Caravan) Forager child with truer maps than yours; guide with three routes and one price (changes daily).

Hearts — People & Factions (Hex Denizens)

2. Forager Child — Goat-herd or berry-picker with truer maps than yours. Their map is drawn on a scrap of bark. It shows a path that disappears at a standing stone. The stone is not on any other map.
3. Guide — Three routes and one price (changes daily); navigation as negotiation. Their price is never coin. It is a favor, a secret, or a night's watch. They will not tell you which until you arrive.

4. Warden Patrol — Local badges, local laws, local patience; order as familiarity. Their badge is a chipped sunburst. They serve a crown that no longer exists. The crown does not pay them. The land does.
5. Caravan Crew — Drovers, porters, yarn-post hands trading speed for coin. They know every shortcut and every ambush. They will share both—for a price. Their silence is purchased in stories.
6. Pilgrims — Bound for a tucked-away shrine or stone; faith as a destination. Their shrine has no name. The stone there is warm, and it answers questions poorly. It prefers to ask them.
7. Poachers — Know every snare and shortcut; survival as expertise. They wear the teeth of game wardens as necklaces. The game wardens are still alive. They are saving for a full set.
8. Hermit-Healer — Dogs, geese, and opinions about weather; wisdom as isolation. Their poultices smell of grave-moss. They work anyway. The dogs do not bark at strangers—they judge them.
9. Prospectors — Salt, amber, iron, fungus; chasing rumors and glint. Their claim is marked with a knot of red thread. Cross it, and they will shoot. The thread glows when a stranger’s foot touches it.
10. War-Band — Reavers or “escorts,” depending on your purse; violence as commerce. Their banner is a painted skull. The paint is from a dead comrade’s blood. They add a finger bone to the standard after every contract.
- J Monster-Hunter — Rite-keeper wearing yesterday’s trophies; death as livelihood. Their trophy is still warm. The monster’s mate is close behind. They are not running—they are leading.
- Q Quartermaster — Ledgers first, hospitality second; supply as authority. Their ledger is written in a code only they understand. The code is their life story. The margins are full of regrets.
- K Claimant Chief — Papers and spears to match; legitimacy as force. Their papers are stained with water and blood. Both are still wet. The water came from a spring they poisoned. The blood from the spring’s keeper.
- A The Stranger — Spirit-touched nomad or emissary; rules bend near them. They have no shadow. The ground does not remember their footprints. Their voice echoes twice—once for them, once for the land.

Additional Denizens of the Wilds

Not every soul in the wilds is a wanderer. Some have built fragile refuges, while others have been broken by war, exile, or the land itself.

14. Isolated Town (Palings) — A handful of families eking out a living behind a thorn hedge. The gate is a wagon axle lashed upright. They trade hides for salt and ask no questions. Their children have never seen a paved road. ‘[COMMUNITY]’
15. Refugee Train — A column of worn carts and quieter people fleeing a war or a curse. Their leader carries a charter from a lord who is now dead. They will trade stories for passage and bury their dead without markers. ‘[SORROW]’
16. Deserter Camp — Soldiers who threw down their colours, now living by stealth. They still drill at dawn and keep a sharp watch. Their loyalty is to each other, not to any flag. They may know the location of an abandoned fort. ‘[STEALTH]’
17. Beastman Hunting Band — Feral-looking folk with antler charms and pelts stitched to skin. They do not speak Utaran. They communicate in growls and hand signs. They are not savages—they are the land's first children, and they remember when the roads were deer paths. '[SPIRIT]'

18. Lost Tribe (Cairn-Folk) — Descendants of a settlement that fell off every map. They wear the teeth of their ancestors and tattoo their lineage on their faces. They believe the Hollow is a sleeping god and that the party are its messengers. They are wrong—or are they? '[MYSTERY]'
19. Rootless Mercenaries — A dozen sell-swords between contracts, nursing old wounds. Their captain lost an eye to a mushroom spore. They will fight for coin, but they will also fight for a hot meal. They know the location of a forgotten cache of arms. '[COMBAT]'
20. Anchorite in a Dead Tower — A holy woman who has not spoken in twenty years. She writes prophecies on the walls with charcoal. The prophecies are always about the next storm or the next stranger to arrive. She will not look at you if your shadow is wrong. '[FAITH]'
21. Feral Children — Orphaned by a raid or a plague, raised by wolves or worse. They know every hidden spring and every game trail. They will not come close, but they will watch. Leave them a piece of bread, and they may leave you a knapped arrowhead—or a warning. '[SURVIVAL]'
22. Cult of the Unburied — Grave-tenders who believe the dead should not be left to the land. They carry iron shovels and speak in hushed tones. They burn the bodies of the fallen they find, lest the Hollow take them. They may be willing to burn your dead as well—for a story. '[RITUAL]'
- J Exiled Scholar — A academic who fled a city after proving the wrong theorem. He carries a single book—his own—and will trade a chapter for a night's shelter. The book contains a map to a ruin that does not appear on any official chart. '[KNOWLEDGE]'
- Q The Grey Singer — A blind woman who wanders the wilds humming. Her songs calm territorial beasts and call down birds. She is looking for a melody she heard in a dream. If you help her find it, she will teach you a verse that quells a storm. '[MYSTIC]'
- K Bandit King's Lookout — A scout for a large robber band, hiding in a hollow tree. He has a whistle that can summon a dozen riders. He is not cruel—just hungry. A bag of salt or a true story will buy his silence and his guidance around the ambush. '[STEALTH]'
- A The Hollow's Own — A figure dressed in grey rags, walking the same path every dusk. They have no face—only a smooth expanse where features should be. They do not attack. They point. The direction they point is the direction the Hollow will walk next. '[DEATH]'

(Weather/Doubleback/Prowlers) Weather turn with heat snap/cold snap/fog/dust; double-back with tracks that loop; prowlers shadow with wolves/jackals/ghouls.

Clubs — Complications/Threats (Hex Hazards)

2. Weather Turn — Heat snap, cold snap, fog, dust; plans sag like wet leather. The wind changes direction three times in an hour. Someone is watching. The air tastes of a season that hasn't come yet.
3. Doubleback — Tracks loop; the navigator swears the land moved underfoot. Your own footprints face you. They were made yesterday—or tomorrow. The toes point toward a future you have not chosen.

4. Prowlers Shadow — Wolves, jackals, ghouls, seals, ravens by night; hunt as a company. Their eyes reflect no light. Their teeth do. They are patient. They have been following since the last hex. You are only now noticing.
5. Route Blocked — Deadfall, rockfall, dune shift, ice heave; the path as an obstacle. The blockage was placed. The toolmarks are fresh. Whoever cleared this path did not want you to follow—or wanted you to take the other way.
6. Quarantine Sign — Camp fever; wardens sniff your packs for death. The sign is a ribbon tied in a figure-eight. Do not cross it. The ribbon is damp. It was tied recently. The wardens are still nearby.
7. Territorial Beast — Charge, stampede, or swarm; your choice of which is wrong. The beast’s lair is nearby. You can smell it—old blood and older musk. The ground is warm. You are standing on its pantry.
8. Elemental Front — Grassfire, peat-burn, canopy flare, blowing spindrift. The fire moves against the wind. The wind is lying. The smoke writes a word in a language you almost understand. It is a warning.
9. Paper vs Spear — Jurisdiction fight in the wilds stalls your day; law as argument. Two officials, one road. Both have seals. Neither will show them. The seals are warm. They have been used recently—on death warrants.
10. Supply Pinch — Water, fuel, or feed low; pick what starves first. Your canteen is full. The water is from a source that dried up last year. You do not remember filling it. Someone did.
- J Pursuit — Hunters or avengers follow; signs say “close.” The tracks are one hour old. They are gaining. The hunters do not need to sleep. They have not slept for three days. Neither have you.
- Q Bad Omen — Will-lights, taboo day, saint bells silent; locals refuse to move. The omen is written in bird droppings on a milestone. It is still accurate. The birds are watching. They are waiting for you to ignore it.
- K General Alarm — Levy, muster, evacuation; all tracks become checkpoints. The alarm horn is cracked. It sounds like a scream. The scream is a name. The name is yours.
- A Catastrophe — Flood, whiteout, sandstorm, lahar; clocks jump like frightened deer. The catastrophe has a name. The land remembers it. The land is shouting it now. The sound is the same as a heartbeat. Yours.

Expanded Travel Hazards (from expansions)

For GMs who want even more variety, add these entries to the Clubs table (either replace six existing entries or expand the table to d18 by renumbering).

14. Bell-Line Failure (Mistlands) — A ward-bell cracks. Wraiths cross the levee. Test Spirit + Resolve (DV 4) or gain the MARKED BY MIST condition (the next spirit encounter starts at Desperate Position). ‘[DEATH]’
15. Star-Road Phasing (Valewood) — An ancient Lethai road flickers in and out of reality. Navigation DV +2. On a failure, the party emerges in a different hex entirely (GM chooses). ‘[MAGIC]’
16. Spirit-Dust Storm (Ashaan) — Red sand from the Red Desert carries whispering spirits. All actions Desperate for the scene. On any 1, a bound spirit breaks free and attacks (Cap 2). ‘[SPIRIT]’
17. Ninth Night (Tulkani Circle) — The party has camped too long. The Hollow walks. A

Oath-Keeper appears at midnight. It demands a story, a memory, or a name. Refusal starts a Hollow Attention clock [4]. '[DEBT]'

18. Well-Spirit Offended (Fhara) — A dry well suddenly flows, but the water is bitter. The spirit demands an apology (offering of dates or a true story). Failure poisons the party's water supply for the next leg. '[SPIRIT]'
19. Tariff Shift (Silkstrand/Brass Coast) — A customs official declares new duties. All trade goods cost +1 Measure until the next port. Bribery requires a successful Presence + Sway (DV 4). '[AUTHORITY]'

(Cache/Pass/Favor) Cache token for hidden food or fuel stash; right-of-way pass recognized by a named trail; warden's favor with an escort letter.

Diamonds — Rewards/Leverage (Hex Discoveries)

2. Cache Token — Key to a hidden food or fuel stash (once); preparation as power. The token is a knucklebone. The stash is marked with a cairn that has one stone missing. The missing stone is the token.
 3. Right-of-Pass — Recognized marker for a named trail or crossing. The marker is a notch carved in a milestone. The notch is shaped like a bird. The bird is an owl. The owl watches at dusk.
 4. Warden's Favor — Escort letter; "they're with us" as a shield. The letter is stamped with a bell. The bell's clapper is missing. The absence of sound is the signature.
 5. Weather Window — Good forecast and a narrow gate to use it. The window is a single hour at dawn. The birds will tell you when. They will stop singing. That is the signal.
 6. Water Deed — Lawful draw at a scarce source; necessity as a right. The deed is a clay cup. Break it, and the spring will flow—once. The cup's shards can be traded for another deed. There are nine shards.
 7. Route Song — A map scrap that actually works; knowledge as navigation. The song has eight verses. The ninth is humming. The humming is the sound of the road itself. It changes with the weather.
 8. Remount Hire — Fresh legs or hulls waiting at a post; speed as a service. The remounts have no names. They answer to whistles and bribes. They remember every rider. They do not forgive cruelty.
 9. Truce Cord — Taboo exemption at a site (one scene); peace as a thread. The cord is braided from wool and ash. Burn it to invoke the truce. The ash must be from the same fire that warmed the truce.
 10. Toll Waiver — A ferry, bridge, or reef gate honors this chit; passage as paper. The chit is a dried leaf. The toll-keeper will not touch it. They will nod and wave you through. They will not speak.
- J Rescue Debt — Locals owe you (or you owe them); trade for labor or intel. The debt is carved on a tally stick. Break it when the favor is done. The stick will not burn. It will only splinter.
- Q Private Audience — A keeper, shrine-warden, or spirit of the place hears you alone. The audience is held at midnight. The spirit wears your face. It asks only one question. You will answer truthfully.

K Road Commission — Temporary authority over a stretch of wilds. The commission is a whistle. Blow it, and the land will listen—once. The whistle is carved from a bone that was never alive.

A Earth’s Exception — One temporary rule-bend (cross during a storm, pass uncounted, beasts ignore you). The exception is a secret. The land will forget it as soon as you use it. You will remember it every night for a year.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (cache/pass/favor) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, add a lingering omen of the land (a smell on the wind, a sound that carries too far, tracks that shift) that you can echo in later scenes.

Travel at a Glance (Fast Loose)

A journey through the Wilds is a series of choices, not a checklist. Before each leg (a day, a stretch of road, a single hex), the party picks two priorities from Speed, Stealth, Safety, Survey. Those become your edge; the others become vulnerabilities. The GM then frames a single roll based on the terrain and the weather’s mood (see Weather Whims, below). Success means you find what you sought; a mixed result trades progress for a cost; a miss throws a complication from the Clubs table onto the path.

Weather Whims (d6, one per leg)

1. Glass-clear – long sight, easy navigation. +1 to Survey actions.
2. Low fog – stealth advantage, speed suffers. +1 to Stealth, –1 to Speed.
3. Trickle rain – tracks wash, cold bites. First navigation or tracking roll at –1 die.
4. Dry cold / heat – resources drain faster. Mark +1 supply strain at end of leg.
5. Shifting wind – smoke and scent lie. Reroll one die on a weather-related check, but the GM may bank 1 SB.
6. Omen sky (aurora, sun-dog, three moons) – the land is listening. The GM may ask one player to answer a single question about the party’s future.

Making Camp When you stop, choose one boon and accept one risk:

- Boon: heal a piece of gear; clear 1 Fatigue; scout tomorrow’s weather; share a story with a road spirit (gain a Truce Cord).
- Risk: thin shelter (next weather hits harder); smoky fire (attracts prowlers); exposed approach (ambush more likely); hungry neighbors (locals or beasts appear).

A road spirit’s favour requires a small offering—a pinch of salt, a dropped coin, a whispered truth. Be polite.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Bitter Root: Daughters of the Cord use certain shelter hollows as waystations. A renegade Sister has hidden a Hollowed in a ruined outpost; the child has not moved in weeks.
- The Threshold Compendium: Old Roads are Class II Anchor sites—ghosts of imperial surveyors still measure the miles. Saikou Ira would leave a silver coin at every milestone.
- Malachai, the Chained Angel: A silver coin that never spends lies at the bottom of every spring. Take it, and the water will never run dry—but the spring will remember your face.
- The Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire: Wilds psions are called “Stone-Listeners.” They hear the memory of old trails. Claimant chiefs pay well for their services—and dispose of those who hear too much.
- The Ninth: In any Wilds scene, the ninth cairn you pass in a day will be warm. Leave an offering, or the path will forget you.

Wilderness Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Cairn: Crumble a crust at a boundary stone. Ignore the first Bad Ground penalty.
- Knot the Trail: Tie a single knot in a piece of grass at a crossing. Cancel Doubleback or take –1 die on your next navigation roll (your choice).
- Name to the Spring: Whisper a dead traveler’s name into a water source. Gain +1 Effect when foraging this scene, but mark Obligation to the land.

Patronage & Power

In the Wilds, power flows through knowledge of the land, the ability to navigate without formal authority, and the careful cultivation of local relationships. True authority comes from understanding weather patterns, reading tracks, and maintaining the favor of both human inhabitants and the spirits of place. Those who can provide safe passage, find water in dry times, or mediate between conflicting claims hold the most influence.

For the GM: Patronage in the Wilds revolves around practical knowledge, local customs, and the ability to provide essential services like navigation, shelter, and supply. Rewards often take the form of tokens, passes, and local knowledge that can be leveraged into greater safety and efficiency. To emphasise the hexcrawl feel:

- Key 6–10 interesting hexes before the session, then use the generator to fill the rest.
- Let the party discover new routes, short cuts, and hidden lairs through successful scouting or lucky finds.
- Use the Roads Move, Weather Wakes, and Local Resentment clocks (from the hexcrawl procedures) to create a living, reactive wilderness—or simply let the cards speak.
- Offer Diamonds as “exploration rewards” that unlock new options (a cache token, a safe passage, a local ally).

In the Wilds, your skill is your standing, and your standing determines whether you survive or perish.

Chapter 46

Dungeons

Living Infrastructure.

Beneath the surface, ancient places breathe with mechanical lungs and dream electric dreams. The walls remember every footfall; the air carries whispers of forgotten conversations. The Edgewalker believes dungeons are infrastructure. The prisoners believe they are hungry. Both are correct.

I am a Scholar-Prisoner. The walls here have a memory like old parchment—they remember every scream, every spell, every drop of blood spilled on the stones. And sometimes, when the air’s just right, they whisper it back to you. The dungeon listens. The question is whether it learns. I have been here for nine years. I have heard it learning. It started with single words. Then sentences. Now it speaks in paragraphs. Last week, it finished my thoughts before I did.

Dungeons are not ruins—they are systems. Ventilation shafts that breathe, water channels that pulse, doors that open and close without any hand to move them. The Aeler built many of them; the Covenant sealed others; the Sidhi mined a few; and some were never built at all. They grew. Like fungus in the dark. Like a story told too many times. Like a debt that compounds.

Never ignore a door that opens when you’re not looking. The dungeon is offering you a choice. Refuse, and the next door may not open at all. Accept, and the door may lead to a room that was always there, waiting for someone to finally walk through. The room has been waiting for nine thousand years. It is not tired of waiting.

— The Dungeon’s Architect, whose plans are written in a language no one speaks and whose signature is a thumbprint that could be anyone’s

The Almanac of Ordinary Days

What do people eat for breakfast? Fungus bread and cave water—the fungus grows on the walls, the water drips from the ceiling. Both taste of stone. Both are all there is.

What does a child learn before they can walk? To count footsteps. Dungeon children are taught the eight sounds of the deep: Drip, Creak, Groan, Whisper, Scrape, Echo, Silence, and the ninth—the sound of the dungeon's own heartbeat. The heartbeat is a door opening. The door is always behind you.

What is the first thing you notice about a stranger? Their shadow. Dungeon shadows are long, even when the light is bright. A stranger whose shadow is too short has been here too long. A stranger whose shadow moves independently has been touched by the deep. A stranger with no shadow is not a stranger. They are the dungeon's guest. The dungeon never lets guests leave.

What is the most common crime? Map-making—but map-making is not a crime, it is a heresy. The dungeon does not want to be mapped. The dungeon changes its corridors when it feels watched. A map that is accurate at dawn is a lie by dusk. The lie is the map-maker's fault. The punishment is to walk the lie until it becomes true.

What does no one talk about but everyone knows? The dungeon is not a place. It is a creature—a sleeping thing that dreamed itself into stone. The corridors are its veins. The chambers are its organs. The prisoners are its thoughts. The thoughts are not its own.

Where do people go when they die? Into the walls. The dead are not buried. Their bones are ground into mortar and used to patch the cracks. The cracks always reappear. The dead are never finished being used.

How do you apologize for a serious wrong? You offer a memory—a true one, witnessed by the dungeon itself. The dungeon accepts the memory. The memory is added to the walls. The walls whisper it back to you when you sleep. The whisper is the apology. The apology never ends.

What is the most important festival? The Turning of the Keys (whenever the dungeon decides). The locks are changed. The prisoners are moved. The corridors are rearranged. The festival has no date, no warning, no end. It is happening now. You did not notice. That is the point.

What is the secret that could destroy a powerful person? The dungeon's architect is still alive. They are sealed in the lowest chamber, kept alive by the dungeon's own will. The dungeon does not want to be alone. The architect is the dungeon's only friend. The architect has not spoken in nine centuries. The dungeon does not need words.

46.1 Dungeon — “Living Infrastructure”

Quick Reference

Tagline: The walls remember. The echoes answer. The architecture chooses.

Dungeon’s Creator (Elite): “I built more than walls and corridors – I crafted a living symphony of stone and shadow, where every passage breathes and every chamber remembers. The structure itself is the true inhabitant.”

Scholar-Prisoner (Commoner): “The walls here got a memory like old parchment – they remember every scream, every spell, every drop of blood spilled on the stones. And sometimes, when the air’s just right, they whisper it back to you. The dungeon listens. The question is whether it learns.”

Genre / Mood: Living architecture, ecological horror, sentient dungeon, community of exiles.

Starting Location: A spiral stairwell deep beneath a forgotten citadel, pulsing with a heartbeat not entirely mechanical. The steps hum underfoot. A Forgotten Custodian keys a door that wasn’t there yesterday. “The Heart Chamber hungers. Will you feed it – or be fed?”

Theme & Atmosphere

Beneath the surface, ancient places breathe with mechanical lungs and dream electric dreams. Dungeons are not merely ruins but living systems – vascular networks of stone and shadow where every corridor hums with purpose and every chamber holds its own hungry logic. The walls remember every footfall, the air carries whispers of forgotten conversations, and the very architecture shifts like a sleeper turning in bed. Here, the boundary between structure and organism blurs, and those who would plunder its secrets must first learn to speak its language of echoes, scents, and subtle pressures.

What you notice first: The wet stone smell of a place that sweats. The distant grinding of gears that should have seized centuries ago. The way your footsteps echo back with an extra beat – like someone is following, or catching up.

The one rule that kills newcomers: Never ignore a door that opens when you’re not looking. The dungeon is offering you a choice. Refuse, and the next door may not open at all.

The Living Hierarchy: Factions of the Deep

Dungeons are not empty. They host a fragile ecology of factions, each with its own relationship to the site’s “consciousness.” A site’s dominant faction determines its mood; a dungeon ruled by Custodians may be melancholic and negotiable, while one overrun by Awakened Organs is actively predatory.

- Custodians (Forgotten Caretakers) – The original stewards, now half-mad or ghostly. They maintain the dungeon’s rhythms (polishing thresholds, oiling traps) and may trade safe passage for a memory or a promise. Clocks: CUSTODIAN PATIENCE [4], MAINTENANCE ROUNDS [6].
- Invaders (Plunderers & Refugees) – Living interlopers: mercenary remnants, cult initiates, refugee families. They exploit the dungeon’s resources while trying to avoid its attention. Their presence raises Dungeon Awareness (Heat). Clocks: INVADER DESPERATION [4], RIVAL CLAIM [6].

- Awakened Organs (The Dungeon’s Will) – Manifestations of the site’s internal systems: the Heart Chamber, the Digestive Array, the Ledger Lich. They act as immune responses or as twisted echoes of the original purpose. Clocks: ORGAN HUNGER [4], SYSTEM REBOOT [6].
- Wild Symbiotes (Echoes & Aberrations) – Creatures that evolved within the living infrastructure: stone-wights, memory eels, gravity ticks. They are neither friendly nor hostile – they simply follow the dungeon’s new rules. Clocks: SWARM TIDE [4], SYMBIOTIC ACCORD [6].

Most expeditions will feature two or three of these factions in uneasy balance. A dungeon with predatory Awakened Organs and desperate Invaders is a very different crawl than one haunted by melancholic Custodians and curious Wild Symbiotes.

Sealed Vault Contents (d10)

When the party opens a sealed vault, a hidden archive, or a long-forgotten treasure chamber, roll to determine what ancient power or cursed artifact they uncover. These items tie the dungeon to the wider world of Fate’s Edge.

d10	Contents
1	A Covenant seal that is still warm — the demon inside is dreaming. The seal bears the mark of a long-dead inquisitor. Breaking it releases a spirit (Cap 3) that offers a bargain before attacking.
2	An Aeler breath-counter with nine notches — the owner counted to nine. The bell still rings when wind passes through it. A character who wears it gains +1 die to resist breath-based hazards but hears whispers from the mountain.
3	A Lethai-ar witness cord tied in a knot that cannot be undone — the promise was never fulfilled. The cord tightens when a lie is spoken nearby. Cutting it requires a successful Spirit + Lore test (DV 5) and costs 1 Corruption.
4	A Tulkani vow-cord with a single knot. The knot is a name. Speaking it summons a Oath-Keeper (see The Hollow’s Oath-Keeper). The Oath-Keeper will demand a story, a memory, or a promise before leaving.
5	A Fhara water-share tablet from a well that dried up — the tablet is still wet. If placed into any dry well, it will fill with clean water for one year, but the water tastes of copper and the well-spirit will remember the taker.
6	A Sidhi freedman’s seal that glows in the dark. The seal belonged to a slave who never reached freedom. A character who wears it gains +1 die on social rolls with Sidhi, but Ashaani slave-hunters can sense it from a mile away.
7	A Pereshi fire-temple coal that never cools — the ninth coal from the Prince’s brazier. It sheds light like a torch but never burns out. If taken above ground, it attracts the attention of the Forgotten Prince’s ghost.
8	A Kuvani sky-road stone that hums at dawn. It points toward the nearest ghost herd. A character who follows its direction may encounter ancestral spirits — who will demand a story in exchange for safe passage.
9	An Oshiiran grain ledger page listing debts to the Widow. All debtors are dead. The interest is still compounding. A character who reads the page aloud gains 1 Corruption and the Widow’s attention (the Vermilion Corps may appear).

10	A Ngomebe keystone shard that weeps water. The city it came from stopped moving. The ancestors are angry. Touching the shard gives a vision of the city's last day; the character must test Resolve (DV 4) or gain the Ancestral Grudge condition (–1 die on all rolls involving Ngomebe until they make an offering).

Demon Whispers (d8) — For Ninth Seal Encounters

When the party approaches a sealed demon, a cracked Covenant vault, or a chamber where the Hollow's influence is strong, roll on this table for cryptic whispers that offer bargains, warnings, or traps. The demon (or its fragment) speaks in the voice of someone the listener knows.

d8	Whisper
1	"Free me, and I will give you a name. The name of the next emperor. The name of your death. The name of the one who will betray you."
2	"The seal was placed by a coward. He is still alive. He is still watching. He will not help you. Bring me his name, and I will give you a key that opens any lock — once."
3	"Your friend carries a secret. I can hear it. Shall I tell you, or shall I keep it for later? The interest is a small favour — a cup of blood, a whispered lie, a forgotten prayer."
4	"The Hollow and I are cousins. I taught it to count. It taught me to wait. The ninth breath is mine. Count to nine, and I will show you the way out — but the way out will lead you through your own grave."
5	"One breath is all I need. Count to nine. I will do the rest. The mountain will crack. The seal will shatter. And you will be free — of everything you ever feared. Also of everything you ever loved."
6	"The Kalrantha amulet is a fragment of me. Bring it here. I will make you whole. I will give you the certainty you crave — the absolute knowledge that every choice you make is the right one. (The whisper laughs.) It always was, wasn't it? You just didn't know it."
7	"The Vent-Prior knows the truth about the Ninth Seal. Ask him why he never counts his breaths aloud. He sealed me because he was afraid of what I would ask him to remember. Ask him what he forgot."
8	"You are already dreaming this. When you wake, you will not remember me. But I will remember you. I will be waiting in the space between your heartbeats. Every ninth heartbeat is mine. Listen. Can you hear it?"

Breath-Bond Mechanics (Aeler Integration)

In dungeons built or maintained by the Aeler (or those that contain Aeler engineering), breath-bonds may still be active. These are magical contracts sealed with a shared exhalation.

- Active Breath-Bonds: A character who discovers an Aeler breath-bond (a brass capsule with a faint glow) may activate it by breathing into it. The bond then records a single promise. Breaking the promise causes the character to mark 1 Fatigue (the mountain’s disappointment) and the bond to shatter.
- Keystone Wards: Some sealed doors are held by a keystone ward. To pass, a character must exhale into a breath-counter while stating a true fact about themselves. The ward compares the truth to the dungeon’s memory. On a successful Resolve + Lore test (DV 4), the ward opens. On a failure, the character loses one breath (mark 1 Fatigue) and the ward remains closed.
- Breath Debt: A character who breaks three breath-bonds in the same dungeon gains the Suffocated condition (all physical actions are Desperate until they offer a memory or a story to the nearest Aeler ghost).

Covenant Seal Discoveries (d6)

When the party finds a Covenant seal (clay, wax, or brass) inside a dungeon, roll to determine its nature and any lingering magic.

d6	Discovery
1	The seal is still warm and pulses with a slow heartbeat. It contains a bound spirit — a witness who died mid-trial. Breaking the seal releases the spirit, which will answer one question truthfully before dissipating.
2	The seal is cracked and weeping a black, oily residue. The demon inside is dreaming. Touching the seal gives the character a vision of the demon’s prison. Mark 1 Corruption and gain a Demon’s Attention tag (the GM may spend 2 SB to have the demon whisper at a dramatic moment).
3	The seal is a forgery — but a very old one. The real seal was stolen centuries ago. A character who examines it (Wits + Lore, DV 4) learns the name of the forger, who is still alive and living in Silkstrand under a false identity.
4	The seal is incomplete; one edge is missing. The missing piece is a key that opens a hidden door elsewhere in the dungeon. The seal whispers the location of the missing piece at midnight.
5	The seal bears the mark of a Covenant judge who was excommunicated for heresy. The judge’s ghost haunts the dungeon, offering to nullify one contract in exchange for a drop of blood from a living witness.

6	The seal is not a seal at all — it is a reliquary containing a fragment of the Kalrantha amulet. The fragment hums with the element of Fate. Touching it allows the character to reroll one die immediately, but marks 1 Obligation to the Hollow.

Quick use notes

- Draw until you have all four suits: Spade = place, Heart = actor, Club = pressure, Diamond = leverage. Highest rank sets the main Clock (2–5 → 4, 6–10 → 6, J/Q/K → 8, A → 10).
- Diamonds are codified outcomes (safeties/knowledge/immunities) that change position rather than call for a roll.
- If any A appears, echo living infrastructure – walls shift, voices repeat your plans, light returns redder.

Additional Features (Cultural Mechanics)

- Living Infrastructure: Fluids, heat, dust, and sound move like blood – follow the drafts, the drips, the echoes to find organs: cisterns, chimneys, nerve-halls.
- Scent Ledger: Track smells (ozone, wet lime, tallow, old wine); they foretell hazards and factions before you see them. A successful Wits + Survival (DV 3) reveals one hidden feature of the next chamber.
- Echo Etiquette: Some rooms reward whispers and punish shouts; others demand a spoken price to cross. Listen first. A character who spends a full exchange listening may ask one yes/no question about the room’s “mood” (GM answers truthfully).
- Community of Exiles: The dungeon’s refugee factions (Invaders, Custodians) can be bartered with using memories or secrets instead of coin. A memory of warmth buys a night’s shelter; a secret about the surface buys a guide through a dangerous junction.
- Local Patrons (Syncretic Names):
 - The Foundation Stone – The Sealed Gate. The keystone that remembers every weight placed upon it.
 - The Echo-Singer – The Witness. The voice that repeats every promise whispered in the dark.
 - The Pressure Below – Khemesh. The slow hunger of stone, the patience of the deep.
 - The Circuit – Clockwork Monad. The dungeon’s dreaming nervous system, always optimizing, always watching.

Lore Echoes (Cross-Expansion Hooks)

- The Bitter Root: Daughters of the Cord sometimes serve as custodians, using the dungeon’s memory to collect debts from the living. A renegade Sister hides in the Sunken Vestibule, trying to cut her cord from a bound guardian’s oath.
- Malachai, the Chained Angel: A silver coin that never spends appears in the Vault of Whispers. Take it, and the books will answer any question – but the coin will reappear in your pocket each dawn, heavier.

- The Grey Wanderer’s Grimoire: Dungeon psions are called “Echo-Readers.” They hear the whispers of past explorers and can reroute a corridor once per expedition by humming the right frequency.
- The Threshold Compendium: The Throne of Echoes is a Class III Anchor – the ghost of a judge who died mid-trial. Saikou Ira would leave a coin on the seat and ask for a verdict. The verdict is always a riddle.
- The Ninth: In any dungeon scene, the ninth door you open in a row will lead to a place that was not on your map. The wise open eight, then retrace their steps. Those who open the ninth find a shortcut – and a debt.
- The Ninth Seal (Himadri Foothills): Deep beneath some dungeons, a sealed tunnel holds a demon fragment. The demon whispers through cracks in the Covenant seal. A party that carries a piece of green glass (a Kalrantha shard) may hear its voice more clearly – and may be offered a bargain that is never what it seems.

Dungeon Superstitions (burn for +1 die once)

- Bread to the Threshold: Crumble a crust at the base of a door. Ignore the first Shifting Walls penalty. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Knot the Echo: Tie a single knot in a piece of string and hang it from a lintel. Cancel Temporal Echoes or take –1 die on your next navigation roll (your choice). ‘[SUPERSTITION]’
- Name to the Dark: Whisper a dead explorer’s name into a shadow. Gain +1 Effect when searching for hidden passages this scene, but mark Attention from the dungeon. ‘[SUPERSTITION]’

Thematic SB Spend Table

Minor Complications (1 SB)

- Exposure: Your actions draw unwanted attention from dungeon dwellers or factions.
- Noise: Sounds of your actions alert nearby creatures or echoes.
- Trace: Evidence of your passage marks your route for trackers or spirits.
- Delay: A brief but meaningful setback costs you time or resources.
- Supply Strain: Mark +1 segment on a relevant resource clock.

Moderate Setbacks (2 SB)

- Alarm Raised: The dungeon’s will becomes aware and begins responding.
- Position Lost: You lose advantageous ground/cover/stealth due to shifting architecture.
- Foe Appears: A minor entity or faction member arrives on scene.
- Gear Trouble: A piece of equipment becomes Compromised/Neglected.
- Lock/Barrier: A simple obstacle now requires a test to overcome.

Serious Trouble (3 SB)

- Reinforcements: Additional dungeon entities or guardians arrive.
- Key Gear Breaks: A crucial tool/weapon becomes temporarily unusable.
- Major Twist: The situation fundamentally changes – trap springs/route blocked/ally turns.

- Rail Tick: Advance a relevant campaign/front clock by 1 segment.
- Condition Applied: Mark Fatigue 1/Harm 1/Condition appropriate to fiction.

Major Turns (4+ SB)

- Trap Springs: A prepared danger activates with full effect.
- Authority Arrival: The Dungeon's Creator or Collective Consciousness intervenes.
- Scene Shift: The environment changes dramatically – walls shift/floor collapses/air thickens.
- Patron Omen: Divine/arcane forces take notice – omen appears/blessing lost/curse manifests.
- Narrative Pivot: The story takes an unexpected turn that reframes objectives.

Region-Specific SB Options

- Living Infrastructure (1–2 SB): Corridors whisper your name, reflections blink slower, scent trails loop back.
- Echo Etiquette (1–3 SB): Shouts echo thrice, silence answers back, doors ask riddles.
- Cascading Failure (1–2 SB): One crack becomes many, water flows uphill, lights dim in sequence.

Pursuit Ladder (Near / Mid / Far)

- Advance/Withdraw (Wits + Survival): On a hit, shift one band. On a strong hit, also impose Dust Cloud.
- Cut the Echo (Presence + Lore): On a hit, freeze range for one exchange; if a Wayfinder Compass is in your possession, +1 die.
- Weather the Collapse (Body + Athletics): On a hit in Cascading Failure, you pick who escapes first; on a miss, the GM does.

Boss Seeds (Living Infrastructure)

- The Miscount-King (Nine Errors) – Phases: Bell-Lines Severed → Orchestrated Miscount → Shrine Coup. Cracks: re-tie a bell-line, expose a false count, survive a night at the forgotten bell.
- The Drowned Counter (Spirit of the Ninth Tide) – Phases: Waves Miscounted → Procession of Empty Shrines → Bell-Baptism of a Warden. Cracks: relic tide-bead, survivor testimony, the ninth bell refusing to ring.

Plug-in Expedition Layer

- Universal Clocks (drop into any site):
 - Dungeon Awareness (Heat) [10]: rises on loud actions, light spillage, blood, or haste. At 4/7/10, the Keeper may promote Clubs results one step.
 - Structure Stress [6/8]: ticks on blasts, overloading mechanisms, or ignored warnings; when full, trigger Cascading Failure.
 - Expedition Supply: three pooled tracks – Light [4], Air [4] (if sealed), Load [4] (fatigue/overburden). Each empty track worsens Position for relevant actions until refreshed.

- Safe Route Tokens: On a strong success mapping/scouting, issue a Safe Route token. Spend to bypass one known hazard in that segment or to negate a single “Position Lost” SB.
- Retreat & Seal: When withdrawing, a PC may seal the way (chalk, wedges, wards). Clear 1 Heat, but tick Structure Stress or spawn a Phantom Lock in that lane.

Interfaces & Entanglements (use what fits your campaign)

- Surface Stakeholders: Scavenger Union, Shrinekeepers, Civic Factors. Register finds to bank a Finder’s Favor – spend to reduce one sell-off DV; skipping registration adds a “Disputed Claim” tag to the haul.
- Internal Politics: Custodians, Bound Guardians, Refugee Enclaves. Parley with proper tokens (salt, names, warmth) to downgrade the next Clubs result in their turf.
- Patron Hooks (optional):
 - The Sealed Gate: Chalk lines cancel one intrusion for a scene; breaking them adds 1 Heat.
 - Lunara: Moon-silver reveals one hidden organ (cistern, nerve-hall); mark Exposure +1.
 - The Traveler: Waymarks let you finish one travel tick after a room clear.
 - Varnek Karn: Naming the dead here clears 1 Awareness but starts a Ledger Attention [4].
 - Maelstraesus: Trade salvage tags at “fair rate” once/expedition; skewed trades create a Karmic Debt [6].

Keys, Locks, & Doors (drop-in schema)

- Door Attitudes: Literal (wants the right key), Courteous (opens to the right words), Hungry (takes a toll), Shy (hates crowds), Proud (demands ceremony).
- Key Types: Mechanical (wards/picks), Mnemonic (password, name), Somatic (gesture, breath), Affective (emotion offered), Sacrificial (blood, time, memory).
- Rule of Two: Each important barrier recognizes two different key types; learning either grants +1 Effect to breach or parley with it.

Salvage, Haul, & Conversion

- Salvage Tags: Stable (safe to carry), Volatile (ticks Stress on jostle), Bound (linked to site), Loud (adds Heat when moved), Forbidden (attracts factions).
- Convert on Exit (choose one): trade haul for a Map that Grows upgrade, a Pass-Key Writ (one automatic door compliance), or Market Credit (reduce next sell-off complication).

4. Count: Beats, drips, or breaths – players may claim Counting Etiquette to shift Position safer once.
5. Declare Price or Key: Players state attitude + key type; on a hit, grant +1 Effect or a Safe Route token.

Plug-in SB Conversions (use with any dungeon)

- First 1 SB in a scene may become Heat +1 instead of a narrative wrinkle (signal without immediate harm).
- Any 2 SB can instead tick Structure Stress and foreshadow Cascading Failure rather than spawn foes.
- On 3+ SB, offer a bargain: pay with memory/gear/time to halve the consequence and add Price of Passage [3].

Bosses & Lairs (Classic Crawl Feel, Fate's Edge Framework)

Using Bosses Each boss runs on a Phase Clock and 2–3 Lair Actions. Tie them to the site's Dungeon Awareness (Heat) and Structure Stress; as either rises, promote boss position/effect. Boss defeats should yield a Diamond-tier boon keyed to the lair.

A floating nerve-knot studded with glass eyes; lenses irise like gills.

- Phase Clock: [8] Calibration → Overwatch → Lethal Focus → Blind Panic

- Lair Actions (Mirror Hall / Vault of Whispers):
 1. Prismatic Sweep: Split the party's positions (each PC steps one tier toward Controlled).

- Moves: Corrode (apply COMPROMISED to metal/wood), Engulf (split group; trapped PC marks Fatigue or gear loss), Clean Bones (remove tags from fallen).

- Lair Actions (Sunken Vestibule / Chained Sanctuary):
 1. Flood Gate Twitch: Water level rises a step; footing worsens.
 2. Sluice Pulse: Pushes all creatures one range band.
 3. Reagent Bloom: Vapors add –1 die to breathy actions this round.
- Counters: Grates, cold cinders, base powders; lures with iron filings or salted meat (draw off for a scene).
- Drop (Diamond): Forge of Quick Repair salvage or Ration of Sustenance (3).

Ledger Lich (archivist revenant)

A curator bound by indices; hands of ink, breath of dust.

- Phase Clock: [8] Citation → Injunction → Foreclosure → Redaction
- Moves: Name Forfeiture (steal a declared tag until bell), Writ of Seizure (lock a Diamond or gear under spectral seal), Errata (retroactively worsen one PC’s prior roll Outcome).
- Lair Actions (Vault of Whispers / Deep Archive):
 1. Quiet Hours: Casting/rites generate +1 SB or fail softly.
 2. Reference Only: Movement through stacks costs an action unless proper tokens are presented.
 3. Cross-reference Collapse: Bookshelves reconfigure; split the party.
- Counters: True names carved in quartz, burning a citation (sacrifice an index – a map, a ledger, a vow) to cancel one Move.
- Drop (Diamond): Key of Echoes, Tome of Convenient Knowledge.

Protocol Titan (stone sentinel)

A walking paragraph of law in granite; joints clock with tiny bells.

- Phase Clock: [6] Challenge → Adjudicate → Execute
- Moves: Ward Stomp (shockwave; prone or position –), Clause Capture (binds a PC to a declared rule), Countermeasure (reflect mundane force).
- Lair Actions (Measure Vault / Throne of Echoes):
 1. Bell of Standing: Only those who declare an intent may act this round.
 2. Weigh Deceit: The largest lie in the scene takes Harm 1 (Stress).
 3. Seal Turned: A door the party used closes and locks under new terms.
- Counters: Present certified measures, exploit contradictions, or swear a binding minor oath (shift boss Position –).
- Drop (Diamond): The Under-Seal Clause (local), Key-Writ.

Mimetic Colony (door-that-eats)

An ecosystem of impostor hinges, handles, chests, and carpets.

- Phase Clock: [6] Invitation → Adhesion → Ingestion

- Drop (Diamond): Cloak of Passage, Token of Safe Return.

Sluice Dragon (steam & acid wyrm)

A heat lung grown proud; scales are boiler plates, breath a flash-boil scream.

- Phase Clock: [10] Banked Heat → Pressure Rise → Vent Fury → Rupture
- Moves: Scalding Cone, Vacuum Lurch (pull PCs), Steam Blind (Position –).
- Lair Actions (Heat Lungs / Cistern):
 1. Valve Spin: Change terrain tags (Dry/Wet/Boiling).
 2. Gauge Pop: Structure Stress +1; cracks form.
 3. Pressure Shadow: The dragon gains +1 Effect for one exchange.
- Counters: Chill the room (dump cistern), bleed valves (two actions), or bait with metal ingots.
- Drop (Diamond): Forge of Quick Repair, Shield of Temporary Immunity.

Crawl Procedures (Quick, Crunchy Options)

- Short Rest (10 minutes): Clear Fatigue 1 or refresh one spent tool; advance Dungeon Awareness +1 and roll once on Ambient Signs (below).
- Secure Camp (1 hour, defensible): Clear Fatigue 2 and one Condition (not Harm); Structure Stress +1d2 from barricading/heat, Awareness +2 unless Sealed.
- Search a Room (5 minutes): On success, gain 1 Safe Route token or a Map that Grows tick; on miss, trigger a Door Attitude complication.
- Light, Air, Load: Track three pooled clocks [4] (see Plug-in Expedition Layer). Empty tracks worsen Position until refreshed.

Wandering Signs & Encounters (d12)

1. Whisper returns one word wrong; nearest door adopts a Hungry attitude.
2. Drip changes rhythm; nearby Gravity Well awakens.
3. Custodian chalk erased and redrawn behind you.
4. A stack exhales: Memory Fog for one exchange.
5. Pilfer-vermin court demands toll (crumbs, salt, or gossip).
6. Bound Guardian patrol, willing to debate terms (papers help).
7. Refugee child with a Key of Echoes that hates you.
8. Floor warms; Heat Lung cycling – steam hazard next room.
9. Echo sermon on "proper doors"; ignoring it adds Heat +1.
10. Sloshing in walls; Digestive Array scouts with a filament.
11. A mirror shows your gear two items lighter – choose which or mark Fatigue 1.
12. Stone hymn – sing along to cancel first SB this scene, or suffer Hungering Dark pulse.

Classic Traps, Living-Site Style (pick 1–2 tags)

- Pressure Mosaic (Artful, Loud): Floor pattern asks for a dance step; wrong beat drops spears from ceiling, not floor.
- Breath Tax (Subtle, Lingering): Room meters exhalations; excess vents sleeping gas; counting etiquette downgrades risk.
- Magi-Siphon Grate (Hungry, Magnetic): Drains charges from tools/wards; feeding it a Focus Crystal buys safe passage.
- Echo Latch (Riddle, Social): Door opens to a truth spoken softly; lies trigger Phantom Locks.

Treasure & Upgrade Hooks (d8 hoard seeds)

1. Cage of tame echoes – store a sentence for later; release as perfect mimicry.
2. Map that Grows (upgraded): shows organs (cistern/nerve-hall) when rubbed with tallow.
3. Wayfinder Compass attuned: hum a note to swap "nearest exit" with "nearest objective."
4. Key-ring of Attitudes: once each – Courteous, Hungry, Proud.
5. Bottle of stolen seasons: pour to set room to pollen-sweet or knife-cold for one scene.
6. Token of Safe Return (party-wide) that tugs twice when the Heart Pressure hits threshold.
7. A ledger page signed by the Dungeon's Creator – treat one barrier as if you are expected.
8. Lantern of Clarity mantle: once/session, reveals the Price of Passage without paying it.

Boss Build Template (one-minute prep)

1. Name & Nature: What organ of the dungeon is this boss the face of?
2. Phase Clock: 6/8/10 with 2–4 titled phases.
3. Three Moves: One space-control, one resource-tax, one identity/knowledge twist.
4. Two Lair Actions: Environmental toggles keyed to this lair.
5. Counters: A courtesy, a tool, a sacrifice. (Players should be able to learn these.)
6. Drop: A Diamond (from §46.1) or bespoke boon tied to the organ.

Dungeon Boss: The Heart Itself (set-piece)

A chamber of ribs and lintels; mortar smells like blood, light like fever.

- Phase Clock: [10] Palpate → Synchronize → Pacemaker → Arrest
- Moves: Syncopate (force actions to resolve off-beat; assist dice misfire), Tachycardia (Heat +2, Structure Stress +1), Backflow (reverse one clock tick on Floorplan Loops, but split the party).
- Lair Actions:
 1. Valve Close: Seal exits; require a "Somatic" or "Affective" key to reopen.
 2. Adrenal Surge: The Heart acts twice next round unless fed a secret all PCs share.
- Counters: Speak the dungeon's true purpose (as inferred via organs), vent a heat lung, or sacrifice mapped ground (tear up a Safe Route).
- Victory States: Stabilize (site becomes safer; Awareness clears to 0), Pacify (gain Dungeon's Blessing), or Slay (collapse risk; Structure Stress +2 across the level).

Patronage & Power

The true dungeon is not a place but a process – a slow alchemy that transforms intruders into something the structure can understand or consume. Every chamber is a test, every corridor a negotiation, and every inhabitant a symptom of the site’s deeper hungers. The wise explorer learns to read the dungeon’s moods in the way light falls, the way echoes return, and the way the very air seems to lean toward certain passages. Here, knowledge is not power but currency, and the smart adventurer knows when to pay with memory, when to pay with blood, and when to simply walk away.

For the GM: Dungeon authority is not hierarchical – it is ecological. The Custodians maintain, the Invaders exploit, the Organs react, and the Symbiotes adapt. Players gain leverage by understanding these relationships and offering what each faction lacks: memories for Custodians, safe passage for Invaders, sacrifice for Organs, curiosity for Symbiotes. Emphasise that the dungeon learns. Repeated tactics become less effective; kindness to one faction may anger another. The dungeon is not a monster – it is a neighbourhood.

Epilogue: The Ledger Closes

I closed the book. The ink was dry.

I had written the final entry months ago, in a damp counting-house on the Dhaharan coast, by candlelight. My hands did not shake—they were too good for that—but I set down my abacus very carefully. I had found something in the margins. A footnote I did not remember writing. A clause I did not remember adding. The ink was the same colour as my own blood. The handwriting was my own. The date was tomorrow.

I have learned to trust the things I do not remember. They are usually the truest things I know.

The hat—the one the Trow had given me, the one that was still warm—sat on the corner of the desk. I picked it up, turned it over in my hands, and for the first time in years, I could not think of a single angle. That should have frightened me. Instead, it felt like a door opening. Not the kind of door you walk through. The kind of door that walks through you.

The road was south. I did not know who would be waiting. I went anyway.

— The Edgewalker

“The road is a ledger. Every oasis is a credit, every broken wheel a debt. The Tulkani tie knots to remember who owes whom. The Fhara weigh water before they weigh silver. The Pereshi recite verses to keep the bridges open. And the Sidhi keep lighthouse lamps burning for the dead who still have not reached the shore.”

— Dusana of the Raven Road, at a caravanserai whose name she refused to give

Part IX

World Travel & Gateways

“Every Diamond you earn is a tooth knocked out of someone else’s jaw. Every Debt you incur? I already bought it from your victim for half what you’ll pay – and I’m collecting interest in your marrow before you finish reading this sentence. The road is not just a ledger. It’s a butcher’s block.” — The Edgewalker (as recorded by Dusana)

Chapter 47

Global Travel Procedures

47.1 Core Travel Procedure

For each leg of a journey, draw 3–4 cards using the decks for your destination and controlling authority.

- ♠ from the destination deck: sets the scene (place).
- ♥ from the destination deck: introduces the local actor or faction.
- ♣ from the Wilds (general hazards) or destination (if strongly policed): brings pressure.
- ♦ from the authority that gates the route: papers, escorts, rights, or exceptions.

Set a travel clock by the highest rank:

- 2–5 $\Rightarrow$ 4 segments
- 6–10 $\Rightarrow$ 6 segments
- J/Q/K $\Rightarrow$ 8 segments
- A $\Rightarrow$ 10 segments

On success, advance to the next leg; on failure, mark delay, debt, or diversion and resolve a consequence in the fiction.

47.2 Mode Rules

47.2.1 Sea Legs

(Amaranthine, Dolmis, Aberderrin, Gulf of Oshiira, Inland Sea). When crossing international waters, the controlling authority is either the origin port's navy or a neutral convoy league.

47.2.2 Mountain Passes & Underways

(Aeler, Himadri, Taharkan highlands). Any A may convert a surface route to an under-route. ♦ from Aeler always codifies outcomes — no roll — for sealed doors, breath time, and escorted segments.

47.2.3 Desert Legs

(Sahel, Red Desert, Fhara drylands). Water is the primary resource. A dry well hazard can end a journey.

47.2.4 River Legs

(Belworth, Ayokhan rivers, Oshiiran canals). Bridges, booms, and law in Vhasia/Viterra; reed-mazes and bell-lines in Mistlands; canal mothers and weigh-houses in Oshiira.

47.2.5 Steppe Legs

(Violet Steppe, Kuvani grazing lands). Remount stations and grazing compacts. The Ykrul and Kuvani both use story tolls.

47.2.6 Shadow Corridors

(Valewood, Ways Between, Thin Shore). Add a regional taboo: never count to nine, never speak the ninth name. A 9 in the seed triggers the Hollow's attention.

47.2.7 Universal Travel Hazards (d18)

When drawing a Club from the Wilds deck or from a region's own hazard table, you may roll on this expanded table for additional flavour. These hazards integrate elements from the Eastern Realms, Dhahara, and the Way of Silk expansions.

d18	Hazard
1	Bell-Line Failure (Mistlands) – A ward-bell cracks. Wraiths cross the levee. Test Spirit + Resolve (DV 4) or gain MARKED BY MIST (next spirit encounter starts Desperate).
2	Star-Road Phasing (Valewood) – An ancient Lethai road flickers. Navigation DV +2; on failure, emerge in a different hex (GM chooses).
3	Spirit-Dust Storm (Ashaan) – Red sand whispers. All actions Desperate for the scene. On any 1, a bound spirit breaks free (Cap 2).
4	Ninth Night (Tulkani Circle) – The Hollow walks. A Oath-Keeper demands a story, memory, or name. Refusal starts a Hollow Attention clock [4].
5	Well-Spirit Offended (Fhara) – A dry well flows bitter water. Spirit demands apology (dates or a true story). Failure poisons the party's water supply.

47.4 Edgewalker's Notes on Leverage

Every Diamond you earn in these generators isn't a reward—it's a weapon. Some open doors. Some silence witnesses. Some are debts I've already bought from your victims.

- Passage Tokens: Pass-stones, harbour charters, toll waivers. Use them early—they tend to “expire” when the issuer has an unfortunate accident.
- Seals & Stamps: Official marks that prove you belong. A forged seal works once. A real one works until someone audits it.
- Story Debts: Tulkani vow-cords, Lethai-ar witness cords, Ukwe leaves. Break them, and the Hollow visits.
- Spirit Objects: Storm-charms, tide-beads, nkisi shards. They attract attention. Attention means bids.

Never use a Diamond if you can trade it for three smaller ones. Always keep a ninth—a secret, a story, a knot tied in a victim's hair—for when the toll exceeds your conscience. (It always does.)

Colophon

This worldbook was assembled from the journals, ledgers, and bar tabs of one Aeler Edgewalker, paid for by the High King's Office of External Opportunities (budget line: "Unconventional Revenue Generation"). The generator tables were tested in the field—meaning I ran them at gunpoint in a Tulkani wagon circle while a Oath-Keeper counted my breaths. They work.

If you find yourself in a tavern and the Edgewalker buys you a drink, don't ask where they are now. The road is long, the ledgers are never balanced, and the ninth measure is always waiting.
